Here is an agency which handles construction subsidies for 33⅓ percent of the cost of a vessel. Here is an agency that handles operating subsidies. Here is an agency that handles insured mortgages upon the vessels, and it can hardly be considered as raking among old bones when one goes back to look into the operations of this Commission for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact that we cannot be too careful about the activities of this type of governmental agency. The long-range program that we authorized in 1936 will ultimately call for almost 500 vessels, to cost in the neighborhood of one and one-quarter billion dollars. Two hundred and three of those constitute the initial stage of the program, to cost $584,000,000, and that is still more than pocket change or pin money to me. They have about 160 specifically authorized and under way.

Mr. Speaker, I have been somewhat concerned about that activity. You can take any tub just now, put it in reasonable condition, and make money with it, because there are opportunities to transport commodities. There will come a time, however, when the present struggle in Europe comes to an end. Then foreign bottoms will be available to transport foreign goods to this country. I am wondering about the investment that we will have in hundreds of vessels on both coasts sponsored by the Maritime Commission under the act of 1936.

The reason I bring this up today is to revert for a moment to something that happened in the latter part of 1938. They had a line out on the Pacific coast known as the Dollar Line, operated by R. Stanley Dollar, and the Dollar Steamship Co. I am informed that a former Member of the Senate finally became the general manager for the line that was involved in reorganization. It was insolvent. It owed the Maritime Commission $13,000,000. Here is a report of the Commission. On pages 10 and 11 it is stated that the debt was $13,000,000 but was reduced by insurance money derived on account of the wreckage of the steamship Herbert Hoover. This reduced it to $7,500,000. An application came for an operating subsidy and for the maintenance of ship facilities on round-the-world cruises and to the Orient. The Maritime Commission had an opportunity to do business with a solvent company, but instead of doing so the Dollar Line was reorganized and became the United States President Line. They relieved Stanley Dollar and the Dollar Line of all responsibility as endorsers and comakers of the note which the Maritime Commission held. In addition to that they loaned the new line another $2,000,000 and got the R. F. C. to lend them $2,500,000 more. Today that reorganized line, known as the United States President Line, owes us, the taxpayers of the United States, about eleven and one-half million dollars.

This money is secured by mortgages, but mortgages on what? On 14 vessels. One of them, the President Coolidge, is 9 years old and the other 13 ships are 19 and 20 years old.

The only thing we have to show for that deal is a mortgage on a number of ships that are in need of repair plus 90 percent of the stock of the United States Line, which is a liability rather than an asset.

Mr. Speaker, this happened less than 2 years ago and I allude to it today because here is an agency that can give construction subsidies, that can give operating subsidies, that can broker ship mortgages which are guaranteed and on which they charge a premium. You and I and the rest of the taxpayers of the country will ultimately have one and one-quarter billion dollars in this enterprise if the original program is consummated and if we have anything more like this situation in connection with the Dollar Line and the newly reorganized United States President Line, then I suggest, in accord with my original premise, that having launched this law, known as the Maritime Act and the Maritime Commission, it is our bounden duty to continue to check up and see that no more things of that nature shall happen to the taxpayers' money.

Mr. EATON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON. The gentleman neglected to point out, however, that this President Line is insured in a very reliable firm.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I understand that insurance is $45,000,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to get in the RECORD what one of the members, Admiral Wiley, said about this deal. Let me read from his report:

> If the Maritime Commission should see fit to make those findings and pass the proposed resolution based thereon granting a 5-year operating differential to the Dollar Co. amounting to $15,000,000, then it will deserve the loss of confidence in the Commission by the people of the United States that I feel sure it will sustain. In my opinion, it will have betrayed its trust.

That is the opinion of a member of the Maritime Commission at the time that deal was put through. The memorandum of Commissioner Wiley, dated September 26, 1938, on this matter is highly illuminating. Finally, here is Edward Moran, a former Member of this House, a very good friend of most of the Members, also a member of the Commission, and he had this to say about that deal:

> The ultimate net result of this whole deal, particularly on account of the subordination of our mortgages, will be to bail out the creditors of the Dollar Co.

Finally he said:

> Therefore the real result of the proposed Dollar deal is, to my mind, so indefensible as to make a consummation of the whole proposal a dangerous and unwarranted assumption of liabilities.

Here were two members of the Maritime Commission speaking about that deal, and how amazing that it never secured so much as a paragraph in the newspapers at the time it was consummated. You see, Mr. Speaker, when once we place an agency into the translation of an activity like the maritime activities of the country, how essential it is to follow up on that tremendous responsibility if we are going to preserve the interests and the welfare of the taxpayers. Let me make it clear that I do not for a moment reflect upon the integrity of the Commission. I do say, however, that this Dollar Line deal does not reflect the best interests of the people.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Perhaps the silence of the newspapers on the subject is due to the fact they get much advertising out of that ship line.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They may not have known it, for all I know, but I feel I would be remiss in my duty if I did not call that matter to the attention of the House, even though it happened some time ago.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman no doubt realizes that the wealthy chairman of the board of this new President Line was appointed to that position shortly after his defeat for renomination to the United States Senate, that he is a Democratic national committeeman from California, and that his salary is said to be in his new position $25,000 per year.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That may have been persuasive so far as the whole deal is concerned, but I am particularly interested in the fact that this is public money with which the Maritime Commission is operating, and if anything more like this happens, then, of course, it would warrant some kind of a thorough scrutiny. [Applause.]

It would be illuminating to scan the official record, and to that end let me set forth in full from the report of the United States Maritime Commission to Congress for the period ending October 25, 1938, its own comment on this matter. It will be found on pages 10 and 11 of the report under the caption:

AMERICAN PRESIDENT LINES, LTD. (FORMERLY DOLLAR STEAMSHIP LINES, INC., LTD.)

> One of the most serious problems facing the Commission during the latter part of 1937 was the matter of reestablishing the important trans-Pacific and round-the-world services operated by the Dollar Steamship Line, Inc., Ltd. The company was indebted to the Commission in the sum of approximately $13,000,000, secured by preferred ship mortgages on the vessels in the fleet. This amount was later reduced to $7,500,000 by application of the insurance payments on the steamship President Hoover.
> Despite the constant endeavor of the Commission, which included sending members of the staff on several occasions to confer with officials of the company in San Francisco, no satisfactory solution had been reached by the end of the year. The then Chairman of the Commission, accompanied by the general counsel and other members of the staff, proceeded to the west coast in January 1938 and instigated extensive financial readjustments in the various companies controlled by the Dollar interests, in order that the line might qualify for a temporary operating differential subsidy agreement. The documents executed in connection with the financial readjustment of the Dollar Steamship Line, Inc., Ltd., were subsequently compiled and printed by the Commission under date of February 17, 1938.
> It was recognized at the time that the action taken would merely alleviate the more urgent difficulties of the company, without providing an adequate long-term solution. The financial condition of the line deteriorated during the period of the subsidy agreement so that by August 1938 most of its vessels were laid up and the company could no longer meet accruing obligations.
> In view of the virtual cessation of service by the only American-flag passenger line operating these highly essential trade routes, the Commission was faced with the alternative of permitting the company to slip into bankruptcy or arranging for the infusion of much-needed working capital and funds required to repair the company's vessels in accordance with standards of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation.

On August 15, 1938, an agreement for reorganization was approved whereby the Commission acquired about 90 percent of the outstanding common stock of the Dollar Line, in consideration for releasing R. Stanley Dollar and the Dollar Steamship Co. of California from their liabilities as endorsers or comakers on the ship-mortgage notes held by the Commission.

This adjustment plan was consummated in October 1938, and the Commission as majority stockholder obtained complete control in the selection of the management. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation advanced $2,500,000 for working capital and the Commission loaned an additional $2,000,000 restricted to vessel repairs which were necessary to protect the value of the property underlying the Government mortgages. These loans were secured by a joint blanket preferred ship mortgage covering the entire Dollar fleet of 13 vessels.

The operating subsidy contract dated October 6, 1938, extends for a period of 5 years. The routes to be served by the operator include one from California ports to Japan, China, Philippine Islands via the Hawaiian Islands, and a round-the-world service from New York via the Panama Canal, returning via the Mediterranean. With the exception of the steamship President Coolidge, which was built in 1931, the 13 combination passenger-cargo vessels which comprise the fleet were completed in 1920 and 1921. In the provisions for new construction the operator agrees to develop a replacement program satisfactory to the Commission beginning January 1, 1940.

Can anyone read that statement without concluding that the Dollar Line was insolvent, that it could not meet its obligations, and that all it had to offer was worthless stock and a fleet of deteriorated vessels? The very fact that the $2,000,000 loaned by the Commission was restricted to necessary repairs speaks eloquently on that point. The completion year set forth in that statement shows that the steamship President Coolidge was 9 years old and the remaining vessels were 19 and 20 years old.

Ninety percent of the stock gives the Maritime Commission control of the new line. We the people are therefore in the shipping business.

In view of the fact that a solvent going line had made application for an operating subsidy on the routes covered by the Dollar Line, I for one entertain doubt as to the wisdom of the Commission's course in making such an adjustment of the Dollar Line properties.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the section on the United States Maritime Commission, where the item that the House passed for $125,000,000 is raised to $164,000,000. This is in direct appropriations. The bill as it comes before us carries no specific authorization for additional contracts for the next year, but the hearings before the Senate committee developed the fact that the Maritime Commission believes it already has unlimited authority to contract and bring in its requests next time and say, "Here we are building these ships, and you have to appropriate the money that we need to carry out the contracts."

Let me give you specifically the testimony of Admiral Land on that subject as printed in the Senate hearings. On page 79 this question was asked by Senator ADAMS:

Do you mean to say we passed an act which gave you an unlimited-contract authorization?

Admiral LAND. I am no lawyer, but the way I read the act I think you did.

Let me read that again. The question was:

Do you mean to say we passed an act which gave you an unlimited-contract authorization?

The reply of Admiral Land was:

I am no lawyer, but the way I read the act I think you did.

Has Congress no control over the amount the Maritime Commission will spend in any given year? Can they put under contract whatever amount they desire and then come before the Appropriations Committee and say the Congress is bound to provide the cash? That was the argument put forward in the Senate hearings when they declared the $125,000,000 which the House appropriated for the next fiscal year was insufficient, "because we have $164,000,000 worth of ships under contract and we need $39,000,000 more." Now, I recognize that the bill last year did carry some contract authorizations, but the question and answer I have read was not limited to the contract authorizations in appropriation bills. They referred to the basic Merchant Marine Act.

I wish to call your attention to one or two other points in the testimony which set forth the same contention. The testimony of Admiral Land given on page 61 was as follows:

The suggestion made on the floor of the House that the Commission should be required to confine its contracts to the limits of its appropriations is, I believe, unsound.

Is it unsound that the Commission should be expected to limit its contract authorizations to the amount of money the Congress makes available for it? Is it unsound for Congress to place limits on what may be spent on shipbuilding in this day when we are selling the old ships and tying up others in their harbors?

That the belief the Commission has unlimited contract authority was not a chance, offhand opinion is indicated by the statement submitted by the Commission as a justification for asking for this additional $39,000,000. On page 84 of the Senate hearing, in a prepared summary statement, appears the following:

It is necessary to have both current funds and authority to contract. It has such authority under the Merchant Marine Act—

That is, the Commission contends it has the contractual authority—

but has preferred to act within the limitations heretofore contained in the Appropriations Act.

This means that if we had a limitation in here on the contract authority it would have preferred to stay within that, but it feels that under the law it has unlimited authority, and the Commission can come in on the next appropriation bill and say, "These are the ships under contract today, and you must appropriate the money to pay for them."

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Who is the person who stated what the gentleman has just quoted there?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Admiral Land, the head of the Commission. It is his testimony, given in response to some inquiries primarily by Senator ADAMS, of Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Does the admiral state what his authority is for such a remarkable conclusion?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. He believes it exists in the basic Merchant Marine Act.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. He says he is not a lawyer. Where does he get his opinion?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Apparently from the advisers of the Department.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Who are they?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I will suggest to the gentleman from Colorado that he read the testimony of Senator ADAMS, in which Senator ADAMS confesses that he was ashamed if that had been done. He said, "It is not complimentary to us." It seems to me this conference report should be voted down until some proviso can be put in the bill stating what contract authorizations will be used by the Maritime Commission for the next year. We cannot amend the conference report. The only way to do it is to vote down the conference report, and then the bill can be amended.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein quotations from Government reports and other publications.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to place in the appendix later a reply to many of the charges that have been made here today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly the attacks that have been made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

So far as the charges submitted by the gentleman from Illinois are concerned, I know that the matter of the line referred to was most carefully considered by the Maritime Commission, and while I do not recall the details now, I was advised of them, and there was nothing improper or irregular so far as those papers revealed or I could see. If the gentleman was in possession of any information to indicate that there was anything wrong or anything crooked or irregular, or anything that was not entirely in accordance with the law, the gentleman, or any other Member of this House, could have brought all suspicions to the attention of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, or he could have introduced a resolution for an investigation. As in every other situation of a like nature, the committee would have gone into it and given everybody an opportunity to be heard at a public hearing if desired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman deny that the data which I have submitted is documented in the Merchant Marine Committee or in the Maritime Commission's own report, and the minority views expressed by Commissioner Wiley and Commissioner Moran?

Mr. BLAND. I am not in position to make any admissions or denials until I have carefully examined the papers referred to in the light of the statement that the gentlemen has made here today. If there are statements in the record in exact accord with what has been stated here, I wish to consider them in the light of the deductions which the gentleman tries to draw. From my recollection of that transaction I should say that the conclusions of the gentleman are unjustified and unwarranted. I shall discuss the gentleman's cubisms subsequently in the appendix and give the gentleman the benefit of such information as I can secure.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman from Virginia feel that I would have the temerity to say to the House in quotation marks what was contained in the report of two Commissioners of the United States Maritime Commission unless that was the fact?

Mr. BLAND. I know that the gentleman would not make a statement knowing that he was telling an untruth, but I do know that sometimes in the conclusions we draw from statements, by culling out certain statements from the context, we may create an impression that is unwarranted even when the person making the statement believes his conclusion to be entirely warranted. I can assure the gentleman I make no charge against him personally, either as to his veracity, or his honesty, or his integrity. I have never assumed that position on the floor with respect to any Member of the House, and I have too high regard for the gentleman from Illinois, and for every Member of the House, to assume that position now. However, I may try to show in my reply that the gentleman was mistaken in his conclusions, if my recollection is correct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe the gentleman was.

Mr. BLAND. Well, possibly the gentleman is right about that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the appropriations, of course, there is general authority in the Merchant Marine Act for the appropriations necessary to carry out the purposes of the act. There is always authority of that kind in all legislative bills, or this Committee on Appropriations might be without authority to make the necessary appropriations. I believe the Senator from South Carolina, Senator BYRNES, in his statement on the Senate floor covered the situation very fully. As I recall, he stated that in addition to the general authorization which is contained in the Merchant Marine Act, and pursuant to that general authorization, there had been special authority granted by the Congress for commitments in the sum of approximately $100,000,000 more than existing commitments. I think this statement was made by Senator BYRNES when this bill was up for consideration. I shall also cover that in my subsequent memorandum.

I desire to call the attention of the House briefly to the fact that for the first time in a century we have an opportunity to restore the merchant marine upon the seas. Ships of our maritime competitors are being destroyed abroad, and at the conclusion of the war we shall be met with the serious problem of finding sufficient ships upon the seas of the world to carry our commerce. This is most essential. America now has the opportunity of a century, and I shall attempt in my extension of remarks to demonstrate that fact. In passing let me call attention to remarks by one of the speakers who said that the Maritime Commission had made commitments for 160 ships. The facts are that 141 vessels had been contracted for prior to January 1, 1940, and that up to April 1, 1940, 43 ships had been launched and 30 completed and delivered. Of the 141 ships that have been contracted for prior to January 1, 1940, 102 ships have already been disposed of through commitments by private operators to charter or purchase.

In my extension of remarks I am going to call your attention to the condition of the merchant marine as it was in 1935 and to the necessity there shown for the building of ships. The ships we had were old and uneconomical. What has been done since? The record of the Challenge will answer. The Challenge was the first of these new ships that went into service.

On November 6, 1939, the Challenge left for India. On October 11, nearly a month earlier, the Crown City left. The Crown City is a World War constructed vessel. She left on identically the same run as the Challenge. The Crown City made her run and entered New York Harbor at the completion of the voyage at 9:22 a. m., February 24, and a little more than 1 hour later the Challenge completed the identical voyage and was back in the harbor of New York. Both ships returned with capacity cargoes, the Crown City with approximately 6,000 tons, and the Challenge with approximately 7,000 tons. What does that mean? It means a saving in insurance rates, it means a possible reduction in the rates that otherwise might be imposed upon the shippers of the country. It means economical competition with foreign ships, or such as may be in existence at the end of this war. Again, with reference to that ship, let me call attention to the fact that the Challenge is 34 percent of higher efficiency in ton-miles, and yet she is 47.6 percent faster. There is a saving annually on this particular ship of $35,000 in the fuel of the ship, and over a period of 20 years that means a saving of a considerable part of the construction cost. Bear in mind that under the Merchant Marine Act, if a profit is made beyond a certain amount—10 percent, I believe—recapture may follow from earnings in excess of a certain percentage, so that economical ships furnish an opportunity to recoup moneys for the Treasury.

I hope that Members will read the situation as it will be outlined in my extension of remarks, and that if any gentleman has any complaint about the operation of the Maritime Commission he will bring his complaint to the attention of the committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. As chairman of that committee, I say that every complaint will be given consideration and a hearing. The gentlemen complaining will always have the opportunity to come before that committee in a public hearing, with a production of his evidence and an opportunity to the other side to present testimony to the end that the Congress and the people of the United States may always be kept fully informed and may be assured that there is no corruption. If any corruption exists your committee desires to expose it.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I wish to inquire about the matter quoted from the Senate hearings, concerning alleged unlimited contract authorizations.

Mr. BLAND. I said that in every authorization bill for the Navy or the Army, and I presume every other department, there is authorization for the expenditure of the moneys necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the bill. That is all of the unlimited authority that I know anything about. I think the gentleman's bills on similar subjects contain identically the same provisions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Pursuant to leave given me, I extend my remarks, as follows:

THE SHIPBUILDING PROGRAM FOR THE RECONSTRUCTION OF THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

A combination of world circumstances gives America a great opportunity to reestablish its merchant marine. The destruction of shipping in the war, the abnormal demand for ships to carry cargoes in that war, our national policy of avoiding entry into that war, and the practical business chance to construct vessels of tested design at pre-war prices at the very time that competing maritime nations are losing their tonnage, both old and new, gives the United States the opportunity of a century to take her proper place among the maritime nations when peace again settles on the world. For these reasons I am very anxious to have the Congress and the country understand fully the significance of the appropriation for the Maritime Commission now under consideration.

DEFICIENCY FOR FISCAL YEAR 1941 IS INEVITABLE

The Maritime Commission appropriation for the fiscal year 1941 approved by the Bureau of the Budget was $200,000,000. This was composed of $173,000,000 for ship construction and a net of $27,000,000 for all other purposes of the Commission, including operating-differential subsidies, maintenance of the reserve fleet, seamen's training, administrative expense, and provision for marine insurance liabilities.

The House cut $75,000,000 from this figure, reducing the appropriation to $125,000,000. Deducting the $27,000,000 necessary for all other purposes would leave $98,000,000 available for meeting payments in the fiscal year 1941 which the Commission is obligated to make under the contracts authorized by Congress, and which were estimated to total $137,000,000. The House cut left the Commission $39,000,000 short of enough to meet its obligations during the fiscal year 1941.

The Senate amendment restored $39,000,000 to the appropriation, making a total appropriation of $164,000,000. This would suffice for payments under existing construction contracts, but would make no provision for such further construction as the Commission might contract for under its present authority.

The conferees have rejected the $39,000,000, but added to the $125,000,000 allowed by the House the sum of $19,500,000—one-half of $39,000,000—thus fixing the appropriation for 1941 at $144,500,000 instead of the Budget item of $200,000,000.

Based on contracts for ship construction—141 vessels—entered into prior to January 1, 1940, on which payments must be made in the fiscal year 1941, it was originally estimated that these disbursements would be $137,000,000 net for ship construction.

There has been a slowing up in progress payments on a few of the existing contracts during the current fiscal year, with the result that it is now estimated that about $15,000,000 of the estimated required payments for the fiscal year 1940 will not be paid until the fiscal year 1941. This situation arises because certain small shipyards—where considerable preparatory plant work was required—will not submit vouchers for progress payments during the fiscal year 1940 to the extent originally planned. There were other causes. This delay or lag, as it is known with the accountants, is thus carried over into the fiscal year 1941 and becomes a burden on that fiscal year to the extent of the lag over and above the requirements otherwise anticipated for that fiscal year.

The requirements for 1941, estimated to be $137,000,000, are thus increased by the estimated lag of $15,000,000, making a total of $152,000,000. This amount is further increased by the sum of $2,275,000, payments on features for national defense on six tankers contracted for since January 1, 1940. This would bring the requirements for the fiscal year 1941 to $154,275,000. These requirements, however, are reduced to some extent because of transfers of construction projects from title VII to title V, and as a result it is now estimated that the progress-payment requirements for the fiscal year 1941 on contracts entered into before January 1, 1940—including the 1940 carry-over of $15,000,000—will be approximately $150,275,000; that is, $148,000,000 plus $2,275,000, national-defense feature payments on the six tankers.

To the sum of $27,000,000, set up in the Budget estimate for other purposes than ship construction, there has been added an additional item of $1,500,000 for a sister training ship for the Maritime Service, making a total of $28,500,000. Otherwise the 1941 requirements for these purposes are unchanged.

The above item of $150,275,000, estimated net requirements for the fiscal year 1941 for existing ship-construction contracts plus the national-defense feature payments on the six tankers, when added to the item of $28,500,000, estimate for other purposes than ship construction, aggregates $178,775,000.

To ascertain the amount of the anticipated deficit at the end of the fiscal year 1941, we must deduct the appropriation of $144,500,000 from the above aggregate item of $178,775,000, leaving $34,275,000.

It appears further that at the end of the fiscal year 1940 there will be an unobligated balance in the construction fund of about $10,500,000 resulting from the lag in payments and also from some increase in receipts due to the recent sales of vessels, both old vessels and new construction, which, in the past few weeks, has been transferred from title VII to title V. This sum deducted from the above item of $34,275,000 leaves an estimated deficiency of $23,775,000.

Let me remind you again that this estimate does not take into consideration any further construction contracts. I understand that the Commission has a balance—as of the beginning of this year—of uncommitted contract authorizations for ship construction in the sum of $100,000,000, after reserving $10,000,000 for changes and extras in existing contracts. This will be covered more fully in a later extension which will go into details.

If the Commission were to enter into contracts for the building of ships to the extent of the $100,000,000 balance—including the six tankers—of the contract authorization referred to, it is estimated tentatively that progress-payment requirements for the fiscal year 1941 would be $26,725,000. This sum, added to the estimated deficiency of $23,775,000, mentioned above, indicates a total deficiency for the fiscal year 1941 of approximately $50,500,000.

The situation which will exist at the end of the fiscal year 1941 is further shown by a letter from Admiral Land, Chairman of the Commission, to me, dated March 26, 1940, which is as follows:

A letter reading as follows has been addressed by me today to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget relating to the status of the Maritime Commission's funds and appropriations:

"For your information, I desire to apprize you of the results of a review of the status of the United States Maritime Commission's available funds for the year 1941 in the light of present information, including specifically developments since the first of the calendar year, and with the understanding that the House and Senate conferees have fixed our 1941 appropriation at about $145,000,000.

"Assuming the above appropriation, and on the basis of payments which will be required under existing shipbuilding contracts (i. e., vessels contracted for prior to January 1, 1940, plus the national-defense features of six tankers subsequently contracted for), the present indication is that it will be necessary to request from the Congress at the beginning of the new session a deficiency appropriation for the fiscal year 1941 in the amount of approximately $23,000,000. This amount may be increased by reason of such additional construction as may be undertaken within the limit of the Commission's present authority to contract.

"This estimate of a 1941 deficiency is necessarily tentative, as conditions are constantly changing and there are factors which may either increase or decrease the Commission's net requirements.

"With respect to the current fiscal year, present estimates which take account of recent ship sales, etc., indicate that no deficiency appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1940, will be required."

WORK MUST GO ON

It is inconceivable that, in the light of world conditions, any delay in the building program will be permitted now.

There has never been at any time in the past as great a need and as great an opportunity for a modern, up-to-date, fully equipped, economical merchant marine as at present. Any retardation of the present long-range construction program will be interpreted as an indication of an intent to abandon our efforts to place America again upon the seas, will encourage our foreign competitors to exert extraordinary efforts to retain their trade, and will discourage our American operators and their connections. One of the greatest obstacles confronting our merchant marine in the past has been a doubt of the continuity of our policy and our intention to carry through. We do not want to return to those conditions portrayed so graphically in the Economic Survey of the American Merchant Marine, transmitted to Congress on November 10, 1937, by Joseph P. Kennedy, then Chairman of the Maritime Commission. I quote:

The policy of the United States with regard to foreign-going vessels has been vague and inconsistent. As a result our shipping has been, since the decline of the clippers, an extremely unstable industry. The history of the American merchant marine for the past three-quarters of a century has been characterized by a vacillating attitude on the part of our people. We would go along for years content to entrust the carriage of our goods to foreign vessels. Then, for some reason or other, we would suddenly become conscious of the potentialities of sea power and embark on a hastily planned and perhaps frenzied effort to establish a position at sea. In a few years public interest would die down, our vessels would be abandoned to the ravages of competition with low cost foreign operators, and the American flag would disappear from the principal trade routes. The merchant marine has been a perplexing problem of national policy ever since the Civil War.

We cannot afford to halt now. The great objective of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, was the establishment of a carefully designed, long-range program which would build up a merchant marine in an orderly and expeditious manner. It was desired to avoid what has been characterized as "a hastily planned and perhaps frenzied effort to establish a position at sea."

It should be kept ever in mind that the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, by which the Maritime Commission was created, imposed upon the Commission the duty of carrying out a clear, comprehensive, and far-reaching general policy which should embody the intention of the Congress to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of an adequate, modern, and efficient merchant marine. As was well pointed out by the Maritime Commission through its first Chairman, Hon. Joseph P. Kennedy, the vicissitudes through which American shipping has passed since the days when steam superseded sail, and which have left American foreign commerce from time to time at the mercy of foreign shipping interests, have been due in large measure to the lack of a factual policy consistently followed.

THE OPPORTUNITY OF A CENTURY IS PRESENTED TO US

Rather than retardation, there should be acceleration of the program. Economies can be secured by duplication at pre-war prices of previously contracted for construction before any real increase in prices almost certain to arise under present war conditions. Furthermore, acceleration of the program will permit present available shipways not now required for naval construction to be put in use before the exigencies of war should cause foreign powers to occupy them, to the detriment of our own construction program, with the resulting inflation. If these opportunities are not grasped now, contracts later may be at much higher prices than at present, and our ship operators, shipowners, and shippers placed at a material disadvantage, with higher freight rates as the necessary result.

We have now opportunities for building up a merchant marine and developing foreign commerce such as this country has not seen for the past 75 years. The principal maritime nations are engaged in a death struggle. Others are so engaged that the carriage by sea must come to us if we have intelligence and ingenuity enough to seize it. It is inconceivable that the Congress should permit this opportunity for the restoration of our commerce and the rehabilitation of our merchant marine to pass. If the American people will visualize what the program means to this Nation, the slightest cessation or curtailment would not be permitted under present conditions.

I cannot stress too strongly the peril which we face if we relax now our efforts to build a merchant marine or if we abandon the long-range program which we have adopted and which calls for 50 ships a year for 10 years. A most fortunate combination of conditions—an efficient successful building program under way at home and a great demand for shipping the world over—presents us with the opportunity of the century. For nearly 22 years I have been studying our merchant-marine problems, and I am confident that if we fail now in our effort to restore our flag to the seas with such an opportunity before us, our loss may well be irreparable. Let us not slow down building now, with such an opportunity, and with pre-war prices prevailing here. Shipbuilding prices in this country may skyrocket as they did in the World War. In that case good business judgment on our part will require a reconsideration of our policy, and may impel a slowing down of the program. But it is certainly not good policy to slow down now in the face of a rising market and at a time when contracts at approximately the pre-war levels still may be made with domestic shipbuilders and when vessels are being placed in service as soon as they can be completed.

OUR MERCHANT MARINE POLICY SINCE THE WORLD WAR, 1914–18

Twenty years ago, in the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, the Congress, with the memories of the tragic period between 1914 and 1920 before it, declared:

That it is necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best-equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine and, insofar as may not be inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, the United States Shipping Board shall, in the dispcsition of vessels and shipping property as hereinafter provided, in the making of rules and regulations, and in the administration of the shipping laws keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be obtained.

When the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, was written into the law the first section read as follows:

SEC. 1. The policy and the primary purpose declared in section 1 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 861), are hereby confirmed.

Again, when the Congress enacted the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, it renewed its declaration of policy in substantially the same words used in 1920. The declaration in 1936 reads as follows:

TITLE I. DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 101. It is necessary for the national defense and development of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine (a) sufficient to carry its domestic water-borne commerce and a substantial portion of the water-borne export and import foreign commerce of the United States and to provide shipping service on all routes essential for maintaining the flow of such domestic and foreign water-borne commerce at all times, (b) capable of serving as a naval and military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, (c) owned and operated under the United States flag by citizens of the United States insofar as may be practicable, and (d) composed of the best-equipped, safest, and most suitable types of vessels, constructed in the United States and manned with a trained and efficient citizen personnel. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine.

THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE IN 1935

Obedient to the mandate of Congress and in direct response to the declaration of policy in the act of 1936, the Maritime Commission has been proceeding along orderly lines. The condition which confronted them is shown in the House Report No. 1277, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, on the merchant-marine bill, dated June 20, 1935. Lest we forget, let us turn to that report:

COMBINATION PASSENGER AND CARGO VESSELS

A break-down by types shows 183 vessels of 1,521,000 tons of the combination passenger and cargo class. Of this total, 67 percent are over 10 years old, 26 percent are from 11 to 15 years old, and over 12 percent are from 16 to 20 years old. Twenty-eight percent are over 20 years old.

Six of these combination passenger and cargo vessels, aggregating 102,093 tons, are Government owned, and all are over 20 years old; 129 of 1,142,000 tons are privately owned and operated in the foreign trade, two-thirds being over 10 years old. Nearly 30 percent are 11 to 15 years old; 24 percent are over 20 years old; 48 of 277,000 tons are privately owned and operated in the domestic trade; and of these, 67 percent are over 10 years old and over 46 percent are over 20 years old.

CARGO VESSELS

One thousand and four vessels of 4,955,000 tons are of the cargo class, nearly 99 percent of which are over 10 years old. Of this class, 588 vessels of 2,869,000 tons, or 58 percent of the total, are between 16 and 20 years old.

Four hundred and thirty-two vessels of 1,850,000 tons are privately owned and operated in the domestic trade. Nearly 99 percent of these are over 10 years old, 32 percent are 11 to 15 years old, 52 percent are 16 to 20 years old, and 15 percent are over 20 years old.

Two hundred and ninety-six vessels of 1,550,000 tons of the cargo class are privately owned and operated in the foreign trade, of which 98 percent are more than 10 years old, over 44 percent are 11 to 15 years old, and 52 percent are 16 to 20 years old.

TANKERS

Three hundred and forty-three vessels of 2,390,000 tons are tankers, nearly 90 percent of which are more than 10 years old. Over one-half of the tonnage is from 11 to 15 years old and 32 percent are from 16 to 20 years old.

Again, in the same House report, submitted nearly 5 years ago, we read:

The evidence shows that during the period from 1922 to 1928 no vessels were built in American yards for overseas foreign service, and under the 1928 act, 31 new vessels were built for ocean-mail service and 42 reconditioned. In the last 5 years, in the construction of freighters, this country has built 4 while Great Britain was building 295, and for the 5 years previous, when we were constructing 4 in American shipyards, Great Britain built 558.

During the post-war period from 1922 to 1933 about sixteen and one-half million tons of ocean-going ships of 2,000 gross tons and upward were constructed throughout the world, of which the United States contributed less than 7 percent.

* * * * * * *

The gravity of the situation becames obvious when we consider that the useful life of a ship is 20 years. Our merchant marine today operating in the foreign trade of slightly less than 3,000,000 tons includes 224 vessels of 1,400,000 tons which were purchased from the United States Government. There is a high percentage of old and obsolete vessels in the number. Of the 3,000,000 tons, there are about 1,900,000 tons having contracts for carrying mail; in other words, that are subsidized. At the end of 7 years, 86 percent in number and 77 percent in tonnage of the vessels now operating on ocean-mail routes will have become 20 years old.

Obviously, something must be done quickly, or our flag will disappear from the seas. We shall be reduced to our pre-war position when we had 81 vessels of less than 500,000 tons operating on our regular services at which time we carried less than 10 percent of our commerce in American ships.

The condition, as reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in 1935, was confirmed in the economic survey of the American merchant marine transmitted to Congress by Chairman Kennedy on November 10, 1937. In the preparation of that survey, the most celebrated authorities in the field of shipping were used. Among them were Dr. Grover G. Huebner, professor of commerce and transportation at the Wharton School of Finance; Dr. Thomas H. Healy, dean of the school of foreign service, Georgetown University; Herbert L. Seward, professor of mechanical and marine engineering, Yale University; Dr. Elmo P. Hohman, associate professor of economics, Northwestern University; Dr. Theodore J. Kreps, associate professor of business economics at Stanford University; Grover Loening, noted aeronautical designer and manufacturer; Dr. M. Ogden Phillips, school of commerce and administration, Washington and Lee University; Capt. Felix Riesenberg, an authority on the training of seamen; Rear Admiral W. P. Robert (C. C.) United States Navy, retired, formerly general inspector of the Bureau of Construction and Repair; Col. James M. S. Waring, industrial analyst of New York; and James Reed, of San Francisco, a former naval constructor and shipbuilder. Each of these men is an authority in some field of shipping.

THE PROBLEM OF REPLACEMENTS

In the introduction to the economic survey of the American merchant marine it was said:

Those working on the survey were instructed to take nothing for granted, not even the desirability of having a merchant marine under the American flag.

The care exercised in the preparation of this survey entitled it to unusual credit. Care was given the need for a replacement program, and on this point the Commission in the survey said:

The outstanding weakness of our merchant marine is its high degree of obsolescence. This is true not only of the total seagoing fleet but of the various subdivisions. As of May 31, 1937, there were 1,422 ocean-going vessels (of 2,000 gross tons and over), aggregating 8,407,000 gross tons, registered under the American flag. Of this fleet a total of 1,305 vessels, of 7,402,000 gross tons (91.8 percent of the number and 88 percent of the tonnage), will be 20 years old or more by 1942. More than 400 vessels aggregating nearly 2,500,000 gross tons (about 30 percent of both number and tonnage of the entire fleet), are already 20 or more years old.

Remember that the date of the survey was 1937. The report continued:

The degree of obsolescence prevailing in the various trades and types of vessels (as of May 31, 1937) is shown in the following table. The year 1942 is used in computing obsolescence because all of the war-built vessels will have become 20 years old by that time; 5 years, moreover, is considered the time that will be required to replace any considerable part of the present fleet.

Fleet	Number of vessels	Gross tons	Percentage of fleet that will become 20 or more years old by 1942
			Vessels	Tons
Domestic trade	479	2,119,000	94.7	92.3
Government-owned, inactive	188	1,130,000	100.0	100.0
Tanker	299	2,060,000	87.2	84.0
Foreign trade:
Privately owned	302	1,886,000	86.8	81.2
Government owned	37	207,000	100.0	100.0

To replace by 1942 all ships now approaching obsolescence would, as we have seen, require the construction of 1,305 vessels, of 7,420 gross tons, or an average of 261 vessels of about 1,500,000 tons per year. This staggering program would cost in the neighborhood of $2,500,000,000. Moreover, shipyard facilities, as we have seen, are obviously inadequate for a building program of this magnitude.

Of course, all of the vessels which will obsolesce by 1942 need not be replaced by that time. While ships are commonly depreciated on a 20-year basis, few of them, in actual practice, are withdrawn at the end of that period. On the other hand, the majority of American vessels in foreign trade were built during the war period on the basis of pre-war designs, so that they are already obsolescent. Excessive repair and operating costs are a drain alike upon the companies and upon the Federal Treasury.

Our weak position among the six principal maritime nations is illustrated in the table below, which shows that we rank fourth in tonnage, fifth in ships having speeds of 12 knots and over, and sixth in vessels of 10 years age and under. In competitive power, therefore, we stand near the foot of the list.

[In thousands of tons]

Amount of tonnage		Vessels with speeds of 12 knots and over		Vessels 10 years of age or less
Country	Tons	Country	Tons	Country	Tons
Great Britain	13,100	Great Britain	8,278	Great Britain	4,689
Japan	3,059	Germany	2,015	Germany	1,020
Germany	2,813	Japan	1,614	Japan	774
United States	2,529	France	1,521	France	528
Italy	2,283	United States	1,363	Italy	418
France	2,177	Italy	1,242	United States	416

THE PROGRESS OF THE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM UNDER THE 1936 ACT

To remedy this deplorable situation and to carry forward the work on an economical basis, a long-range replacement program was worked out for the construction of 50 ships a year for 10 years. The question is, Shall we abandon that program now? The existence of a deficiency threatens that program, as nothing else could.

What is our present situation?

It is important to know how we have progressed with the replacement program. The hearings on the independent office appropriation bill for 1941 before the House and the Senate committees give the information in detail.

Admiral Land, Chairman of the Commission, appearing before the House committee, showed that to the date of his testimony—Tuesday, December 5, 1939—orders had been placed for the construction of 141 vessels, some of which were being built in conjunction with private operators, and others for the Commission's own account, the latter being built for sale or charter to private operators. Almost all of the ships fall into four categories—the C–1 cargo ship of about 7,500 dead-weight tons, the C–2 of 9,500, the C–3 of about 11,700, and the national-defense tankers of about 16,700 tons. It was shown that 29 of the 141 had been launched, and of that number 19 had been completed and placed in operation. Up to the 1st of April 1940, 43 vessels have been launched, and 30 of these have been completed and delivered. Of the 141 vessels contracted for prior to January 1, 1940, 102 have already been disposed of through commitments by private operators to charter or purchase.

The program had been somewhat accelerated for perfectly sound reasons. To do otherwise would have been economic folly. Admiral Land said:

> When the European conflict began it was apparent that there would be a rapid and considerable increase in the prices of materials, machinery, and other products going into new ships. After careful examination of the market and other factors pertinent to the war's effect upon the United States, it was deemed expedient to take immediate steps to utilize existing construction facilities while favorable prices still prevailed.
> The acceleration involved award of contracts this fall which normally would have been awarded next year. The plan was discussed with the President by the Chairman of the Commission, and on September 7 the President advised the Chairman that he also approved it.

The Commission succeeded, largely, because of the economies of duplicating current construction, and by reason of its prompt action in making this accelerated program effective in the face of a rapidly rising market without increase in the unit costs per vessel.

In determining its program of ship construction for the period covered by the estimates submitted for the fiscal year 1941, the Commission had in mind the uncertainties resulting from European conditions, and, having in view the length of time required for the building of vessels contemplated, considered that on the basis of any reasonable assumption as to the probable length of the war its program should not be interrupted.

The failure of the Congress to increase authorizations does threaten that program. Ships take time in building. The time for construction varies with conditions and the average is over a period of many months. If the program is not kept up, we face again the chaotic conditions of the past, in case of a sudden national emergency with immediate demand for tonnage regardless of suitability and cost. Against this the Commission has planned. Appearing before the committee, Admiral Land said:

> Our program has been most carefully designed to the end that there will be no repetition of this chaotic condition in which we found ourselves in respect to a merchant fleet following the last war. We were left then with a great number of slow, though new, vessels, inefficient in design and consequently expensive to operate.

THE NEW SHIPS ARE A GREAT SUCCESS

The trials on the new ships have demonstrated that the C–2 cargo type is probably the most efficient of its class in the world. The steamship Challenge was the first steam-propelled vessel of this design to enter service. She established what is believed to be a new world record for economy in fuel consumption. In his testimony, Chairman Land said:

> Comparing her performance with that of a ship constructed during or immediately after the last war, we find that the Challenge, with 50 percent more speed, consumes fuel at less than half the rate of the old ship. Put it another way: The Hog Island vessel made 10,600 ton-miles per barrel of fuel at 10½ knots, while our C–2 ships make 15,450 ton-miles per barrel of fuel at 15½ knots. The C–2 ship has 34 percent higher efficiency in ton-miles and yet she is 47.6 percent faster.
> Translated into dollars this means an average annual saving of approximately $35,000 per ship per year. And if you will bear with me for one more figure, I would like to say that over a period of 20 years, or what is called the economic life of a ship, this means a saving of between 35 and 40 percent of the entire construction cost of the vessel. We feel that the United States today has the best facilities, engineering ability, and what we call "know how" for shipbuilding of any nation in the world.

ABNORMAL PRICES FOR OBSOLETE VESSELS AID REPLACEMENT

One marked effect of the war abroad has been to increase the demand and the market for old tonnage. Nations faced with great losses of tonnage are buying old ships wherever they can be found. The United States should be ready with new ships when the war ceases and normal competition returns. Our operators can well dispose of the old vessels now at good prices and put the proceeds into new tonnage. This new tonnage will be able to meet the competition of the world. When first the increased selling of ships to foreigners was brought to the public attention there was a great hullabaloo about it. Now we know that it is just good sense to sell them. Our American operators are in effect trading them in on new and efficient tonnage now being built under the Commission program.

I have previously given you the figures as to these transfers up to November 30, 1939. You will find them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for January 17, 1940, at pages 648 and 649. The conditions laid down by the Commission before approving these transfers foreign are also shown in those remarks.

Since October 26, 1939, up to the end of March 1940, 128 vessels have been transferred to foreign registry—and one 18-ton vessel sold foreign without transfer of registry. Of these vessels, 82 are commercial vessels over 1,000 gross tons—cargo, combination cargo, passenger—with an average age of over 21 years; 16 are commercial vessels under 1,000 gross tons, including fishing vessels, motorboats, and so forth, averaging approximately 21 years in age. The remaining 31 include yachts or other pleasure vessels, tugs, and barges, and a few sailing vessels. All of them except the pleasure vessels run well over 20 years in age.

FUTURE OF THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

We can at this time look forward with more confidence in our merchant fleet than for many years in the past. The United States is pursuing the arts of peace while others are engaged in the destruction that is war.

Among the arts of peace none is older in this country than the building of merchant ships. Today, for the first time in many years, we are, as I have explained, engaged in a shipbuilding program calculated to restore our fleet to the supremacy it once enjoyed upon the oceans of the world. With the vessels now under construction and, indeed, those already completed, we are bound to gain preference from shippers through the fast and excellent service offered, and it can be asserted that these services will be unequaled by our foreign competitors. It was well said:

> It takes time to build a merchant ship, and upon the conclusion of the war tonnage which has been sent to the bottom will have to be replaced. It will be several years before the material effects of that destruction will be liquidated.
> The United States, equipped with a fine fleet of new merchant vessels, will be able to assume a more effective competitive position in foreign trade than it has held for many years in markets formerly dominated by European traders.

The success of the present construction program which is being carried out by the Maritime Commission is no mere paper success. I have mentioned earlier what these ships have done on their official trials. But even more practical, and indeed more impressive, are the results being shown by these vessels in actual commercial operation.

For example, the steamship Challenge, which I mentioned earlier, one of the new C–2 type cargo vessels named for a famous clipper ship, left New York November 6, 1939, bound for India. She had been preceded on that run by a merchant vessel, the steamship Crown City, which was built under the World War construction program. The Crown City left New York on the identical run October 11th, nearly a full month ahead of the Challenge. The Crown City entered New York harbor at the completion of this voyage at 9:22 a. m., February 24. A little more than 1 hour later the Challenge completed her voyage. Both ships returned with capacity cargoes—the Crown City with about 6,000 tons and the Challenge approximately 7,000 tons. This is a most impressive illustration and one which gives positive assurance of the great strides made in marine engineering since the last war.

I am not going to discuss at this time the details of the employment values, both at sea and ashore, of the maritime industry in general and the construction program in particular. I hope to be able at an early date to discuss these details and to consider the importance of this program to the national defense and to the foreign trade of our country.

In passing, however, it might be said that continuance of this program means employment for tens of thousands of men in shipyards, and in mines, mills, and factories producing materials entering into the construction of a ship—materials which are drawn from every State in the Union, and consequently every State in the Union has a stake in this program.

As Members here know, a merchant fleet is literally the life line of our Navy. Without an adequate, fast, and efficient merchant auxiliary the Navy is tied to its land bases.

Furthermore, such a fleet is vital to the importing and exporting activities of our national economy, in peacetime as well as in war. The matter of providing transportation of strategic raw materials alone is a phase of this program which must not be overlooked, particularly in times like these.

I wish to present in a summary the relationship between the appropriation you are now considering and the opportunity which our merchant marine is facing.

We have developed an entirely sound building program. It has been worked out carefully, deliberately and with an eye to present and future needs. It already has met numerous tests under comparatively stable conditions for the past 3 years. The ship designs have exceeded expectations. We are building today—and you will find competent engineering opinion bearing me out—the best merchant ships in the world—experienced marine engineers say better than anything conceived of by our most experienced competitors. The long-range program laid out on paper is now being fabricated in steel. In the deadly warfare abroad a million and a half tons of shipping belonging to our principal maritime competitors have been sent to the bottom. Losses will continue.

Meantime we are building a new and modern merchant fleet. We must continue launching these superior vessels. Those of us who are familiar with the qualities of these new additions and replacements in our antiquated fleet are proud of the engineering skill and shipbuilding ability that have gone into their creation.

The chairman and members of the Maritime Commission deserve great credit for their skill, judgment, and integrity in carrying the long-range program into effect.

With success at our door, let us not be indifferent to its presence. Let us continue this program, not in the wasteful manner of the World War period, but under the existing policy which Congress itself insisted upon of providing an orderly and systematic construction program.

Pre-war prices in domestic yards generally prevail. Contracts should be placed now before any sharp increase in prices which the war will almost certainly bring about before many months. The moderate increase in costs is offset by the existence of tested plans and the advantage of the engineering and construction experience of ships already completed. Thus vessels can now be duplicated at substantially pre-war prices. This situation will not continue indefinitely. Shipyards are available on all coasts of the United States as the result of the instigation of the present program. They have demonstrated their ability to build successfully and economically on the basis of American prices predicated upon the American standard of living. There is a need for the ships as fast as they come from the ways. There is an opportunity unequaled for many years for our new merchant marine. It will be ready to return to those important trade routes now proscribed when the war ends and much of the world's tonnage has been destroyed.

We shall be able to provide the kind of service American shippers demand. If we continue this program we shall be ready to take advantage of every opening as it occurs and promote the business as we did in the days of the noble clippers.

I have examined in great detail the activities of the Maritime Commission in connection with the construction program. I am convinced, as I believe all of you would be convinced were you likewise to make such an inquiry, that there is no need to fear frantic and wasteful building. The Commission has consistently, it seems to me, exercised sound business judgment, and for that reason I feel that we here in the legislative chambers should not act hastily in curtailment of their program without due consideration of all the facts which I have tried to give you today.

The Senate in adding $39,000,000 to the House figure of $125,000,000 for 1941 did so to avoid a deficiency to cover the existing contract commitments. Not only that, but the Senate recognized that the Commission had contract authorizations under which it could execute contracts for further construction this coming year.

The conference figure, which adds only one-half of $39,000,000, does not enable the Commission to fulfill its commitments in 1941. There will have to be a deficiency appropriation. This is unfortunate. It creates doubt in the minds of those who have contracted to build ships for the Commission. Our competitors will see us hesitate and take advantage of our hesitation. I do not believe that this result is in the mind of the Congress. Many of them honestly believe that the Commission and some of the Members of Congress, have been overenthusiastic about the program and about the opportunity. This is a mistake. I believe the Congress, realizing the facts that I have just put before it, wants the program continued in full. I realize that for reasons of budgetary policy the Congress may desire not to appropriate the necessary funds until later in a deficiency appropriation. I believe that Congress will meet the commitments under existing contracts promptly and fully. I believe that it will expect and approve continuance of the program.

When the Senate voted to increase the appropriation by $39,000,000 to cover existing commitments it also recognized that the Commission had contract authorizations under which it could execute contracts for more ships during the coming year. As Senator BYRNES said on the Senate floor—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 8, 1940, page 1211:

> Under the authority that now exists the Commission can proceed a little slower than they may have desired, but with sufficient speed to justify the continuance of the program.

I believe that the Congress and the country want the program continued, that we may take advantage of the opportunity confronting us. Let us not hesitate. Instead, let us grasp the opportunity firmly and freely, to the end that the United States may have a merchant fleet which in quality and performance shall be second to none.

Mr. WOODRUM of VIRGINIA. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: Page 1, after line 7, insert:

"NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD

"Salaries and expenses: For all necessary administrative expenses of the National Resources Planning Board, to perform the functions transferred to said board on July 1, 1939, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere in accordance with civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; contract stenographic reporting services; purchase of books of reference, and periodicals; expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with development, conservation, and use of the resources of the Nation; traveling expenses; purchase of office equipment and supplies, and temporary employment of persons, $710,000, of which not to exceed $40,000 shall be available for printing and binding: Provided, that no part of the funds appropriated under this item shall be used for the performance of any functions or duties other than the functions heretofore authorized by law to be performed by the Federal Employment Stabilization Board."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments numbered 1 and 2 may be considered together.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the second amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 2: Line 3, page 5, strike out "$1,334,850" and insert, "$2,044,850."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in amendments Nos. 1 and 2, and yield myself 7 minutes.

The Bureau of the Budget sent to the Committee on Appropriations an item for the National Resources Planning Board, which had been set up by an Executive order. Because of the fact that this activity was not authorized by law, it was not reported to the House. When the bill reached the Senate, an item was reinserted in the Senate by Senate amendment numbered 1, appropriating $710,000 for this activity, with the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated under this item shall be used for the performance of any functions or duties other than the functions heretofore authorized by law to be performed by the Federal Employment Stabilization Board.

The Federal Employment Stabilization Board was set up by an act in 1931, approved February 16 (46 Stat., p. 1084), under the administration of President Hoover. It was reported to the House by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, at that time the distinguished former Member from Pennsylvania, Mr. Graham, and passed the House, on a motion to suspend the rules, without a roll call. It set up that Board for the purpose of giving to President Hoover a facility that might be used in his office for the purpose of securing and coordinating information. That duty is set out in part as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Board to advise the President from time to time of the trend of improvement in business activities and of the existence or approach of periods of business depression and unemployment in the United States, or in any substantial portion thereof; to cooperate with the construction agencies in formulating methods of advance planning; to make progress reports; and perform all other functions assigned to it by the act.

Congress gave to President Hoover that facility. The present Board was set up by Executive order of President Roosevelt. It was not authorized by law. Under the Senate amendment the power of this Board is limited to the power that was formerly exercised by that Board which Congress did authorize.

Mr. Speaker, the Budget estimate for this activity was $1,060,000. The amount which the Board is using this current fiscal year is $750,000. The amount contained in this amendment is $710,000.

I have received from the President this letter which I will insert in the RECORD and read at this time:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 14, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. WOODRUM: I am dictating this just as I leave to go on a little holiday to take the place of the one I missed last summer.

It relates to the appropriation to continue the National Resources Planning Board for the coming fiscal year.

As you know, the reorganization plan last spring placed the National Resources planning Board under the office of the President. This was done because the President—any President—really needs some kind of coordination and research staff; in other words, expert assistants to study many problems which relate to different phases of government. So many questions continue to arise—many of them in response to policy problems on which Members of the Congress and committees of the Congress query the President—that he has to have some kind of machinery for his own information and for that of the Congress.

I have found the National Resources Planning Board of very great assistance in this.

Because the President is, under the Constitution, the responsible head of the whole executive branch of the Government, I must earnestly plead for the continuation of the National Resources Planning Board. I am sure that this need applies not to me personally as President but also to any President in the future.

Incidentally, the amount of money placed in the bill by the Senate is not large in comparison with totals of Government expenditures, and I really believe that the appropriating of this sum will actually save many times the amount in preventing duplication of work or unplanned Budget recommendations.

That is why I am appealing to you and to the other Members of the House to help me.

It may interest you to know that since the last session the consolidation of work through the appointment of three Federal administrators and several executive assistants to the President has very greatly lightened the day-in-and-day-out work of the President himself and is making for a much more businesslike conduct of the executive branch of the Government.

With my sincere regards,

Faithfully yours,

F. D. R.

Hon. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not see how the legislative branch of the Government can turn a deaf ear to this President or to any President when he comes to the legislative branch of the Government and says that he needs a reasonable facility to help him to secure information and to coordinate information, to analyze reports of the vast and multitudinous operations of this complex Government.

Now, I want to take just a moment to read an observation from a source which cannot be accused of being partisan. I do not believe anybody will say that the Washington Post has been unduly partisan to the New Deal or to the present occupant of the White House. I want to read this brief observation that they make about the National Resources Planning Board. They head it "Saved by the Senate."

It reads:

SAVED BY THE SENATE

The conferees considering appropriation bills before the Congress have a difficult task and special responsibility this year because of the proper insistence on economy and the coincident insistence of special groups that their various projects are particularly meritorious.

The conferees on the independent offices bill have agreed to the Senate proposal for a much reduced appropriation for the National Resources Planning Board next year. But this action at least insures a modest expenditure for research which will probably save the Federal Government many times over the cost of the agency. Every large business organization and industry has found the need for a research or planning group in its executive branch. The Federal Government as our largest business needs a similar unit.

The National Resources Planning Board, it must be remembered, is a joint enterprise in which all of the regular Federal agencies take part. The Board operates chiefly through nine major advisory committees, which deal with problems connected with land, water, energy resources, public works, science, industry, local planning, population, and relief policy.

The membership of the land committee is typical of the composition of these committees. It includes representatives of the Forestry Division, General Land Office, the Department of the Interior, Office of Land Use Coordination, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, and the Extension Service of the Department of Agriculture. Also included are representatives of various non-Federal organizations.

When continuation of the Board was threatened, in other words, more was involved than a small staff organization in Washington. What was jeopardized was a very necessary process of integration among Federal and State agencies. The board has a vital importance in developing that process.

It is not duplicating the type of project planning for improved use of resources that is done by other Federal agencies. It is, however, encouraging and coordinating those activities. In addition to valuable research studies, the Board thus brings together the skills of other agencies, to work jointly on fundamental problems which demands the most efficient use of all the resources we can muster.

The continuance of the National Resources Planning Board as an administrative arm of the President's office has been established by the Senate vote on the appropriation. As that body evidently realizes, whatever political party is in power, or whatever the economic theories which may control an administration, the Government of the future will have need of this organization.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, many times the legislative branch of the Government has added to its staff, has given to itself such facilities as we felt we needed in the proper discharge of our duties. Since I have been a Member of Congress, and a member of the Committee on Appropriations I do not remember ever when the Republicans were in power, that the Appropriations Committee questioned seriously any reasonable request that came from the White House. I believe now that the legislative branch of the Government, even though some of us may disagree as to the value of this agency, when this President or any President says that a reasonable facility is necessary for the proper discharge of his duties, the multitudinous duties that have been heaped upon him by the plan of government under which we are operating now, should not fail to accede to that request, and therefore I expect to vote for this item.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. I happened to be attending a committee meeting before the Committee on Flood Control this week, and attention was called to the fact that a certain flood-control dam had been suspended and would not be authorized for that reason. The question was asked "By what authority?" and they said it was by authority of the National Resources Planning Board. What I would like to know is, since the Senate amendment refers to this previous act, whether or not, under authority of that previous act, in face of the statutory provision in the flood-control bill which provides that the War Department shall have charge of these matters, they will be able to take it out of the hands of the War Department and say whether this dam or that dam shall not be constructed?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am glad the gentleman brought that question up, because it can be easily settled right now. The National Resources Planning Board does not make any decision on any project. It does not have authority under the law, and I would not be in favor of giving it the authority, to pass upon any project. But what it does do is this: When a proposition for the establishment of a flood-control project or a navigation project, or any other project coming under that category, is sent to the President for his approval, he cannot, in the nature of things, know all of the ramifications involved in that thing. He refers it to this Board for a factual report.

That Board makes to the President a factual report. Whatever decision is made on it is a decision of the President. He may be acting upon information furnished him by that Board which may not in all instances be pleasing to everyone; but, after all, it is the President's decision, it is not the Board's decision.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes, I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman feel that where the Congress itself says in the Flood Control Act that these matters shall be under the jurisdiction of the War Department, subject to the review of the board of engineers, that even the President should have power to say that they should not be so handled?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The President makes recommendations to Congress through the Budget, and most assuredly the President should have power to pass upon such items. Experience leads me to believe that would be a bad precedent.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, flood-control legislation refers only to flood control. If these proposed dams were of such nature as to damage navigation or interfere with power development, or the conservation of the soil and timber resources of the country, the Chief Executive ought to have the right to hold them up, and Congress ought to give him the power to coordinate these activities.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. I think the Members should be here to hear this debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Obviously there is not a quorum present.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and twenty Members are present, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has consumed 14 minutes, leaving 46 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the quorum call was not for the purpose of hearing me speak, because I doubt if I can make any contribution to this debate.

I first wish to congratulate the gentleman from Virginia and his fellow conferees in bringing this matter to the House for a separate vote and not accepting the strained construction placed on it by the other body that some phases of the National Resources Board had been authorized by law. I can find no phase that has ever yet been authorized by law.

I am going to support the motion offered by the gentleman from Virginia to concur in this item, and I put my reasons on exactly the same grounds that he did. The President has an undoubted right to create this Board by Executive order; and for that reason, placed as it is in the executive department, I shall support it. I feel, however, in view of past statements that I have time after time made here on the floor of the House that I should say this: The record of this agency, to say the least, is very unimpressive, and I am eternally opposed to seeing it made a permanent agency of the Government. I appeared before the House on four different occasions and assured the House on behalf of the Reorganization Committee that we would not bring in a bill to make this agency permanent, and so far as I am concerned, I shall keep the commitments that I have made. The reorganization bill would never have become a law had it contained a provision to make this Board a permanent agency.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I have been under the impression that this Senate amendment does make it a permanent authorization.

Mr. WARREN. No, indeed; it does not. What we are voting here today is for funds to run it for exactly 1 year. That is why the conferees brought it back for a separate vote.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. We are asked to vote funds to run this Bureau 1 year. Can the gentleman tell us where we can get the funds?

Mr. WARREN. No; I am unable to answer my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I will say that there has been nobody on that side of the aisle, or on this side either, who can tell us where to get funds to take care of the ruthless expenditures we are asked to make.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I challenge that statement.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr WARREN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi for a brief question.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman says he is opposed to making this a permanent institution. As a matter of fact, it is an arm of the executive department, is it not?

Mr. WARREN. It was set up only by Executive order. It is a temporary agency.

Mr. RANKIN. And if the present President or a succeeding President wants to continue it, it will be a continuing body.

Mr. WARREN. They have an undoubted right to do it under the authority now vested in the President.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. A provision was placed in the reorganization bill which prevented the President from making permanent any temporary organization

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman feel that the proper way to end this organization and prevent its becoming a permanent agency is to turn down this appropriation right now?

Mr WARREN. No. My vote on this proposition extends simply to the next fiscal year. I make no commitment beyond that.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. As I understand the gentleman he does not regard it as a very effective organization.

Mr. WARREN. I do not. Frankness compels me to say that.

Mr. COLMER. If it is not good as a permanent organization, why continue it at all?

Mr. WARREN. Because I realize that the President, as it is under the executive department, has a right to expect this from the Congress, and I am willing to support him that far. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment and to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The amendment was considered by the House committee in charge of the bill and was excluded from the bill in the belief that there was no authority in law for the appropriation. In the Senate the amendment was inserted in the bill on the theory that the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, created way back in 1931, afforded sufficient legislative authority for the action. I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] that that construction to me is a very strained one.

The amendment was then considered and adopted by the Senate by the narrow margin of three votes. Just prior to its adoption a proposal to reduce the total amount involved from $710,000 to $100,000 failed of passage by a margin of exactly one vote.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has said that the record of this agency has been "a distinctly unimpressive one." In this connection I call the attention of my Democratic friends and colleagues to the estimate of the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia of the accomplishments of this agency. The Senator recently described it as "one of the 80 new agencies which in accomplishment shows less for the actual money expended than any other agency of the Government."

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Briefly.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman know of any request made by the legislative branch of the Government upon the President of the United States for an appropriation that the President has vetoed?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I cannot answer the gentleman specifically. I may say, however, that in my judgment it is his right and duty to veto any request of which he disapproves just as it is the right and duty of this House, in my judgment, to pass upon appropriations requested by the President for matters of this kind.

When the question arose of the 6 secretaries for the President, "with a passion for anonymity," the question was thoroughly considered and thoroughly debated in this House. To my mind it is an absurd position to say that simply because the present President or any other President makes the request, that the House of Representatives is bound to set up a large organization for him with a personnel of 171, with regional offices to the number of 9, calling for an appropriation of from $700,000 to $1,000,000 annually. How far would you carry this argument? Surely Congress has an obligation in the matter.

Mr. COCHRAN. Has not the President told the House that he needs this organization to handle emergency recommendations that have been placed upon him by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. We are told that he has. I still submit, however, that it is the duty of the Members of this House to pass upon the request for funds for this agency that he has submitted.

Mr. Speaker, the activities of this agency can be found on page 38 of the House hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill. Every one of those activities is in a field in which other agencies of the Government are either performing or capable of performing, in my judgment, at this time.

If you will refer to the debate on the Senate floor on February 6 of this year, you will also find an analysis made by the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia in which he gives the four functions of this agency as they appear in the United States Government manual and a list of agencies doing or capable of doing similar work under each function.

The first function is given as that of preparing plans for utilization of natural resources. Here are some of the other agencies to which he refers as operating in that field: The General Land Office, Bureau of Reclamation, Geological Survey, Bureau of Mines, National Park Service, Bureau of Biological Survey, Petroleum and Conservation Division, Bituminous Coal Division, National Policy Committee, Soil Conservation, Forest Service, Rural Electrification Administration.

Function No. 2 is given as that of advising as to the trend of employment and business activity and as to measures tending to the stabilization of economic resources. In that field he lists the Division of Research and Statistics, Treasury Department, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Bureau of Reclamation, Bureau of Public Roads, Army engineers, and the W. P. A.

Function No. 3 is given as that of recording all proposed Federal projects involving land acquisition and land research projects. In this field he lists the General Land Office, National Park Service, Forest Service, Public Buildings Administration, Grazing Division, Navy Department, and War Department.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the final function is given as that of consulting and cooperating with agencies of the Federal Government, States, and municipalities and of coordinating planning activities. Surely, Mr. Speaker, we do not need a force of 171, with 9 field offices, to coordinate the work of our Federal agencies working in this field. Surely we do not need any such set-up, to quote from the director of the agency, "to encourage the States to do their own planning and their own thinking."

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment, because I believe that the work of the National Resources Planning Board is almost entirely work which can be performed by other agencies of the Federal Government. I am opposed to it because it involves the expenditure of over $700,000 in a single year. I am opposed to it because its predecessor, the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, created under President Hoover, never, I am advised, had an appropriation of more than $90,000. I am opposed to it because the showing of the agency does not justify, in my judgment, an expenditure of from $700,000 to $1,000,000 annually for the continuation of its activities.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. There is a general feeling that this organization is a sort of a wet nurse set up by President Roosevelt to nurse along those bureaus which he promised in 1932 he was going to abolish.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Well, I do not say that the distinguished Senator's estimate is mathematically accurate, but if this agency is in fact one of 80 new agencies which shows less accomplishment for the actual money expended than any other agency of the Government, and if we are going to curtail or cut down on existing agencies, it would seem this might be a good place to begin.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] 8 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, there is pending a motion by the gentleman from Virginia. That motion is to recede and concur in a Senate amendment. If you vote "aye" it means that you approve of the continuation of the National Resources Planning Board for another year, to cost $710,000.

When this item came before the Subcommittee on Independent Offices in December the Budget asked for something in excess of $1,000,000 for this agency. We were of the opinion that there was no authority in law to continue this agency, consequently it was struck out in the subcommittee. No effort was made to restore it either in the full committee or in the House. The Senate, however, restored it with $710,000 and placed a limitation thereon that it could not carry on any function outside of those functions that were set down in the Federal Employment Stabilization Act of 1931, when Herbert Hoover was the President of the United States.

What are the provisions of that act of 1931? In brief, that there should be advance planning. On what? On highways, on public buildings, on flood control, and on other types of construction activity.

It is said here there are three reasons why this agency ought to be retained. The first is that the President wants it, the second is that the President needs it, and the third is that since it is carrying on functions that were set up under President Hoover there is no reason why it should not be retained now. Let us dispose of them one at a time.

The fact that the President needs it is a matter of great controversy. The fact that he wants it is no reason why the Congress ought not to give it the closest scrutiny. Congress is the custodian of the public purse, and is therefore entitled to examine the justification for this and all other expenditures.

They say, "Since it was created under Hoover, why not continue it?" The best reason I know of is that when Herbert Hoover was the President we did not have a Federal Works Agency, such as we have today, to undertake like activities. Talk about construction and planning! The Federal Works Agency, as reorganized by the President, includes what? The Roads Administration, as stated in the act of 1931.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No.

They have over $1,100,000 for administrative expenses at their disposal. The Federal Public Highways Administration has over 542 people working in Washington, many of whom are coordinators and planners, research experts, technicians, statisticians, economists, analysts, and all the rest. The Federal Works Agency includes the Public Buildings Administration. They have 579 people working in Washington, many of whom are experts. The United States Housing Authority is in the Works Administration. They have $4,500,000 to spend, and they have 851 people working in Washington, including a lot of experts. The Federal Works Agency includes the Public Works Administration. They have $3,600,000 to spend for administrative purposes. They still have 516 people in Washington, including engineers and experts of all kinds. It includes W. P. A. They can use 5 percent of their money for administrative purposes. They have 1,595 people working in Washington. The Federal Works Agency, which did not exist under Hoover, is under the direction of an administrator, and he has over 50 experts in his office and we gave him $250,000. In addition thereto you still have the War Department handling rivers and harbors and flood control.

If out of all those hundreds of experts drawing $5,000, $6,000, $7,000, $8,000, and $9,000 a year the President cannot find enough coordinating effort to give him a construction plan and program, then I suggest that we dissolve the Federal Works Agency and go back to the condition that existed before the first Reorganization Act. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not just possible that the President has some worthy new dealers that must be taken care of?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not pass on that point. I pass, however, on the necessity for this agency.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is a necessity.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There may have been some necessity for it when it was created in 1931, but do not forget, we had no P. W. A., we had no W. P. A., we had no Buildings Administration such as exists today, we had no United States Housing Authority, we had no Federal Housing Administration, we had no Federal Works Administrator. All these agencies did not exist in 1931. Since this amendment is limited to an articulation of the duties and functions that are set forth in that 1931 act, and since we have countless agencies and hundreds of experts to do that job, where is the necessity for spending another $710,000? I am not insensible of the needs of the White House, and I believe that under all circumstances we ought to deal generously with the President, but first of all they ought to show us, the law-making and appropriating body, that there is some necessity for this expenditure.

As to its effectiveness, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] well said that its record of performance is distinctly unimpressive.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON. The gentleman from North Carolina, like the distinguished gentleman who is addressing us, has a supreme gift of good judgment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. EATON. He has told us that in his estimation this institution is of no value. Then why in heaven's name does he want to continue it for only 1 year at an expenditure of three-quarters of a million dollars of the taxpayers' money?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It has one value. It has the supreme value of coordinating with State planning agencies and encouraging them to spend money for everything under the sun from the study of the genealogy of the safety pin, as I said before, to the creation of a park along the C. & O. Canal. It is time to stop encouraging counties, municipalities, and States in the expenditure of money at the instance and under the promulgation of the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Does not the gentleman feel that already we have too many Governors and mayors coming to Washington to "put the heat" on the Members of the Congress of the United States to take care of their local problems back home, simply passing the buck to us?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We have got too many agencies that can only articulate and function in terms of the dollar sign and we ought to abolish some of them.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Referring to the planning functions of this Board, is this the Board that the President refers to in the phrase, "We planned it that way"? [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Only yesterday we received the President's fourth reorganization plan. It seeks to effect greater efficiency and economy and to eliminate duplication of activities. Would this not be an excellent place to apply those very principles? Here is a Federal Works Agency to deal with all phases of construction activities. The component agencies in this set-up have millions to spend for salaries and administration. Now comes the pending proposal to retain the National Resoures Planning Board to devote itself exlusively to the planning and acceleration of construction at an additional cost of $710,000. Here is an excellent opportunity to plan the conservation of a few of our fiscal resources by permitting the Planning Board to plan its way out of existence by June 30 of this year. I suggest that the motion be voted down.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

WHAT THIS BOARD MIGHT HAVE DONE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] proceeds to inform the House that we did not have this Planning Board during the Republican administration. Probably, if we had had it, we would not have had to go to the Supreme Court of the United States to keep a Cabinet member from stealing the naval oil reserve at Teapot Dome. [Applause.]

Probably, if we had had this Planning Board during the Republican administration, we would not have had the crash of the Insull empire that gobbled up the water power in that section, flooded the country with watered stocks, and robbed the people of Illinois and Missouri and every State in the Middle West of hundreds of millions of dollars in overcharges for electric lights and power.

If we had had this Planning Board during the Hoover administration, probably we would not have had the Ohio River cluttered up with low dams that have destroyed the power possibilities of that great stream and have increased flood damages to where they destroy hundreds of human lives and millions of dollars' worth of property almost every year that rolls around. We might have taken care of the Ohio River as we have the Tennessee, saved lives, conserved the soil, controlled floods, improved navigation, and lifted from the shoulders of the power consumers of Ohio the great burden they now bear of $47,000,000 in annual overcharges for electric lights and power.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, the object of this Board, which is a branch of the executive department, is to coordinate flood control, power development, soil conservation, navigation, the conservation of our timber supply, and national defense, and help us to save America for Americans and make our country a better, a safer, and a brighter place in which to live.

Today they talk about these various agencies, some of which are so jealous of each other they have absolutely failed to coordinate their efforts, with the result that we are standing before the world hopelessly lacking in internal development from the standpoint of national defense. [Applause.]

Lock at what is happening in the world today; look at what is happening in Europe, when every stream is developed and and when nations threaten to go to war with each other over a river like the Danube. While those nations have built their far-reaching transmission lines to serve power to the vital centers, here we are without a power connection even between the city of Washington and Alexandria, Va., less than 10 miles away.

No, Mr. Speaker; this is not a useless body. I am not a particular worshiper of any of the men on this Board. This is not a personal matter with me at all. But from my standpoint there is not an agency of this Government that is more vitally necessary, if we are going to develop our national resources in order to take care of the American people in the years to come, if we are going to use these resources for the benefit of all the American people, and if we are going to develop our country from a standpoint of real national defense for our own people and not to flirt with some foreign war in foreign lands. [Applause.]

I sincerely trust that this provision will be adopted.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. RICH. When you speak about developing the country, do you not believe——

Mr. RANKIN. I yielded for a question only. I decline to yield further.

Mr. RICH. If we keep on making these expenditures, the country is going to be wrecked. If you keep on, that is exactly what will happen.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania or his party sat here in power and saw the Power Trust clutter the Susquehanna River that has been drowning his own people in the last 2 weeks. If they had had a board of this kind, and had had the courage to work for proper development of the Susquehanna River, they would not only have had that power developed to save the people of Pennsylvania $72,000,000 a year on their light and power bills, but they would have saved them from these disastrous floods, they would have transformed the Susquehanna into a great artery of transportation, they would have conserved the soil as well as the timber along that stream, and would have made it a great agency of national defense.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I cannot yield. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] always opposes all these national developments that are absolutely necessary if America is to move forward and regain her place and keep the lead in the onward march of modern progress. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. Speaker, we have had considerable discussion this afternoon regarding Government extravagance and worthless Government activities. During the past 7 years a great many useless and extravagant boards and commissions have been set up, and I think a large number of those boards and commissions should long ago have been abolished by the Congress.

Perhaps the worst that can be said for most of these boards and commissions is simply that they are extravagant and useless, and that in itself, of course, ought to be a sufficient indictment. There are a few of them, however, that are not merely extravagant and useless but that are affirmatively harmful and even vicious, and outstanding among them in that category, in my opinion, is the National Resources Planning Board. I have had so much experience with this National Resources Planning Board in connection with legislation of admitted merit and necessity that I think I am well enough informed on this particular subject to make some very direct and categorical statements about it.

There is still no authorization for this Board. It was set up by the President without authority from Congress, and there is no congressional authorization now. When the bill went over to the Senate with the appropriation for this Board eliminated, the Senate was hard pressed to find an excuse for restoring the appropriation for this unauthorized agency. An old authorization act was finally discovered, however, under which in the Hoover administration an advisory board under the name of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board had been set up, and so, using that as an excuse, the Senate has written into the House bill an appropriation of $710,000 for this National Resources Planning Board.

Under the old board, which is not in existence and which has never been in existence under the present administration, jurisdiction was given in the matter of planning for stabilizing employment in connection with river and harbor improvement, roads, flood control, and so forth. That unused and forgotten authorization fitted this National Resources Planning Board's purposes exactly, because those are the fields of governmental activity in which the National Resources Planning Board for the last few years has been interfering, to the definite and positive damage of those activities. It has interfered with the regular-established functions and agencies of this Government, and with legislative jurisdiction by the Congress at every opportunity. It has held back proper legislation by improper and unauthorized methods. It has interfered without any authority whatever with the orderly consideration of legislation by committees of Congress. It has endeavored to stop the enactment of good legislation, and it has lent its influence to the enactment of bad legislation.

I hope I may be pardoned for making reference in this regard to a bill which I happened to introduce myself, but the interference of the Planning Board to this particular bill is no exception to the rule. It is typical of what that National Resources Planning Board does as a matter of policy, and there were some 30 other bills introduced in the last session of Congress which, I understand, received the same treatment. I use this bill merely as an example of the unwarranted and impertinent interference of this Board with legislation.

I have in my hand the report of the Secretary of War to the Congress on Little River improvement project in Oregon, which will cost a total sum of $5,000—a very necessary little improvement. It consists of removing rocks from the mouth of a small river, rocks which are dangerous to the lives of fishermen. That project was carefully examined and surveyed under the regular procedure of the Army engineers as prescribed by the Congress and received a favorable report from the division engineer. At the hearing before the Board of Army Engineers the favorable report and recommendation of the division engineer was unanimously endorsed and sent to the Congress for action.

But what did the National Resources Planning Board do? It got hold of this report, just as it gets hold of other reports over which it has no jurisdiction and inserted at the very beginning of the letter of the Secretary of War to the Congress a veto of this legislation, which was initialed by the President, and this veto appears here on the printed report of the Board of Army Engineers and the Secretary of War. The document I hold in my hand is House Document 551, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, and it is the letter of the Secretary of War transmitting to the Congress the Report of the Chief of Engineers on the survey of the Salmon River in Oregon.

The National Resources Planning Board of course, knows nothing about this river, never saw the river, and is not concerned with the river. It made statements in this veto message which the President initialed, which are absolutely inaccurate, and which could not possibly be based on any information; and all for what? For the purpose of prejudicing this legislation when it came to Congress. It has not reached the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives for formal consideration, and yet the letter of the Secretary of War on this favorable recommendation of the Board of Army Engineers carried the Presidential veto in advance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. MOTT. May I have another minute?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. MOTT. That, Mr. Speaker, is typical not only of the policy but of the purpose of the National Resources Planning Board, and it applies this policy of interference not only in the field of river and harbor legislation but in the field of road legislation, flood-control legislation, and in other fields of legislation for which we have an established, legal, authorized procedure. The ambition and the purpose of this Board, if allowed to exist, is to substitute its own methods and its own jurisdiction for the existing jurisdiction and methods of the Army engineers and of other regular, established governmental agencies.

When the committee sent this bill in with the appropriation for the National Resources Planning Board eliminated, it was applauded and congratulated by the House; and if now the House will refuse to endorse this Senate amendment restoring the appropriation, the House will be entitled to and will receive the congratulations and the gratitude of the people of the country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has again expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ELLIS].

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I hardly see the logic in the gentlemen on my left supporting this coordinating and planning agency for Herbert Hoover and denying it for Franklin Roosevelt—unless they feel that Hoover needed it and that Roosevelt does not.

The American people demand of the President that he be the best-informed man in the land. It is essential that he have the necessary equipment.

For a number of years we have talked about the terms "comprehensive plans and programs of public works." We have all been in favor of an orderly scheme of scheduling the construction of public works—buildings, bridges, roads, navigation improvements, and so forth—in contrast to a haphazard, catch-as-catch-can method of appropriating money for and building works almost as the spirit moves us. We have always said that the Government could be of help to business if it would only "set its own house in order." In contrast to the efficient private-business methods of planning and building capital plant and equipment, the Government's methods seemed to be somewhat helter-skelter.

Also there were those who felt that the Government was no worse than private business in some respects. When times began to get bad, private business tapered off its construction work and thus helped times get worse. The Government was no better; it made the situation worse, too, by tapering off its construction under similar conditions. In our own time this situation has been brought vividly to our attention. Just before 1930 private business and all governments in the United States—Federal, State, and local—were spending an average of $10,000,000,000 annually on new construction. Our national income reached $82,000,000,000 in 1929. Since then private business and all governments—Federal, State, and local—have been spending an average of less than $5,000,000,000 annually for construction. Our national income has not reached $82,000,000,000 since 1929.

If the Federal Government is going to do its part to avoid contributing to these wild fluctuations in the national income, it should so arrange its public-works construction that it proceeds in as stable a manner as possible. This means that the Federal Government must program its works construction—and it must encourage States and localities to do so too, otherwise the fluctuations of their public-works construction will undo all the efforts that the Federal Government is making to bring about business stability.

It is apparent then that when we speak of a "comprehensive plan of public works" there are two governing considerations:

First. The need for the works and facilities themselves—that is the importance of the use which will be made of them in comparison with the need for other public services. In other words, for example, shall a bridge be built before a school; shall flood control be installed before a road is built; shall we have, in general, more schools and less bridges or shall we have more flood-control projects and less roads?

Second. The amount of public-works construction which will be contributed as the Government's share toward increasing the stability of business and employment—particularly that stability which will make conditions favorable to a steadily increasing national income.

It should not be forgotten, however, that preparing a comprehensive program of public works involves more than a mere compilation of all works proposed—it is more than just a listing on paper of the names of a proposed bridge, a school, a road, and a building in any order that they happen to pop into one's head. First of all, there must be a developmental plan for the area for which the program is being prepared—whether it is a city, county, State, region, or the Nation as a whole—which indicates the best way in which the area should be developed. Then all works proposed to be built in the area must be looked at in the light of the developmental plan. In other words, preparing a program of public works also involves a thinking ahead, a preparing of plans for best development of the activity, area, or function involved. It requires a meeting of men's minds, an extensive use of the best technical talent available, and long, hard work. In fact, the two functions—programming and planning—cannot be separated. If programming of public works is required by law, developmental plans must be prepared too, otherwise upon what can programs be based?

The basic principle of comprehensive public-works programming was first declared by the Congress in the Employment Stabilization Act of 1931. The Congress again redeclared this policy in title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act in 1933. The present responsibilities of the National Resources Planning Board in planning and programming stems back to these acts, several others, and a series of Executive orders, and today, the National Resources Planning Board administers, under the direction of the President, the functions of both the Stabilization Act and the Resources Committee by reason of Reorganization Plan No. I affirmatively approved by the Congress in June 1939.

Consider for a moment the size of the task which confronts this Resources Planning Board. It must, according to the Employment Stabilization Act—

First. Advise the President on the trend of employment and business activity and the existence or approach of periods of business depression and unemployment.

Second. Cooperate with Federal construction agencies in formulating methods of advance planning.

Third. Do advance planning of public works to make effective the declared policy of the Congress.

Fourth. Collect information concerning advance construction plans and estimates by States, municipalities, and other public and private agencies which may indicate the probable volume of construction within the United States and which may aid the Federal construction agencies in formulating their advance plans.

Alone in its major field of activity—advance planning of public works—the Board has a tremendous task. Today there are at least 65 separate Federal bureaus and agencies which do construction work or provide grants or loans to States and local governments for public construction. The Federal Government in the fiscal year 1939 spent about $505,000,000 for general public works, exclusive of minor construction and repairs, P. W. A. grants or loans, or work relief under the W. P. A. In 1940 the Budget estimates this expenditure will be about $688,000,000; for 1941 the Budget estimates are $641,000,000. During the fiscal year 1940 the Board's appropriations for all of its operations is only slightly more than one-tenth of 1 percent of the total expenditures for Federal public works, without even considering the P. W. A. or W. P. A. expenditures.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] says that the President should be able to obtain sufficient coordinating assistance from all these public-works agencies, but surely we will all agree that any recommendation from other than an independent agency would be biased in favor of that particular department.

Moreover, the Congress in enacting the Stabilization Act had a definite concept of the interlocking of the construction activities of Federal, State, and local governments. A few examples of the way the Board approaches this problem will make this interlocking relationship clear. The completion of the Grand Coulee project in the Pacific Northwest means new lands available for settlement and other economic opportunities. Roads, bridges, streets, schools, public buildings, and institutions of one kind or another will be required. The States, local governments, and other Federal agencies in the area will have to plan for and schedule their public-works construction with an eye to this project—unless we expect the project to be completed amidst an utter confusion of plans made at cross-purposes and a possible waste of public funds. In the upper Rio Grande Valley so many Federal and State agencies had plans to use the water that eventually there would not have been enough water to go around. Accordingly they worked out jointly under the Board's auspices the plans for the use and control of the available water, and the States of Texas, New Mexico, and Colorado made the agreement the subject of an interstate compact, which was approved by the Congress last year.

The organization set up by the Board to carry out its functions covers a variety of activities, and the outstanding results which it has achieved have, in nearly every instance, been brought to the attention of the Congress by the President.

Let us see what the Board actually does to carry out its functions.

First of all, the Board must cooperate with Federal construction agencies in formulating methods of advance planning and in trying to encourage these agencies to plan their construction so as to attain the objectives which Congress set forth in the Stabilization Act. The Congress has made it mandatory for the Federal construction agencies listed in the act, as well as the others which the President has designated from time to time, to prepare 6-year advance plans of public works with estimates showing projects allotted to each year, and to revise these 6-year plans annually and keep them up to date. The Board has no control in this matter—the Congress has said that the Federal construction agencies must comply with the act.

In its work with the Federal construction agencies the Board has not tried to breed a race of superplanners; rather, it has cooperated with the operating and planning chiefs of the Federal agencies through a small, permanent secretariat, and it is these groups of Federal officials plus qualified outside experts upon whom the Board relies for its technical advice. It has tried to make sure through these groups, called technical committees, that one Federal agency in making its plans to build a useful needed work—such as a dam, a road, or a reclamation project—does not arrange to schedule the building of that project without regard to the plans of other Federal agencies, and of the States and localities, too.

To accomplish this objective a series of new devices have been used—technical committees, regional committees, and certain clearing-house and reporting services. Sometimes, too, there has been some confusion of objectives among the individual Federal agencies. In these cases the Board has sought to serve as a "neutral meeting ground" where the representatives of these Federal agencies could feel free to confer under the auspices of an agency whose objective is an over-all one, an agency which is concerned more particularly with the objectives and use of public works as a whole rather than with individual project types or functions. In other words, the Board has not been interested in promoting or encouraging single types of public works such as flood control, roads, or reclamation. Rather, it tries to look at the Nation's needs for all public works—not the individual agency's or particular group's desire for them.

Examples of the work of the Board's technical committees have been brought to our attention on several occasions. These covered the several drainage-basin reports, the land-planning reports, the energy-resources report, and several others. The regional committees have prepared reports on the Northern Great Plains, the Red River of the North, the Upper Rio Grande, and the Northern Lake States.

There have been charges, unfortunately, that the Board has interfered with the work of other Federal agencies—particularly, in some instances, that the Board's actions have conflicted with the Corps of Engineers. Senator BYRNES, during the debate on this bill in the Senate, read a memorandum from the Chief of Engineers, dated January 23, in which it was stated:

> This corps has always adhered steadfastly to the view that it is in no sense a policy-making branch of the Government, but solely an executive agency to carry out the functions required by law. Pursuant to this general policy there has been complete cooperation between the Corps of Engineers and the National Resources Planning Board in carrying out its purposes. This cooperation has not only extended to the Chief of Engineers and his staff in Washington but also to the field officers of the corps.

No one questioned that statement at the time it was made; no doubt, too, there are other major Federal construction agencies which could indicate at great length the benefits which they have received in cooperating with the Board in its work.

Second among its major duties, the Board has cooperated with regional, State, and local planning agencies. The National Planning Board in 1933 encouraged the establishment of State planning agencies, and the resources board and the resources committee continued to furnish advice and assistance to them upon request. These State agencies, when possible, have been encouraged to make their own long-range plans for a State's development, to review the needs for works proposed in their State—both Federal and State works—in relation to their plans, to study their own governments' capacities to pay, and finally to schedule their construction operations in an orderly, stable way so as to stay within their financial limitations. There are planning agencies in 43 of the States which are constantly calling upon the Board for advice and assistance, and there is no other Federal agency to which they can turn for assistance in coordinating planning activities.

The Board has then sought to encourage Federal agencies in formulating their 6-year plans of public works to consult with the State agencies so that there is, if necessary, a mutual adjustment of plans between them. For instance, if the State agency is planning a road system or studying a school-building program, and the Federal agency is planning a water project which may flood certain areas or render them unsuitable for use, it is the part of wisdom to make sure that no new roads or schools are planned for an area which eventually may be flooded. The building of a road or school building under such circumstances would be an obvious waste of public funds.

Further, many problems similar to those which I have referred to cut across State lines, so the Board has tried to encourage the formation of interstate groups comprised of representatives of both the States and the Federal agencies immediately concerned. Examples of these interstate groups—some of which have already been referred to—are the Pacific Northwest Regional Planning Commission, the New England Regional Planning Commission, the Northern Lakes States Committee, and the Northern Great Plains Committee.

Also, the Board has sought to serve as a clearing house of information on the development of planning techniques for more than 1,000 local planning agencies—city and county. An example of its recent efforts in this field has been its works with the Federal Works Agency in trying to develop, in cooperation with 7 different cities, a method of procedure which all cities in the United States could use as a guide, if they wish to try and schedule their construction in an orderly way within their capacity to pay. By this leadership, the Board hopes that cities too—as well as States—will be encouraged to set their own house in order insofar as public construction is concerned.

The third major function of the Board lies in the field of general over-all advice to the President on the general trend of employment and business. We cannot blame the construction industry alone for contributing to business instability. There are other problems involved—and the Board has tried to focus attention on some of them by means of several studies—Patterns of Resource Use, the Structure of the American Economy, and Consumer Income and Expenditures.

Finally, if it is to advise the President best on the trends of business and employment, the Board must of necessity cooperate with the several Federal agencies which cover these fields.

The Board has tried to help the President by getting these Federal agencies together and by having them iron out their differences among themselves, if possible, so that there is at least a clear agreement upon the fundamental trends. They have issued several reports of this nature which are really "landmarks" for public policy, public agencies, and private business. Among some of these reports are: The National Resources Board report of 1934, reporting on general trends in the use of our land, water, and mineral resources; The Problems of a Changing Population, containing some pertinent storm signals on implications in the probable growth of our population; Technological Trends and National Policy, dealing with invention and telling us what we may expect further in technological unemployment; and many others.

For all of these things which the Board is required to do by law, the Budget estimate for 1941 was only $1,060,000. The Senate has agreed to appropriate $710,000. For all the things expected of this Board, $710,000 seems very small in comparison to the $688,000,000 the Federal Government will spend this year on public works. Let it not be said that our motto is: "Millions for public works, but not a cent for coordinated planning for those public works."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should summon my physician at once. I must be suffering from complete loss of memory at the moment. I thought I had been abundantly assured from those leaders serving on the Reorganization Committee that this National Resources Board would be abolished. I was certainly assured that it would not be frozen into the body politic. But now those leaders are agreeing to it, excusing themselves because it is for 1 year only—temporary. I can get even no assurance that it would be temporary next year, and so on indefinitely. So that by that left-handed method the promises I received seem to have been greatly misunderstood by me. Marvelous are the persuasive powers of this President of ours. Has he summoned them? I can only assume so. What does he want of this National Resources Planning Board? What did this Board recommend that first year? You will recall it—only spending policies. Resources Board. What word can I think of to stigmatize it as it ought to be? A board to suggest opportunities for more spending. Members on this side, let us preserve what resources we might have left. Let us make unanimous protest. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this committee is not a supergroup, as some would make you believe. Its personnel does include some of the outstanding engineers of the country. It makes no independent studies concerning our resources. It has absolutely no responsibility as to construction work. Above all, it exercises no veto power over any Federal activity. It does act, when a Federal group is engaged in some phase of State construction, to bring the agencies together when requested to do so.

It seeks to promote by helping Federal and State agencies to coordinate their activities. It assists the President by studying most important problems and placing facts—not recommendations—before him.

This is an agency that the President says he needs. When the Congress asks the President for money to assist it in its work, the President never denies it the money. Why should we use our veto power in connection with an agency directly under the President, organized solely for helping the President in the great problems that confront him? [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMASON). The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues, with the manifold duties that I have to perform I would not take the floor or your time today except there are just a few things that I have said on occasion before which I think will bear repetition at this time.

In 1931 this National Resources Board was set up as an agency to help President Hoover perform his duties as President of the United States. It came into the House and was passed under suspension of the rules without even a roll call. If a Republican President were in the White House today and he asked for the continuance of this agency to help him perform his duties saying that he needed it in order that his office might function fully and freely to be of service to the country, you could pass that bill or this amendment in all probability under suspension of the rules without a roll call. It seems to be different when we have a Democratic President. All that some of the gentlemen, or most of them, on my left need to know about any measure coming before the Congress is whether or not the President wants it. If he wants it, with practical unanimity they stand up and oppose it. We did not do that way—and I was here during the 12 long hard years of Harding, of Coolidge, and of Hoover. We did not treat your Presidents like you treat Democratic Presidents, and I am not proud of your actions in these things. If no appeal can be made to that side of the aisle—and there can be none—then I turn to my Democratic colleagues and ask you to stand by this recommendation, this request, this urging upon us by our Democratic President. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question occurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to recede and concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 83, noes 75.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 184, nays 130, answered "present" 1, not voting 114, as follows:

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the several motions were agreed to was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include some excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by Kenneth A. Reid, general manager, Izaak Walton League of America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the National Resources Planning Board.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER]?

There was no objection.

THE LOGAN-WALTER BILL

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, next week there will be taken up for consideration by the House the Logan-Walter bill. I have been very fortunate within the last 2 or 3 days in that I have been given the opportunity and have been able to study an analysis of that bill made by a prominent attorney. It is a nonpartisan analysis and one which I think every Member of the House and everybody who desires to be informed ought to read.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include this analysis of the bill in the Appendix of the RECORD. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I am advised by the Public Printer this will exceed the allowable limit and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds the limit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEFAUVER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GRANT of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include copy of a bill which I have introduced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. GRANT]?

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to make a statement.

Monday next is unanimous-consent day. Following consideration of bills on the Consent Calendar, a rule will be called up for the consideration of the so-called Logan-Walter bill. It is expected that general debate will be completed Monday afternoon, and not later than 2 o'clock on Tuesday, at which time it is expected to adjourn on account of a great national event. The reading of the bill for amendment will be taken up the next day. There will probably be nothing on the calendar for Wednesday. On Thursday the so-called crop-insurance bill will be taken up under a rule.

There is a probability that the conferees on the agricultural appropriation bill may be able to report on Thursday. If so, we will take up that conference report on Friday. This is not very certain, however.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the program next week, is it intended to consider any labor legislation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not next week.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOUSTON, indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. WELCH, at the request of Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT, for today, on account of important business.

To Mr. MAGNUSON, on account of official business.

To Mr. FITZPATRICK, indefinitely, on account of death of his father.

To Mr. MASSINGALE, for next week, on account of business.

To Mr. SACKS, at the request of Mr. MYERS, for 10 days, on account of official business.

SENATE

MONDAY, APRIL 15, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, April 8, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, fountain of life and light, whose coming forth to us is in the freshness of the morning, who seest the hours as they lie before us, for Thou knowest us better than we know ourselves: Accept from lips unfeigned our thankfulness for the rest and refreshment of the past night, for Thy watchful care, and the ministrations of Thy love. Let no indolence of mind, no spirit of perverseness becloud the vision of Thyself as we enter upon the duties of this day.

In this sacred place patriots of a former generation have spoken; may they still speak to us out of the past with a potency mightier than any living voice; may we feel the influence of their achievements, and may the hush of their unseen presence rest upon us. Help us, therefore, O God, so to live that we may worthily be numbered among those whose spirit shapes and will forever shape the best life for our people, and may that spirt now lay hold of other lives, making them bearers of its meaning as they carry its power adown the stream of time till all mankind shall know the joy and peace of a world redeemed, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the calendar day Friday, April 12, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

S. 1372. An act for the relief of W. B. Tucker, Helen W. Tucker, Lonie Meadows, and Susie Meadows; and

S. 1962. An act granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to reopen and readjudicate the case of Carrie Howard Steedman and Eugenia Howard Edmunds.

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT RELATIVE TO INVASION OF DENMARK AND NORWAY

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on the 13th of April the President of the United States made a statement in regard to the recent invasion of Denmark and Norway by the Nazi Government. It is a condemnation of the course of the Nazi Government.

A statement so important, coming from the President of the United States, I think ought to be incorporated in the RECORD, and I ask that the clerk may read it. The statement is very brief; and, of course, when read it will appear in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the statement will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

Force and military aggression are once more on the march against small nations, in this instance through the invasion of Denmark and Norway. These two nations have won and maintained during a period of many generations the respect and regard not only of the American people, but of all peoples, because of their observance of the highest standards of national and international conduct.

The Government of the United States has on the occasion of recent invasions strongly expressed its disapprobation of such unlawful exercise of force. It here reiterates, with undiminished emphasis, its point of view as expressed on those occasions. If civilization is to survive, the rights of the smaller nations to independence, to their territorial integrity, and to the unimpeded opportunity for self-government must be respected by their more powerful neighbors.

SCHOOLS AND TRAINING COURSES CONDUCTED BY THE GOVERNMENT (S. DOC. 182)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a special report relating to certain schools and training courses conducted in, or by, Government departments and independent establishments, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of Local Union No. 206, International Hod Carriers, Building and Common Laborers of America, of Ogden, Utah, relative to the W. P. A. construction program, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of Ogden, Utah, praying that Government construction work be performed by construction companies rather than under the W. P. A., which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Fourth National Convention of the National Association of County Officials assembled at Houston, Tex., favoring the enactment of legislation to provide for Federal contributions (in lieu of taxes) to counties in which the Government holds lands in its proprietorial capacity as distinguished from lands held for purely governmental purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 801) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws, and to prevent the crime of lynching, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills and joint resolution, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3198. A bill to provide allowances for uniforms and equipment for certain officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army (Rept. No. 1424);

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess on Friday the question was on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I move that line 9, on page 2, be struck from the pending committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2 in the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out line 9.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this in effect is a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] was defeated on Friday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that is what the Senator intends to do, that is what he ought to do. The amendment he offers has been voted on and defeated.

Mr. TAFT. No; I have consulted the Parliamentarian, and he tells me that this is the preferable way to deal with the matter, because of the fact that since that motion was defeated another amendment has been made in the same words, so that it would be very confusing, although it perhaps could be done, to move to reconsider. While the particular motion I make is a different motion from that made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], it has the same ultimate effect, but not in the way in which he sought to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. There has been no amendment of subsection (a), which relates alone to the sixth circuit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation as the Parliamentarian has explained it to the Chair.

If the Senate should adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, it would naturally reconsider its action in striking out "2" and inserting "3" and striking out "1" and inserting "2." That would automatically follow.

Mr. BARKLEY. That has no relationship to the sixth circuit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That does not affect line 9 of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. It does not affect line 9 of the bill. None of this amendment affects line 9, which deals with a separate proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would not affect line 10, so the Parliamentarian says.

Mr. BARKLEY. But we voted last week on a motion to strike out line 9. Another amendment of the same sort is not in order. The Senator may move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Journal clerk suggests to the Chair that the Senator from Kentucky is in error; that the Senate did not vote on the question of striking out line 9 of the bill. He says the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] withdrew that amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that is what the Journal shows, the Journal is in error, because we debated here for an hour or two whether there should be an additional judge for the sixth circuit, and that provision is in line 9 of the bill, and that motion was defeated. If anything happened outside of that, I do not recall it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the Senator from Kentucky is in error; that that was not the motion. The Journal has been approved, and that is what the Journal shows.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am subject to correction if my recollection is wrong; but I know we voted on the question of whether there should be another judge for the sixth circuit.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the motion which was made on Friday was to strike out all the section and to insert in lieu thereof an additional circuit judgeship for the eighth circuit. It, therefore, changed the whole language and the whole set-up. I would just as soon move to reconsider, whichever is the proper procedure; it makes no difference to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was no yea-and-nay vote on the amendment. We voted viva voce against the amendment, which, as I recall, related only to the sixth circuit. An amendment was offered to strike out certain parts of the amendment brought in by the committee. That amendment was voted down; and my recollection is that there was an amendment pertaining only to the sixth circuit. If I am in error about that, of course, I wish to be corrected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has before him the Journal as approved. In regard to this particular matter, it reads as follows:

On motion by Mr. REED to amend the part proposed to be inserted by the reported amendment by striking out all after the word "Senate", on page 2, line 7, down to and including the word "circuit", in line 10, page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof certain other words—

If the Senator will refer to the latter part of the first column of page 6662 of the RECORD, he will see the following:

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 7, beginning with the word "two", it is proposed to strike out through line 10, and to insert in lieu thereof "an additional circuit judge for the eighth circuit."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kansas that his amendment is not in order at present. There is an amendment pending, offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer my amendment as an amendment to the amendment. As a matter of fact, the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico was a substitute for the whole House bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The amendment I offered was on another occasion, when we attempted to obtain consideration of the bill. I had forgotten it. I withdraw it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The effect was the same, although the amendment may have been in different form. The effect was to strike out line 9 and to reenact line 10.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I was not present at the time this motion was made. This happens to be the judicial circuit from which I come. I think I am somewhat familiar with the work of the circuit court of appeals.

Reviewing the history, the circuit court for many years had three judges. Then it had four judges, and it became badly in arrears. Of the four judges, for several years one was quite sick and unable to perform any substantial work. Finally, in 1937 the judicial conference found that the present number of judges in the sixth circuit was inadequate, and recommended, I think, an additional judge.

On May 31, 1938, we created an additional judgeship for the sixth circuit, making a fifth judge. That position, however, was not filled until February 1939, when Dean Arant was appointed. He has been there only about a year, and a substantial improvement has already been made in the docket; and, as the Senator from Kansas explained, the judges of that court feel that an additional sixth judge is not necessary.

The judicial conference in 1938 recommended a sixth judge, but in 1939 the judicial conference made this statement:

Progress has been made in the disposition of these cases and the conference believes that with the present force of circuit judges—

That is, five, all active judges—the circuit court of appeals will be able in the near future to make its docket fairly current.

So they did not recommend an additional judge for the sixth circuit. That was the action taken last fall, and it has been followed by the action of the judges themselves.

I should like to read to the Senate a telegram which was received by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee on April 2, 1940:

It is the view of all the judges of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals that progress with the docket during the present term indicates there is no need for a sixth judge.

XENOPHON HICKS,
Senior Circuit Judge.

You have already heard the letter written to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] by Judge Simons. It seems perfectly clear that all the judges agree that, while they are still somewhat behind in the docket, they are catching up on the docket, and that the situation, therefore, is purely temporary, and one which five judges can handle.

I have talked to lawyers in Cincinnati, which is the seat of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, and their opinion is the same. They are tremendously pleased with the progress which has been made, and they feel that five judges can handle the work. Before we create an additional position carrying a salary of $12,500 and clerks and stenographers, it seems to me that certainly the need and necessity for such a position should be clearly shown to the Senate.

Under present circumstances I see no evidence whatever that any additional judge is needed at this time. I ask, therefore, that the provision for this judge be eliminated. I may say that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] himself made that motion when this bill came up on March 25, and evidently at that time was of the same opinion. I do not need to cite all the discussion which took place at that time.

I therefore respectfully ask that this motion be put to a vote, and on that vote that we have the yeas and nays.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I did not participate in the debate on Friday regarding this proposal to create a new judgeship in the sixth circuit, because I had not informed myself upon the subject. Not being a lawyer, I had no professional knowledge of the situation. Under such circumstances, it occurred to me that official spokesmen for the bar in the State of Michigan ought to be competent witnesses. Therefore I sought this professional advice. I wish now to present it to the Senate.

Mr. Julius H. Amberg, president of the Michigan State Bar Association—Mr. Amberg coming from Grand Rapids—telegraphed as follows:

I am strongly of the opinion that United States Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals does not need an additional judge at this time. Fifth judge added not long ago. Should be sufficient.

I may further identify Mr. Amberg as one of the leading lawyers of Michigan; and, if there are any political implications in the situation, I may add that he is one of the leading Democrats of Michigan.

I now present a telegram from Mr. Laurent K. Varnum, president of the Grand Rapids Bar Association:

Experience local attorneys indicates sixth circuit court steadily catching up with docket and reducing time required for appeals. This would imply that court as now constituted is more than able to hear all current cases. Our experience, therefore, confirms court's own recommendation that no additional judge necessary at present time.

This message speaks for the bar association of Grand Rapids, Mich.

I now present a message from the president of the Detroit Bar Association, Mr. Ferris D. Stone:

The lawyers in our firm, Miller, Canfield, Paddock & Stone, who are familiar with situation at Cincinnati, are unanimously of the opinion that an additional circuit judge is not needed there at present time.

I now present a telegram from former circuit judge Arthur C. Denison, who sat upon this particular court with a very honorable and able record for many years, who resigned, and who is now in practice in Cleveland, Ohio. He is certainly one of the most distinguished practitioners in the Middle West, and surely one who should know this court supremely well. Judge Denison's telegram read as follows:

I agree with Judge Simons that there is no need for an additional circuit judge.

Mr. George E. Brand, who is one of the leading practitioners in the area served by this court and whose home address is Detroit, presents this testimony:

I do not believe increase in bench Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, necessary or desirable. In my opinion, court as now constituted is well able to carry present and prospective case load.

I quote another eminent practitioner, Mr. Frank E. Robson, of Detroit:

Am informed you will ask reconsideration bill creating additional judge this circuit court of appeals. My experience in that work completely in hand and I understand present bench all agreed another member unnecessary. Trust you will be successful.

I read a further telegram, from James K. Watkins, former United States district attorney of Detroit, and who is thoroughly familiar with the subject which he discusses. Mr. Watkins testifies as follows:

I wish to express my opposition to proposal creating additional judgeship circuit court appeals Cincinnati. Believe it entirely unnecessary, as I understand court is abreast of docket and judges not seeking any help. Urge you oppose proposal.

Certainly one of the leading lawyers in the entire Middle West is Mr. Leo M. Butzel, of Detroit. Mr. Butzel testifies as follows:

Believing that Sixth Circuit Appeals Court as presently composed of five members is functioning efficiently, expeditiously, and to satisfaction of public and litigants, I urge your opposing any legislative effort to increase the number of judges, and personally share the unanimous opinion of present judges that such legislation is unnecessary.

Finally I present a telegram from Hal H. Smith, a partner in one of the leading law firms of Detroit:

Earnestly hope you secure reconsideration bill authorizing additional judge sixth circuit. Am advised court unanimous in opinion not needed. Am sure would embarrass administration of justice.

Mr. President, I have no opportunity to know personally of this problem, because, I repeat, I am not a lawyer; but appointments to this circuit court of appeals are for life, and it seems to me the necessity for any increase in the bench should be as emphatic as the tenure is permanent. I am totally unable to comprehend why the Senate of the United States should insist upon forcing an additional judge upon this bench against the united recommendation of the court judges and against the recommendation of the spokesmen of the bar in one of the States affected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is unfortunate that the Senator from Ohio was not here Friday, because we went into this whole matter on Friday.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HERRING in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I have read every word of the debate, and I know the arguments which the Senator made, and they did not impress me, in reading them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no doubt the Senator read the debate, but if he had been here Friday and had presented his argument as he has today, the disposition the Senate made of the matter on that occasion probably would have been final, and we would not have to consider it again today on a motion practically to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to strike out the provision for this additional judge.

I do not know the lawyers who have come in at the last minute and testified, by telegram, after this matter has been pending for more than a year, after the Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously, after making its own investigation, recommended the creation of this additional judgeship, and after the House committee did likewise, and passed the bill 3 or 4 weeks ago without any protest on the part of anyone in the judicial circuit affected. As I stated Friday, if it had not been that the technical situation prevented the House from passing the Senate bill instead of its own bill, this matter would have been disposed of, and we would not now be here arguing it again.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Am I correct in supposing that the Senators who went out and examined into the situation did so in 1938, before the fifth judgeship had been created, and a year, even, before the fifth judge was appointed?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator is wrong about that. My recollection is, though I can be corrected, that they actually recommended two additional judges for the sixth circuit, and only one additional judgeship was created. My memory may be wrong as to that.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CHANDLER. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], when that question was raised in the Senate Friday—and it will be found on page 4421 of the RECORD—stated that the late Senator Logan, of Kentucky, made the investigation early in 1939, and recommended the additional judgeship. The Attorney General of the United States, in his report to Congress on the 3d day of January this year, recommended the additional judgeship, and the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, who is not now present because of illness in his family but who took an active part in the debate Friday, stated that the committee received all the letters from the judges which have been read here, but those letters were not sufficient to change the minds of the members of the Committees on the Judiciary of both the House and the Senate, who unanimously recommended the additional judgeship for the sixth circuit on the showing made, and after the investigation by the late Senator Logan, of Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank my colleague for his statement. That is an accurate résumé of what occurred here last Friday.

It should be kept in mind that Judge Simons was opposed to this extra judgeship when the condition of the docket of the court was deplorable, when it actually resulted in a denial of justice to the people in the four States in the circuit. He was against it then—why, I do not know, and I have no way of knowing. It is true that Judge Hicks, who is the senior judge, sent a telegram here the other day saying that it was the unanimous view of all five judges that an additional judge was not needed. I do not intend to go into any question which would arouse controversy on that bench among the judges who sit on it, but I think I know that that telegram does not represent the unanimous view of the judges in that circuit.

It is said that improvement has been made in the condition of the docket, and no doubt improvement has been made in the last year or two. The judges certainly should have made some improvement, because of all the circuits in the United States I dare say the sixth, so far as the currency of its docket was concerned, was in as bad a condition as any other circuit. But it still is not current. There are judges on that bench whose desks are now piled up with cases which have not been considered or heard. The only reason why they have made any improvement, as I stated on Friday, has been because they sat all last year, without vacation, working day and night, in order to improve the condition of their docket.

It seems to me the question which should concern the Senate, and certainly the question which concerns the litigants and people, as well as the lawyers, in that circuit, is whether we are to say to these judges, "You have made improvement in the condition of your docket. You did it by working all the year, without vacation, and now, in order that it may be kept current, we are going to require you to do the same thing in the future." I do not think that is fair to the court or fair to the litigants or the lawyers.

The question of an extra judge in that circuit has been pending here for more than a year. A bill providing for an extra judgeship passed the Senate a year ago and went to the House. The House agreed to it; the bill came back to the Senate, and now when it is under consideration, at the last moment, certain Michigan lawyers get busy and telegraph here that the additional judge is not needed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Michigan lawyers did not get busy, and the Senator misstates the case.

Mr. BARKLEY. Someone got busy. The Michigan lawyers sent these telegrams.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will yield, I telegraphed these people asking for their opinion, because I wanted their opinion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then the Senator from Michigan, at the last moment, after the matter had been under consideration a year and a half, got busy himself and obtained these telegrams.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That does not affect the validity of the testimony.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator had a right to do it, but it nevertheless creates some mystery in my mind as to why, after a year and a half, when everyone recommended this extra judgeship until within the last few months, when by overwork some of the judges have been able to bring their docket to a condition somewhere near being current, lawyers and Senators should now find it incumbent upon them to oppose the extra judgeship.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to relieve the Senator's misapprehension further on that score. I was given to understand that the committee itself had come to the conclusion that it would better wait another year before the sixth circuit was given another judge. I did not anticipate that this was coming to an issue.

Mr. BARKLEY. To what committee does the Senator refer?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, presided over by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator certainly was not informed as to the action or attitude of the Judiciary Committee, because in the first place the Judiciary Committee recommended this judgeship; the House Committee recommended it; the measure came back to the Senate again, and the Judiciary Committee within the last 3 or 4 weeks recommended it. If the Senator had been as alert with respect to that as he usually is with respect to other matters he would have known that the committee in the last three weeks again had recommended the appointment of this judge, in spite of the letter of Judge Simons that an extra judge was not needed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have already yielded to the Senator from Kansas. I will yield to the junior Senator from Michigan later.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I called attention Friday, and I again call attention to the RECORD of Monday, March 25, when the Senator in charge of the bill, the senior Senator from New Mexico——

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes, the Senator called attention to that and read the RECORD about it.

Mr. REED. Well, I think that in a matter of this importance we cannot lay too much emphasis on doing the right thing, whatever that may be. The Senator from New Mexico, in charge of this bill, when he called it up under the unanimous-consent procedure, moved to strike out the additional judge for the sixth circuit, which supports the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in what he has said, and, if there is any doubt about it, all one needs to do is to read the statements of the Senator from New Mexico on pages 3345 and 3346 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The only opposition to the suggestion or the motion of the Senator from New Mexico, in charge of the bill, came from the senior Senator from Kentucky, the majority leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that matter was also explained Friday, and I do not know that it is necessary to explain it again. But the Senator from New Mexico had his attention called to the letter from Judge Simons, and as I understand, based on that alone, the Senator from New Mexico indicated that he was willing to eliminate the provision for the judge in question in order that the matter might go to conference, so that it could be worked out there, in view of additional information that might be received. But the Senator from New Mexico, merely because he had his attention called to Judge Simon's letter, and acted upon it—whether he had gone into it sufficiently or not I need not now state, and I do not, and I am sure the Senator acted in good faith about the matter——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. In a moment. Let me finish. The mere fact that the Senator from New Mexico, based upon a letter from one of the judges, was willing at the time to eliminate the provision for the judgeship in order that the matter might go to conference, certainly ought not to bind, and I am sure the Senator from New Mexico would not want to bind, the Senator in passing upon this question.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REED. May I suggest that the date of the letter written by Judge Simons to the Senator from Michigan was more than a week subsequent to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico to strike this section from the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. There had been a letter here from Judge Simons, because the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] called attention to it. It may have been a different letter.

Mr. REED. And still later, if I may suggest, came a letter from the senior circuit judge. I am very sorry to hear a member of the circuit court of appeals charged with misrepresentation, but the senior circuit judge in a telegram sent subsequent to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico, said it was the unanimous opinion that a sixth judge was not necessary. So the Senator from New Mexico could not have been actuated either by the letter from Judge Simons to the Senator from Michigan or the telegram of the senior circuit judge to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know whether or not anyone in Michigan has instituted the movement to telegraph to Senators to oppose an additional circuit judge in the sixth circuit, but in a telegram received by me this morning I was informed that that was the fact. I received one telegram, which was a straight, simple protest against the creation of an additional judgeship. I received a second telegram from a close personal friend of mine, who is a prominent Republican lawyer in the State of Michigan, saying that he had been requested to telegraph and ask me to oppose an additional judge in the sixth circuit. This may have all emanated from the opposition of my colleague to the creation of an additional judge, but it struck me when I read the telegram that evidently there was some kind of a movement on foot among a certain class of lawyers in the State of Michigan to oppose the creation of this additional judgeship.

If the Senator will bear with me further——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I am obliged to leave shortly to go to Pennsylvania, and I should like to make a very brief statement. The situation in the sixth circuit is a peculiar one. As I stated the other day, it is probably the source of more patent litigation than any other circuit in the United States, because of the concentration of the automobile industry, the refrigeration industry, and industries of similar character, centering around Detroit, Cleveland, and Dayton, Ohio. The large industrial section thereabouts has caused a tremendous amount of such litigation. I am reliably informed that the senior district judge in Detroit devotes practically all his time to patent litigation, and that there is much patent litigation taken care of by other judges.

As the Senator from Kentucky knows, and as I am sure the junior Senator from Ohio knows, we have today on this bench a judge who came from the Commerce Court, which I believe was abolished; at least he came from a court that was abolished—Judge Julian W. Mack. It is well known that he is not active on that bench at all.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I will yield in a moment. He is a New Yorker. He is not a resident of the sixth circuit. He is listed as one of the sixth circuit judges, but I do not believe that Judge Mack has been active on that bench for many years.

The Senator from Ohio asked me to yield. I call his attention to the fact that the Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Judge Mack has not been active for a good many years. He never was very active in the sixth circuit, and he is not counted among the five judges.

Mr. BROWN. Judge Mack was active on that bench some years ago. He is still listed as a member of that bench, and he is absolutely inactive at this time.

Mr. TAFT. His activity was only intermittent, however; he was active only on occasion.

Mr. BROWN. He is still a member of that court and is still listed as such, but he is doing nothing, and has done nothing for the past 2 years, and there is the possibility that he will do nothing.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator, though, does not claim that he is one of the regular judges of the sixth circuit, does he?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; he is one of the regular judges of the sixth circuit.

Mr. TAFT. He would make a sixth judge—or the proposed appointment would make a seventh, if Judge Mack should be counted.

Mr. BROWN. In 1938, as was stated the other day—and it is unfortunate that we have to go over this matter a second time—the addition of two judges was recommended to that bench. We created one additional judgeship in 1938, late in the year. The judicial conference recommended an additional judge in 1938. The Attorney General, in 1938 and again in 1939, in a report dated January 3, 1940, recommended an additional judge in addition to the one, Judge Arant, who just went on the bench.

I do not know what Judge Simons' purpose is in this matter. I give him credit for being entirely sincere, as I do the lawyers. But Judge Simons' own letter says that they do not expect that this docket can be cleaned up until another year has passed, and as the Senator from Kentucky has well said, the judges on that bench—Judge Simons, Judge Hamilton, Judge Hicks, Judge Allen, and Judge Arant—are working more than the number of hours they ought to work in order to give the service which this busy circuit requires.

If Judge Simons admits that he cannot clean up this docket for a period of a year, it seems to me he ought to welcome rather than refuse help.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Michigan has twice made the statement, once Friday and once this morning, that the Attorney General this year recommended an additional circuit judge in the sixth circuit. I hold in my hand the report of the Attorney General for 1939, from which the Senator from Michigan quoted Friday, and again today. On page 5 of that report I find these recommendations of the Attorney General, not consistent with what the Senator from Michigan, undoubtedly through a lack of information or by reason of not making a careful examination of the facts, has stated. Here is what the Attorney General said on page 5 of this last report:

> The judicial conference held on September 29, 1938, recommended the following permanent increases in judicial positions:
> One circuit judge for the sixth district.

As I understand, that judgeship has been created, and that judge is serving.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. REED. I am now reading from the report of the Attorney General. The Attorney General goes on to say:

> The judicial conference held on September 28, 1939, called attention to the urgency of this measure. In addition to the judicial conference for 1939 renewed its recommendation for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the eighth circuit.

To which, Mr. President, I have never made any objection.

Then the Attorney General suggests certain district judges, but no further circuit judges; and he closes that part of his report on page 5 with this language:

> I concur in the foregoing recommendations.

Which do not include a recommendation from the judicial conference for an additional judge for the sixth circuit, but do include an additional judge for the eighth circuit.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the Senator and I have had some controversy over that point. I think the Senator means to state the facts as they are, and I certainly mean to state them as they are. If the Senator will go back to the Attorney General's report for 1938, he will find this language in the report of the judges as quoted by the Attorney General:

> The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has a large accumulation of cases—

I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Kansas while I am trying to clear up what I consider to be a misapprehension.

In the report of the judicial conference in 1938, the judges—that is, the Chief Justice and the senior judges of the various circuits—said:

> The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has a large accumulation of cases, and it is apparent that in order to secure the prompt disposition of its work an additional judge will be needed even after the existing vacancy is filled.

As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] knows, at that time we created an additional judgeship in the sixth circuit. The judicial conference had asked for its creation. At approximately the time we passed the legislation, reference was made to the fact that the existing vacancy had not been filled, and an additional judgeship was requested.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is aware, of course, that in the following year, 12 months later, the judicial conference reversed its position and said that the additional judgeship was no longer necessary.

Mr. BROWN. I am coming to that.

On September 29, 1938, the judicial conference recommended one more circuit judge for the sixth circuit. That was in addition to the then existing vacancy, which was not a vacancy caused by death but a vacancy created by Congress through the creation of an additional judgeship.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator aware of the fact that although——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BROWN. I do not yield just now. I wish to make this statement so that the Senator from Kansas can understand it.

Then, on January 3, 1940, the Attorney General—not the judicial conference, but the Attorney General—referred to the recommendation made in 1938. I grant that that recommendation was withdrawn in 1939, but I am relying on the statement of the Attorney General. On January 3, 1940, he said that there was still need for an additional judge in the sixth circuit. That statement was made, I repeat, on January 3, 1940, in his report for the year 1939. I therefore rely upon his statement, upon the statement of the late Senator Logan, upon the investigation by the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], upon the vote of the Senate taken last year, upon the investigation by the Senate Judiciary Committee, the vote of the House of Representatives, and the investigation made by the Judiciary Committee of the House. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] ask us to overturn all that because in 1939 the judicial conference withdrew its recommendation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's contribution. I wish to add only a word.

A while ago I indicated that I was not certain whether or not the telegram of Judge Hicks represented the unanimous view of the court. I based that statement on this fact: I happen to be familiar with the work of that court. One of the judges—Judge Hamilton—comes from my State, and he is one of the hardest working judges on any bench in the United States. He was a district judge, and 4 or 5 years ago he was promoted to the circuit bench. His home is in Louisville, and his office is in the Federal Building when he is at home.

Last fall, when I was in Louisville, I happened to be in the office of Judge Hamilton; and, knowing that he had worked all summer in order to help catch up with the docket, I brought up the matter of an additional judge, and he very positively indicated to me at that time that another judge was needed. If he has reversed his opinion, or changed his view about it, I have not been so advised by him; and I think that if he had changed his view about it he would not hesitate to advise me.

That is the reason why I said what I did a while ago—that if Judge Hick's telegram meant that all the judges had changed their view about the matter, I have not received any such information from at least one of the judges, with whom I am personally acquainted.

One further word: This matter has been twice passed on by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. It has been passed on by the House committee. It has been twice passed on by the Senate, and there has been no difference of opinion between the House and the Senate as to the need for the extra judge. Both House and Senate committees having passed upon it—the Senate committee having passed upon it, twice—House having passed upon it once, and the Senate having already passed upon it twice, it seems to me that we ought not to reverse the action of the two Houses by adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the attention of Members of the Senate who were absent when this matter was rather thoroughly debated on Friday should be called to a statement made in that debate by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. He said:

> The late Senator from Kentucky, Mr. LOGAN, was for some years a member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. He was a very conscientious and able man. He was named to make the investigation of the sixth circuit.

Some doubt has been cast on when the investigation by Senator Logan was made. It was made in 1939. Senator Logan visited every court in the circuit, and visited the judges, and came back and reported to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary that an additional judge was needed in that circuit. It was largely upon his advice, based upon his investigation and knowledge of the matter, that the Senate committee concluded that the additional judge was needed, and that the committee should not pay too much attention to letters sent to Washington.

I regret that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who live in the circuit, were not present the other day during the debate on this bill. The whole matter was left to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. Naturally, I did not expect the Senator from Kansas to be able to tell the people of the sixth circuit whether or not they need an additional judge. So the opposition got reinforcements and came back this morning; but they do not have the facts. An attempt has been made to show that the investigation by Senator Logan was made 2 years ago. In fact, the investigation was made in the early part of 1939.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I can corroborate what my colleague says. I was intimately acquainted with Senator Logan's activities in regard to this question. We consulted about nearly everything that pertained to the section which we attempted to represent. There is no doubt of the fact that Senator Logan made his investigation in 1939, and he made it after Judge Arant, of Ohio, had been appointed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can confirm what the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] has said. I find that the late Senator Logan's recommendation was made in the early part of 1939. However, I still call attention to the fact which was fully discussed last Friday and again today, that in September 1939 the Judicial Conference stated that no additional judge in the sixth circuit was necessary. That statement has been confirmed by all the judges so far as their senior circuit judge may be believed.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to add only one word.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] has urged that, merely because a year may be needed to catch up with the docket, another judge ought to be appointed for life. That position seems to me to be absolutely untenable. We are gradually improving the docket in that circuit. While we created a fifth judgeship in May 1938, no judge was appointed. A vacancy was left by the President for nearly 10 months, until the 21st of February 1939, when Judge Arant was appointed. It is perfectly clear to the persons with whom I have talked that it is his work and his industry which have convinced everyone that, after all, five judges can handle the work. There has been no report since that time.

Senator Logan made his investigation just about the time Judge Arant was appointed. It is perfectly apparent that there has been no investigation since then. The committee has had no hearings this year on the subject. I do not see how we can go back of the decision of the judicial conference, composed of the judges themselves who are most anxious to clear up any situation which needs clearing up. I do not see how we can go back of the recommendation of five judges of the court itself, all of whom, according to Judge Hicks, the presiding judge, are opposed to the creation of an additional judgeship. How can we say that we know better than they? If they think they are going to subject themselves to tremendous work, what possible incentive have they to refuse to recommend a sixth judge? They would be the judges who would be most anxious to have a sixth judge if a sixth judge were necessary. Certainly, if there is not a clear and convincing case for an additional judge, there is no reason to provide for one. They have a good deal of patent litigation, but I see no reason to think that it is any greater in that circuit than it is in the second or third circuit or that it requires the appointment of an additional judge in the sixth circuit. The circuit has operated for many years. It was a great court and is a great court today. It is perfectly able to catch up with its work.

As Senators know, district judges are frequently appointed to serve on the circuit court of appeals. If one will go through the books, he will find district judges frequently appointed for such service.

There are some district judges in our district who are not hard worked.

I may say that the creation of an additional district judge in the southern district of Ohio was wholly unnecessary. The two judges in that district, the judge in Dayton and the judge in Cincinnati, today have not sufficient work to keep them busy. Those judges can serve on the circuit court of appeals if it is merely a question of catching up with a temporary situation; and that is all it is, and all it has been. Under those circumstances, I feel that the Senate should adopt my amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. This situation has been chronic. It has been that way for years and years.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; but we created a fourth judge only a few years ago, and we created a fifth judge last year; and if the number of cases filed in that court be compared with the number filed in other circuits, it will be found that five judges in that circuit are comparable to the number of judges in other circuits in relation to the number of cases filed in the circuit.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I only wish to take a moment of time. There has been so much discussion of this question that I think probably there is considerable confusion in the minds of Senators about this particular judgeship.

As a matter of fact, this judgeship was included in the Senate bill originally, and also in the House bill, largely upon the recommendations of the judicial conference and the Attorney General. In the case of all these judges, the committee in charge of this work has followed, as nearly as could be, the recommendation of the judicial conference. We have not followed it in every respect. Some judges have been added which the judicial conference did not recommend and some which they did recommend have not been added.

At the moment, I am thinking of the condition in the State of Ohio, and another amendment that I contemplated offering at the same time I made the suggestion that the provision for the judge in the sixth circuit, perhaps, should go to conference, was for an additional judge for the northern district of Ohio, not that I have any information at all as to the northern district of Ohio, for I do not have, but because of the recommendation made by the judicial conference, the last one in January of this year, which strongly urged that an additional district judge be created for the northern district of Ohio. I have not conferred with the Senator from Ohio about that; I have wanted to because I did not want to offer such an amendment without consulting him.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I am not advised as to the northern district of Ohio or the need of a judge there. I was speaking of the southern district of Ohio when, a moment ago, I referred to the creation of an additional district judge.

Mr. HATCH. I know the judicial conference recognized, as I suppose the Senator does, the need of an additional district judge in the northern district of Ohio. I might also mention the condition in the State of Kansas, because the Senator from Kansas the other day said something about packing the courts with judges. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that the judicial conference on more than one occasion has recommended an additional judge for the district court of Kansas; that has been included in bills offered in the Senate, and has been excluded by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. The Senator from Kansas realizes that situation, does he not?

I merely mention these things to show that the judicial conference and the judges are not infallible and that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary has attempted to exercise its own judgment and its own discretion in many of these cases. It tried to follow as nearly as it could the one invariable rule that judges should be created if they were needed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. I wish only to say to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico that I have carefully examined the recommendations of the Judicial Conference. He is correct in stating that it has more than once recommended an additional district judge for the State of Kansas, which the senior Senator from Kansas and myself thought unnecessary, and so told the committee.

My view of the recommendation of the Judicial Conference is that it is a maximum and not a minimum, and I think the committee takes the same view of it, because the Senator from New Mexico is only repeating what the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], said more than once last year, that the committee did not always follow, and could not always follow, the recommendations of the Judicial Conference.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it represents neither the minimum nor the maximum, in my opinion. We have weighed the recommendations of the conference and have given them great weight, for the recommendations of the Judicial Conference are entitled to great weight, but we have not always followed them. Sometimes we have withheld judges who were recommended and sometimes we have included judges who were not recommended.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Can the Senator explain why previously he offered an amendment similar to the one I have now offered?

Mr. HATCH. Yes. It was called to my attention, though not in the manner that has been explained here on the floor—but that is immaterial—that there was doubt whether an additional judge was needed in the sixth circuit. I had no opportunity to investigate the sixth circuit, and the provision for such an appointment was included in both the House bill and the Senate bill. As a matter of fact, what the Senator from Kentucky says is absolutely true. This matter has been passed on two or three or four different times and not until recently, not until this bill came up, have I heard any question about an additional judge in the sixth circuit. I wondered about that. Why did not the Members of Congress in the other House raise some question last year when the bill was being considered originally in the House of Representatives? I was puzzled about it. I merely suggested that if the Senate agreed with me, the provision for that judge should be eliminated so that the matter would be in conference and we could investigate it.

I specifically said, I think, that I did not want to be understood as having an opinion on the subject either way, because I had no opinion on it either way, and I have none now except from what has been developed on the floor. It has been decided by both the Senate and the House; it has been decided by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. I wish to say, out of respect to the great Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Logan, that I worked with him quite closely in the committee, and I know he was most conscientious in his investigation of all districts and circuits, of course, but he was particularly concerned about the sixth circuit. I know that. I talked with him many times about it. He made more than one trip down there looking into the situation, and when he finally made the recommendation for the additional judge, after the former one had been authorized, he did suggest the appointment, and the committee accepted the recommendation of Senator Logan, of Kentucky, because we knew that he at least was convinced that the additional judge was needed in the sixth circuit.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me submit to the Senator a slightly different point of view with reference to this particular question. A year ago, when this matter came before the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I am a member, I certainly knew nothing about the status of the docket or the need for judges in individual districts or circuits, provision for whom was contemplated by the bill we then had before us, but I did know that the matter had been carefully investigated by very able Senators, who, as members of the subcommittee, individually had gone into the various districts and circuits. At that time I certainly accepted their report; I was convinced that it was right and proper; and therefore, Mr. President, in the committee I gladly voted to accept their recommendations and report the bill which is now before the Senate.

Within a few months our hearings went forward on a bill "to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes." One of the prime reasons for that bill as was explained to us by the senior judges of each of the several circuits who came to Washington to testify before our committee was to expedite the consideration of cases in the United States courts, both in the districts and in the circuits. It seemed that there would be much fruit to be gleaned from passing that bill. While that bill was yet on the calendar and had not been passed, this particular pending measure came before us, and at that time I moved on this floor that it be recommitted, simply that we might be given an opportunity to gain the experience that we hoped for upon the enactment of the bill to provide for the administration of United States courts. That motion to recommit was defeated. From then on, naturally, my own support would be given to my own committee, the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. President, it is worthy of note that the director of the administration of the United States courts was to be appointed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and among his duties, "under the supervision and direction of the conference of senior circuit judges," was—

> 2. Examining the state of the dockets of the various courts and securing information as to their needs for assistance, if any, and the preparation of statistical data and reports of the business transacted by the courts.

Again I quote:

> The director shall submit annually to the conference of senior circuit judges a report of the activities of the administrative office and of the state of business of the courts, together with the statistical data compiled and submitted by him to the senior circuit judges as provided by clause 2 of section 304.

In addition, Mr. President, this judicial administration measure provides that each year the senior circuit judge of each circuit shall call, at a time and place that he shall designate, but at least twice in the year, a council composed of the circuit judges for that circuit who are designated by the act a council for that purpose, and thereupon such action shall be taken as may be indicated for the control and direction and administration of the business of that circuit.

Furthermore, there is a new departure in the act providing not only for participation by the district judges with the circuit judges, but also for members of the bar to appear to consider the state of the business of the courts and to advise ways and means of improving the administration of justice within the circuit.

Mr. President, that measure became law on August 7, 1939. We now have an administrator appointed by the United States Supreme Court. He is functioning. The conference of senior circuit judges has been had. The conference within each of the circuits has been had. Based on that type of experience, it seems to me that if the report of the judicial conference is to be credited with reference to the lack of need for a judge in the sixth circuit, as it has been offered as an exhibit to that end, it should be equally sustained with reference to the recommendations as to the other districts which are comprehended within the bill.

Therefore, Mr. President, so far as the particular pending amendment is concerned, having in mind that either by way of designation of a district judge or otherwise the judges may obtain additional assistance, thus effectuating the expedition of business, I believe that when the conference of senior circuit judges, held after the administration bill had become law and after the other conferences had been held, report to us that there is no need for an additional judge in this circuit, they are entitled to full faith and credit in our eyes; and therefore, even though in this particular the amendment flies in the face of a bill which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary a year ago in March, I am willing to support that amendment, but will support the rest of the bill.

So, Mr. President, the Committee on the Judiciary acted at the time it did, in March 1939, properly on the advice and recommendation of the late Senator Logan and other members of the Judiciary Committee; but the circumstances definitely have changed since that date, and the senior circuit judges have so reported.

It seems to me the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is entitled to support, and a motion to reconsider the vote last Friday is in order, and I shall support it. I have explained, however, the position that all the members of the Committee on the Judiciary were in when that matter was before us a year ago.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only briefly to say that we ought to get down to brass tacks and see what the whole thing is about.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] would like to be President of the United States. They live in the circuit under discussion. I am a practicing lawyer in the circuit; and I will say that even if they were in the office of President of the United States, and were called upon to appoint a judge where one is very badly needed, I would give them my vote for the judge under the circumstances.

I do not know why those Senators were not active the other day when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] was telling every State except Kansas that it did not need a judge, including New Jersey and various other States. He made a very game fight without any help. He went out and come back with very vigorous, active reinforcements; but I have no reason to believe the Senate will undo what they did the other day when this precise matter was before them. The Senator from Kansas stood here by himself and asked for a yea-and-nay vote. Only four or five Members held up their hands, and he could not get a yea-and-nay vote on his amendment, which was precisely the same as the amendment the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT now has before us.

Just as we asked the Senate on Friday to reject the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, I ask the Senate now to reject the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. I sincerely hope the Senate will leave in the bill the provision for an additional judge in the sixth circuit, where he is badly needed, where litigants cannot get their cases adjudicated, where lawyers spend time and money waiting for a hearing.

Mr. TAFT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	Lodge	Sheppard
Austin	Frazier	Lucas	Slattery
Bailey	George	Lundeen	Smathers
Bankhead	Gibson	McCarran	Smith
Barkley	Green	McKellar	Stewart
Bone	Gurney	McNary	Taft
Brown	Hale	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Harrison	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Hatch	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Tobey
Capper	Herring	Norris	Townsend
Caraway	Hill	Nye	Vandenberg
Chandler	Holman	Overton	Walsh
Chavez	Hughes	Pepper	White
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	Wiley
Danaher	King	Russell
Donahey	La Follette	Schwartz
Downey	Lee	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TAFT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senators from Missouri [Mr. CLARK and Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on public business.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained in various Government departments.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are unavoidably detained.

I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senators from Missouri [Mr. CLARK and Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

Mr. KING. I have a pair with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR]. I understand that if he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] are unavoidably absent.

Mr. CHANDLER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] and permit my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—25

Adams	Gibson	Norris	Townsend
Austin	Gurney	Nye	Vandenberg
Burke	Hale	Reed	White
Capper	Holman	Smith	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Taft
Donahey	Lodge	Thomas, Idaho
Frazier	McNary	Tobey

NAYS—42

Bailey	Ellender	Lucas	Schwartz
Bankhead	George	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Green	McCarran	Sheppard
Bone	Harrison	McKellar	Slattery
Brown	Hatch	Maloney	Smathers
Byrnes	Hayden	Mead	Stewart
Caraway	Herring	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Chandler	Hill	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Chavez	Hughes	Overton	Walsh
Connally	La Follette	Pepper
Downey	Lee	Russell

NOT VOTING—29

Andrews	Clark, Mo.	King	Truman
Ashurst	Davis	Miller	Tydings
Barbour	Gerry	Minton	Van Nuys
Bilbo	Gillette	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Bridges	Glass	Pittman	Wheeler
Bulow	Guffey	Radcliffe
Byrd	Holt	Reynolds
Clark, Idaho	Johnson, Colo.	Shipstead

So Mr. TAFT's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

GREETING TO YOUNG LADIES REPRESENTING PAN-AMERICAN NATIONS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I rise to call the attention of the Senate to a very gracious and happy situation which at this moment exists within this Chamber. The 20 republics of the Western Hemisphere with whom we are associated in our problems have, through the pan-American diplomatic corps, sent to Washington 20 young ladies, one representing each of those countries, to present to the Pan American Union a portrait of the present President of the United States. I understand the artist who painted the portrait was compensated with money obtained by subscriptions donated by the members of the diplomatic corps, and from each of the countries represented a charming young lady has been sent to Washington to present the portrait, which will be hung in the Pan American Union Building in Washington. These young ladies flew from New York this morning and will return this afternoon.

I am happy to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that these 20 young ladies representing the pan-American countries are now in the gallery, and I suggest that the Senators rise and greet them.

(The Members of the Senate thereupon rose and applauded.)

Mr. BARKLEY. We are very happy to have these young ladies present and to welcome them on the mission which brings them to Washington, which I am sure will contribute much to the happy relations existing between the United States and these various countries in the Western Hemisphere.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	Lodge	Slattery
Austin	George	Lucas	Smathers
Bailey	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Bankhead	Gillette	McCarran	Stewart
Barkley	Green	McKellar	Taft
Bone	Gurney	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Brown	Hale	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Harrison	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Hatch	Murray	Tobey
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Townsend
Capper	Herring	Norris	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hill	Nye	Van Nuys
Chandler	Holman	Overton	Wagner
Chavez	Hughes	Pepper	Walsh
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Russell	White
Donahey	King	Schwartz	Wiley
Downey	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Ellender	Lee	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I propose to offer several amendments in the course of the afternoon, but I have no doubt of the outcome, and I am not in the least suffering under any delusion. However, I at least will have the satisfaction at the end of the session in knowing that the RECORD will contain the actual facts with regard to the additional judgeships proposed in the pending bill. As a matter of fact, there are about 24 more district judges on the Federal bench than the records show are necessary, and when I speak of "records" I refer to the records of the Attorney General's office.

I ask the distinguished Senator from New Mexico whether his committee held any hearings this year upon the bill which was reported as a substitute for the House bill?

Mr. HATCH. I do not recall that hearings in the committee were had on this particular measure. I think what we did this year was to take the reports of the separate Senators. Is the Senator discussing the New Jersey situation?

Mr. REED. I ask whether hearings were held this year——

Mr. HATCH. Oh, no; not this year.

Mr. REED. I wanted to have that matter made clear.

Mr. HATCH. Hearings were held last year on the original Senate bill.

Mr. REED. And the Senator's committee in making its report on the pending bill relied upon the hearings held last year, and not this year, so far as the pending measure is concerned?

Mr. HATCH. So far as the committee amendment is concerned, that is true, but it is identically the same as the bill on which we did hold hearings, upon which we relied in making our report. However, technically the Senator from Kansas is correct.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator from New Mexico will move over closer to me, or I will move over closer to him.

Mr. HATCH. I am always delighted to be close to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. I assure him and the Senate that for the next hour or so, or perhaps longer, we shall discuss this judgeship matter. I am fond of the Senator from New Mexico, even though my confidence in his desire to clean up the judiciary is a trifle shaken, as his desire in that respect does not seem to be as strong as his desire—as shown by the way he supported the measure—to clean up politics.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The remarks of the Senator from Kansas compel me to make a brief statement The Senator from New Mexico has never undertaken to clean up either the political situation or the judiciary. But that is beside the question. Especially has it not been the desire of the Senator to clean up the judiciary of the United States of America. The Senator desires to state that, with very very few exceptions, the judiciary of the United States is mighty clean, and is one of the fine, wholesome things connected with the Government. I for one have been proud, for the most part, of the judges of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from New Mexico that I want to continue to be proud of the judiciary of the United States. However, what makes me fearful is the rate we are proceeding in packing the court with unnecessary judges, appointed for life, about which nothing can be done except to impeach them. These are not like persons we can hire and fire when their work is done. These men go on the pay roll and stay there until they die. The Senate ought to have more respect for itself than to impose additional judges on the taxpayers unless the necessity for them is shown to be absolute and clear.

I want to read and have appear in my remarks at this point a letter from a judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, William Hawley Atwell, one——

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. May I read the letter, and then I will yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. Will the Senator be good enough to tell me what amendment he is pursuing now?

Mr. REED. I am going to offer an amendment very shortly. I am speaking on the bill now.

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator is speaking on the bill in general?

Mr. REED. Do not worry. I assure the Senator from New Jersey that he is going to hear more than he desires from me this afternoon.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. What the Senator is going to say is that he is satisfied with what I have already stated.

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator from Kansas reminds me of Hitler; he hands out a threat in almost every statement he makes, and imputes some improper or ulterior motives to his colleagues. I do not think that is at all becoming to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Coming from the Senator from New Jersey, who last year admitted that a vacancy existed in a New Jersey judgeship because Boss Hague, of Jersey City, and he could not agree on who should be appointed, I do not think that statement makes much sense.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I am amused at all the attacks on the Senate floor against Boss Hague. If the gentlemen who want to attack Boss Hague will come to New Jersey and attack him, I think they will find that they will have their hands full, and that he will be able to take care of himself. He does not need me to defend him, and I do not propose to defend him. I merely wish to say that Boss Hague at his worst is better than the best of a number of political demagogues whom I have seen around the National Capital.

Mr. REED. Where is the Senator's mirror?

Mr. President, I now wish to read a letter from Judge William Hawley Atwell, of the northern district of Texas, which he wrote to me under date of April 4, 1940:

MY DEAR SENATOR REED: My attention has been called to your statement the other day with reference to additional Federal judges.

Of course, it would be presumptuous of me to seek to present my views upon any matter relating to some other State, or district, than my own, but you are exactly right when you declare that we already have too many Federal judges.

For instance, there are three judges in this district.

That is his own district.

One judge can do the work, and, certainly, no more than two are necessary.

We also have seven or eight Assistant United States Attorneys, when one United States Attorney, and one assistant would be entirely sufficient.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I wish the Senator from West Virginia would be kind enough to permit me to finish the letter, and then I shall be very glad to yield to him.

I happen to know something about a great many of the districts in the United States, and if you will go carefully into the different Federal departments you will find a vast increase in personnel, which is almost wholly unnecessary.

I am writing this as a taxpayer, as well as an official.

With kind personal regards, I am

Yours very earnestly,

WM. H. ATWELL, Judge.

I had no acquaintance with the writer of this letter before the debate was broadcast over the United States, and the letter came to me purely voluntarily. I thought it was worthy of insertion in the RECORD.

As I have said, I have no illusions about these things. The majority on the other side will defeat every amendment I shall offer; but so far as district judges are concerned, I shall show for the RECORD before I finish that with one exception none of the judges provided in the bill is necessary. I make an exception of the southern district of New York. To that additional judge I shall make no objection.

I now yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask the able Senator from Kansas whether the judge whose letter he has read is a State or Federal official.

Mr. REED. He is a United States district judge, writing me on his official stationery, from his own chambers.

Mr. NEELY. Did I correctly understand the Senator to read from the letter that there are three judges in that district, and that only one is needed?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. NEELY. Then, Mr. President, I ask the able Senator from Kansas if he will join me in an amendment which I shall presently offer, to abolish the judgship held by this particular official, so that there will be only one too many judges left in that district?

Mr. REED. Knowing the Senator from West Virginia as well as I do, I thought he might do something of that kind, knowing very well, of course, that I should not want to punish a man who has the courage to write the truth.

Mr. NEELY. I am certain the Senator would not; but I am also sure that he is so patriotic and so deeply interested in the financial welfare of the country that he would not want to pay, out of the Treasury, three judges to do the work which this judge says should be done by one. Let us abolish this judge and thereby relieve the taxpayers of the burden of paying his salary. Will the Senator support such an amendment? If he will, I shall offer it. I do not know whether the gentleman is a Republican or a Democrat.

Mr. REED. Neither do I.

Mr. NEELY. And I do not care; but I should like to remove from the pay roll one judge, who in effect, says that he is superfluous.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from West Virginia join me in a resolution taking about 24 more off the pay roll?

Mr. NEELY. If the Senator can show that any other judges in the United States have said, in effect, that they are unnecessary to the public welfare, I shall join the Senator in striking them off, even though there be a hundred of them.

This judge has made a very patriotic statement. He says, in substance, "There are three of us down here, and two of us have nothing to do." In the circumstances, this judge should be given the opportunity to return to private practice.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, last Friday I put into the RECORD some statements showing the decline in the volume of litigation, as against a tremendous increase in the number of Federal judges. Since 1921, through the Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and Roosevelt administrations, 87 district judges and 22 circuit judges have been added to the Federal bench.

Because my good friend from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] admitted that his committee had held no hearings this year, and that the bill is based entirely upon the hearings which the committee held a year ago, I have gone back and examined the record of the hearings. I have it before me. I hold in my hand the Senate hearings of the Judiciary Committee last year, before it submitted its bill at that time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am compelled to leave the Chamber to attend a hearing of the so-called Monopoly Committee, and I shall have no opportunity to hear the address of the able Senator. Before departing from the Chamber, I will submit a brief statement.

For a number of years I have believed there have been too many Federal and State judges. When the Republicans were in power, as I recall, a request came to the Judiciary Committee for the creation of 25 Federal judgeships, largely district judgeships.

Mr. REED. I believe that is correct.

Mr. KING. I studied the matter and reached the conclusion that in a few instances only the demand for additional judges was justified.

It was alleged that the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act called for a large increase in the number of Federal judges. In some States a large number of cases were brought under the Volstead Act, but I believed that the time would come when that class of litigation would largely disappear. Many citizens—and I was among them—believed that there would be a reaction against the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act and they would be repealed. It was my view that the situation would soon change—so that there would be no justification for the creation of a large number of judgeships to deal with the Volstead Act.

Let me say parenthetically that some of the judges appointed following the Twenty-five Judgeship Act happened to be earnest advocates of the Volstead Act and were supporters of the new judgeship bill.

Since the Democrats have been in power, and there have been demands for increases in the number of judges, I have favored a few of such requests for an increase in the number of judges, but have believed that the situation did not call for the increases demanded. I do not want to be critical of our judicial system; but if one visited the English courts and perceived the expedition with which business was transacted, the celerity with which cases were disposed of, the earnestness and zeal of the lawyers, I think he would feel that we have fallen short in the administration of our judicial system. We take too long a time to try cases. Judges are too tolerant of lawyers. Oftentimes lawyers impose upon the courts and contribute to the delays in the final disposition of pending cases. As I have indicated, postponements occur when not warranted, and cases are not pressed for trial when they should be. The result was in many districts there was an accumulation of cases which would not have resulted if there had been zeal and earnestness on the part of lawyers and if the courts had been as earnest and zealous as they should have been in the disposition of matters pending before them.

A year or two ago I was told that in one of the States there were nearly as many judges—I am now speaking of State judges—as there were in England, Scotland, and Wales. A few years ago I visited an English court. Several felony cases were disposed of during the day's session. In some State courts, in some Federal courts, 3 or 4 days are not infrequently consumed in disposing of four felony cases, such as I am referring to.

To repeat, I do not wish to be critical of our judicial system. We have judges of great integrity, probity, and ability, and lawyers of great skill and ability. But there are students of our judicial system who think there should be some changes leading to a more expeditious method of disposing of cases. Many people refuse to go into the courts because of the great cost involved.

I do not believe the bill under consideration should be passed in its present form. Some of the judges provided for probably are necessary, but I do not like what some call this wholesale system of creating judges.

Mr. REED. Would it interest the distinguished Senator from Utah if I interrupt him to say——

Mr. KING. I am through, and I thank the Senator for permitting me to interrupt him.

Mr. REED. That in the study I have made from the records of the Attorney General's Office—for the Judiciary Committee did not make it—every docket in every district for which an additional judge is proposed is in the best shape it has been in in 10 years.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is himself too good a lawyer and was too able a judge to place very great reliance upon statistics or figures so far as court work is concerned. If the Senator from Utah wants a very fine and fair analysis of present-day conditions in the courts, I refer him to the statement I placed in the RECORD last Friday by Judge Kimbrough Stone, of the eighth circuit, whom I know very well. He points out several matters which should be taken into consideration, which I know would excite and intrigue the Senator's attention. If he will read that statement, he will get a great deal of pleasure, I am sure, as well as information. It is to be found on page 4422 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KING. I appreciate the suggestion made by my friend, and I shall avail myself of the earliest opportunity to examine the statement. I wish to say that if I should vote for this bill, it would be largely because the able and distinguished Senator from New Mexico underwrites it. I have such confidence in him, in his integrity, in his appreciation of the needs of our Federal courts that I am loathe ever to differ from him.

Mr. HATCH. May I say to the Senator from Utah that, of course, I greatly appreciate what he says, but the Senator from New Mexico does not want anyone to vote for the bill on that ground at all. In the first place, the Senator from New Mexico has only made personal investigation as to two circuit judges and those the Senator from New Mexico had charge of were eliminated from the bill. The Senator knows how the work of the committee was carried on. The bill does come from the Committee on the Judiciary with the recommendation of that body, after the necessity for each judge having been personally investigated by some member of that committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to say if there was concurrence between the distinguished Senator from Utah and myself——

Mr. KING. I have concurred, perhaps, too much already.

Mr. REED. That, after all, the taxpayer carries the load of expense of the United States courts, including any additions we may make thereto.

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly. Whatever we appropriate, the burden will rest upon the taxpayers of the United States, and we know that the burden is now very heavy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to refer briefly to a statement which has been prepared from the Department of Justice records, which I ask to have included in my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Number of circuit and district judges, by fiscal year

Year ending—	Circuit	District
June 30, 1930	39	154
June 30, 1931	38	157
June 30, 1932	38	159
June 30, 1933	40	161
June 30, 1934	40	159
June 30, 1935	40	161
June 30, 1936	40	166
June 30, 1937	42	167
June 30, 1938	43	176
June 30, 1939	47	180

Authority: Department of Justice records.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the statement shows the number of circuit and district judges by fiscal years for the last 10 years. In 1930 we had 39 active circuit judges; we now have 47.

In 1930 we had 154 district judges; we now have 180.

The table shows the increase from year to year.

In this connection, I wish to use another study that has been made, and I wish to repeat that every figure which I offer and every statement I make is based upon a study of the records of the Department of Justice. As I said on Friday, we received the utmost courtesy and the utmost cooperation from the Department of Justice in securing these records.

In the 10-year period from 1930 to 1940 criminal cases filed per judge—the Senate will note that the figures are per judge—the average number of criminal cases filed for the 10-year period was 332; in 1939, which is the last year for which complete figures are available, the number of criminal cases filed per judge was 192, which is 57.83 percent of the 10-year average.

The United States civil cases, that is to say, civil cases in which the United States is a party, the average for the 10 years is 109 per judge a year; in 1939, 68 such cases per judge were filed, which is 62.38 percent of the 10-year average.

The bankruptcy cases filed in the district court for the 10 years averaged 375; for 1939, there were 283, which is 75.46 percent of the 10-year average.

Other civil cases—that is, cases entirely between private litigants—filed during the 10-year period averaged per judge 149; filed in 1939 there were 120 such cases, which is 80.53 percent of the average for the 10 years.

I use these figures, Mr. President, to show the continued decline in litigation which these courts must handle. I have no desire unduly to detain the Senate except I do intend, Mr. President, to make a complete record upon this situation, but later, as fast as I can I shall present 10-year studies which were made for each district, because the Judiciary Committee, with all due deference to the Senator from New Mexico, did not make them.

I ask that this statement be included in my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Average number of criminal, civil, and bankruptcy cases filed and concluded per judge

	10 years, 1930-40	1 year, 1939	Percentage
Average number criminal cases filed in United States district court	332	192	57.83
Average number criminal cases concluded, United State district court	345	198	57.39
Average number United States civil cases filed in United States district court	109	68	62.38
Average number United States civil cases concluded, United States district court	115	78	67.82
Average number bankruptcy cases filed in United States district court	375	283	75.46
Average number bankruptcy cases concluded, United States district court	377	289	76.65
Average number other civil cases filed in United States district court	149	120	80.53
Average number other civil cases concluded, United States district court	156	132	84.61
Total filed	965	663	68.70
Total concluded	993	697	70.19
Judges in United States district courts	164	180	109.75

Does not include judges in Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and other territorial courts.

Authority: Department of Justice records.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there has been a good deal said here about delay in the courts. I am going to quote briefly from the highest authority in the United States as to the reasons for delay. I am not a lawyer; I am merely a layman; but I think I know that in almost every case that is tried one side or the other does not care whether the case ever goes to trial. It is not the fault of the judge. The counsel on one side or the other usually, I think, seeks delay and does delay the final adjudication of the case by any means he can use. This is what the judicial conference said on that subject at their September session 1939, last year—and I quote from page 3 of that report. As has been stated, of course, the judicial conference is composed of the Chief Justice of the United States and the senior judge from each circuit. Starting in on the question of arrearages, delays in the disposition of cases, they comment, as follows:

> There has been a marked reduction in the arrears of civil cases as disclosed by the tabular statement submitted by the Attorney General.

Then they give some relative percentage figures which, for the sake of brevity, I shall omit. Then they continue with this statement:

> We pointed out last year in considering the tabular statement submitted that to obtain a true picture of the state of judicial work it was necessary to consider the reasons why cases had been pending for a considerable time and not simply the number set forth. There are many reasons for the pendency of cases which do not involve inordinate delays. Thus, as we said last year, cases may be held to await a decision in some other jurisdiction which would make a trial unnecessary or affect the rights involved, or to await the result of negotiations for settlement; foreclosure suits may be suspended by moratorium or redemption statutes; the litigation may be ancillary to that in another jurisdiction or there may be an injunction restraining proceedings; or cases may be held awaiting appeals.

I quote that only because I have heard on this floor, and will doubtless hear again, about the delay in proceedings. I have read the highest authority in the United States as to its opinion and some of the reasons therefor.

Mr. President, I have also prepared, from the reports of the Attorney General of the United States, figured on a basis of 157 active judges, according to the Federal Register for 1939, which does not include vacancies, judges in the District of Columbia, or judges in our possessions, a statement of the average number of cases filed, terminated, and pending per judge at the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939. This statement is based on a 10-year average. May I have consent to have a copy of this statement included in my remarks at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Average cases filed, concluded, and pending, per judge, for year ending June 30, 1939

	Criminal			United States civil			Other civil			Bankruptcy
	Filed	Terminated	Pending end of year	Filed	Terminated	Pending end of year	Filed	Terminated	Pending end of year	Filed	Terminated	Pending end of year
Judge Otis Standard	-----	400	----	----	200	----	----	200	-----	-----	-----	-----
All districts except District of Columbia and possessions	207	213	61	74	84	58	99	115	110	322	329	336
Northern-southern Florida	220	231	82	60	71	42	100	134	113	65	71	84
Oklahoma: North, west, and east districts	288	354	57	77	85	57	85	109	83	177	170	189
California: Southern district	135	136	33	51	67	39	67	81	77	443	382	446

Authority: Reports of the Attorney General of the United States. Figured on basis 157 active judges, Federal Register for 1939. Does not include vacancies, judges in District of Columbia or possessions.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, at that point will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the Senator if, in his study, he made any analysis of the cases on the dockets, the type and the nature of the cases, the issues involved, and those matters?

Mr. REED. The Senator very well knows that that information is not readily available to anybody.

Mr. HATCH. I was quite sure of it, but I wanted to make it clear in the RECORD.

With the Senator's further permission, I will continue reading where he stopped from the highest authority on this question. I will continue reading immediately after his quotation from the judicial conference, and go on with this quotation:

> It cannot be too often emphasized that judicial statistics require analysis and knowledge of the circumstances to which they relate, and while they may in a general sense be of value to show a trend, they often afford an inadequate basis for a just conclusion.

That ends the quotation at this time. I merely wanted to quote the Senator's own authority, to be used in connection with his own statistics.

Mr. REED. There is no difference of opinion between the Senator from New Mexico and me upon that point. I am not a lawyer. I am a trifle familiar with the work of the courts, however, and I know what the Senator has just stated to be the truth; but, after all, there is a general average.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more right at that point?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. In connection with the Senator's remarks, and the statistics he included, and the high authority which he quoted, let me say that each and every judge included in this bill, with the exception of one, is recommended as being necessary by the supreme and high authority upon which the Senator relies. That one is the district judge for Florida.

The judge for the sixth circuit, referred to in the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which was voted down this morning, was included in this recommendation, but was afterward withdrawn.

I make that statement for the RECORD. I should not stop there, however. I should go on and say that the judicial conference even recommended at least three and possibly four other judges that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary did not see fit to insert in the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I missed a bet there. I was going to beat the Senator from New Mexico to that. I was going to call attention to the fact that his own committee did not include in the bill three or four judges recommended by the judicial conference, although, as the Senator stated, I think it did include one that was not recommended by the judicial conference. But in order that we may have an easy line to follow, I am going to deal with them district by district as the afternoon progresses.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to yield once more?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to put into the RECORD another statement which has just been furnished me.

The Senator from Kansas read from a letter from the district judge for the northern district of Texas stating that there were too many judges in that district. There would seem to be an implication, perhaps, that the present administration was responsible. The Senator did not say that, but that inference could have been drawn. So I asked to be informed when the last district judgeship was created in the northern district of Texas. It was in 1919. None has been created since that time—none by this administration.

Mr. REED. I have never contended, as the Senator from New Mexico very well knows, that this is a partisan question at all.

Mr. HATCH. I did not mean that.

Mr. REED. I think the creation of judgeships may, perhaps, have been just as much abused in Republican administrations as in the present Democratic administration.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. In a moment, if the Senator from New Mexico pleases. The only point I make is that we must come to an end of this process at some time. Litigation is declining. The number of judges is constantly increasing. We are faced with provision for three additional circuit judgeships, which this body has already voted on, and six additional district judgeships. As to the district judges, at least, while I shall not hope to convince my friends upon the other side—seeing that they have the votes, I know what they are going to do with them, and that is all right with me—I am going to make a record for the people of the United States, based upon the official figures from the Department of Justice of this administration.

Now, I shall be glad to yield to my friend the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, my only purpose in making the statement in the RECORD about the northern district of Texas is that I was somewhat puzzled about a judge from that district writing a letter stating that there are too many judges there. I am quite familiar with the northern district of Texas, and I have never before heard that charge made. I could not recall that this administration had created any judgeships for that district, but I wanted to be sure if there was a complaint like that involved; and that is the reason why I checked up on it. It seems to me that the judge, who evidently has been there for 20 or more years—21 years, at least, since the last judgeship was created—is a little lax and a little late in bringing the information to the attention of the Congress.

Mr. REED. I do not know how lax the judge may be. I do not know him. I never heard of him until I received his letter and looked up the record. I did not know how many judges there were in the northern district of Texas; but his letter was so illuminating and so straightforward and so candid, coming from an experienced judge actually serving upon the bench, telling about conditions in his own district and referring to the knowledge he had of many other districts, that I wrote to him before I would use the letter for the RECORD; and I received his reply in which he left the matter to my own judgment. I thought it was important, just as the five circuit judges in the sixth circuit have unanimously expressed belief that no additional judge is necessary; just as the judicial conference last year receded from its previous position, expressed in 1938, that an additional judge was necessary, and said, last year, that it was not necessary. Yet this body voted for the additional circuit judge; and just as surely this afternoon, as rapidly as the band wagon can roll over me, they are going to vote for six additional district judges, but not until, if it please you, Mr. President, I have made a record in this case that the people may have.

Last year the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], a membr of the Judiciary Committee, introduced into the RECORD a study made by Judge Otis, of the western district of Missouri. Judge Merrill Otis is one of the outstanding jurists of the United States, of any section, of any district, of any circuit, of any political party. I did not put his opinions into the RECORD. They were put in by the ranking Republican member of the Judiciary Committee. Judge Otis, in a carefully prepared analysis of the work of the 10 heaviest districts in the United States—his own district being the eleventh heaviest—reached the conclusion which appears in the RECORD of last year. I am not going to try to reintroduce it here.

It is already in the RECORD on the discussion of this bill, introduced by a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Judge Otis reached the conclusion that a judge of ordinary ability and of fair industry could dispose of 400 criminal cases in a year, could dispose of 200 civil cases to which the United States was a party, and could dispose of 200 civil cases in which both parties were private litigants.

I wish to compare that with the average number the judges disposed of in the year. Whereas Judge Otis held that judges of average industry and ability could dispose of 400 criminal cases, the average disposed of in all districts, not including the District of Columbia, was 213. Whereas he held, after analysis—and his analysis was given wide currency in the United States because of the standing of Judge Otis as a jurist—that a judge could dispose of 200 so-called United States civil cases, the average in all districts last year was 84. Whereas he found that, in addition to these two classes of cases, a judge could reasonably dispose without overworking himself of 200 other civil cases, the average per judge in the United States was 115.

Mr. President, I have heard a great deal of talk which would have made me shed tears for the sad fate of Federal judges on account of the way they have been overworked, and are being overworked now. The only thing which deters me is the avidity with which Members of this body grab judgeships, I would not say in every case, but frequently. I take it they are not going out of this body into a place where they are to be driven like slaves. We all know that some of our colleagues at the present time entertain the hope that they will be what they call elevated, or transferred, or whatever it may be called, to the Federal bench.

I hope that if my distinguished friend the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] wants a job on the Federal bench, he will get it. I will endorse him at any time but it will not help him any with the present administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I shall talk a moment more now, because I intend to make a complete record and I have worked hard on this question. I desire to show my colleagues how these judgeships are handled. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] told us that after Congress had created an additional circuit judgeship for the sixth circuit the President delayed the appointment from some time in 1938, if I remember the record correctly, to 1939, about 10 months. I referred last year to a vacancy existing in New Jersey because the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] and Mayor Frank Hague, of Jersey City, could not agree upon who should be appointed.

At that time, according to the Senator from New Jersey, the vacancy had existed 10 months, or 8 months, or whatever it was. I took the figure used by the Senator from Connecticut, who is a member of the committee. The vacancy has existed until almost the present time. It was filled within the last few weeks. If my memory serves me correctly, the Senate confirmed the nomination of a judge for that vacancy in New Jersey on April 2 last. I may be mistaken as to the exact date, but it was not very far from that date.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. The Senator from New Jersey probably has the date in mind. I yield to him.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I should like to correct the statement of the Senator from Kansas that the vacancy was filled within the last few weeks. As a matter of fact, the vacancy was filled last fall by an ad interim appointment; the judge assumed the position and has performed his duties since last fall.

Mr. REED. When was the nomination sent to the Senate?

Mr. SMATHERS. I do not know, but it was some time the early part of the session. The judge was appointed, however, last fall, and took the oath and performed the duties and has been serving since last fall.

Mr. REED. Anyway, Mr. President, there was a very long delay in filling the vacancy. At the same time, Congress was being asked to provide an additional judge for New Jersey, when a vacancy existed because of the inability of the powers that be in New Jersey to agree upon someone to appoint.

Mr. SMATHERS. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me to make one further statement, did it ever occur to him that the delay over this judgeship was brought about by reason of a congested Federal court docket in the northern part of the State and also one in the southern part of the State, so that those interested in both parts of the State wanted the new judge so that they could relieve the docket?

Mr. REED. The Senator from New Jersey has thought up something new since last year. He did not make that statement last year.

Mr. President, let me call attention to the fact that a special bill was introduced, Senate bill 488, creating a judgeship for the eastern district of Louisiana, on January 8, 1937, on the ground, which we hear so frequently urged, that another judge was badly needed. The committee, without holding hearings—and I want the Senator from New Mexico to correct me if I am wrong—reported the bill favorably on January 18, 1938.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The committee did hold a hearing, perhaps not on the particular measure to which the Senator refers, but I have a very strong recollection that the committee explored the entire situation in the State of Louisiana, in the different districts, following the recommendation of the judicial conference, and made recommendations, recommending the specific judgeship to which the Senator refers. I know the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] appeared before the committee, and perhaps the other Senator from Louisiana appeared, and others also appeared.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I should like to conclude my comment on the Louisiana situation, after which the distinguished Senator from Louisiana can probably deal with the matter more adequately.

On March 9, 1938, House bill 2709 was substituted on the calendar for the one to which I have referred, and it passed the Senate March 9, 1938, and was signed by the President on March 18, 1938. A man was appointed whose name I can spell but cannot pronounce. Will the Senator from Louisiana tell me how to pronounce the name of Adrian J. C-a-i-l-l-o-u-e-t? They have a peculiar way of their own about pronunciation in Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. It is pronounced Kī-you-et.

Mr. REED. This man was nominated on April 2, 1940, 3 years after the bill was introduced under a claim that an additional judge was badly needed, and 2 years and a little more after the additional judge was authorized by the Congress. Have I stated the matter substantially correctly, I ask the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator has in part. The able and distinguished Senator is in error, however, in stating that no hearings were held in reference to creating an additional judgeship for the district of Louisiana. Hearings were held. The additional judgeship was not only recommended by the judicial conference, but it was recommended by the Attorney General and by the judge of the district, Judge Borah, a nephew of the late lamented Senator Borah, who stated that the work before the court was ample to justify the creation of an additional judgeship, and that he needed help.

I appeared personally before the committee and testified. The Senator will find my statement in the report of the hearings. I presented to the committee a list of the pending cases and of the cases which had been disposed of, showed how far behind the court was, and the necessity for the creation of an additional judgeship at the time I appeared before the committee, and at the time the bill was reported. The bill was passed and became a law. The Senator is correct in stating that several years elapsed before the appointment was made. I regret that I had not the appointive power.

I hope the Senator will visit Louisiana, and acquaint himself with the charm and hospitality of the people and the great natural resources of the State, not only because he will be welcomed by all Louisianians but in order that he may get the contrast between the pure Anglo-Saxon speech of his State and the dulcet harmonies of our Creole French and some of the beautiful names in Louisiana, Caillouet being one of them.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that while I was with the Post Office Department I was, for one winter, superintendent of the southern division of the Railway Mail Service, with headquarters at New Orleans, and had a very delightful time there. I found the people of Louisiana to be very delightful people. Nothing whatever in what I have said should be taken as any criticism of the Senator from Louisiana. I am merely making the record that here was a judge provided on the ground of urgent necessity, and yet 3 years elapsed before the judge was appointed.

Mr. OVERTON. The necessity continued, and has continued up to this day.

EBERHART STEEL PRODUCTS CO., INC., VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 181)

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from New York. The only reason I might be reluctant to yield to him is that whenever he introduces a bill it costs the taxpayer money. However, I am so fond of the Senator from New York that I am glad to yield to him.

Mr. MEAD. In this instance we are saving the taxpayers a little money.

I ask the Chair to hand down a veto message from the President of the United States, which was sent to the Senate today and which I understand is at the desk.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I yield with the understanding that I am not surrendering the floor. I am simply yielding to accommodate the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Kansas that the matter in question is a privileged communication, and that the Senator from Kansas, by yielding, does not lose the floor.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the Senator for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, a bill (S. 1790) entitled "An act for the relief of the Eberhart Steel Products Co., Inc."

It appears from Government files that in 1920 the War Department entered into a series of contracts with the Eberhart Steel Products Co. for the manufacture of certain parts for military trucks. The sum of approximately $1,500,000 was paid by the Government for material accepted under the contracts. Some material was rejected on the ground that it had been manufactured pursuant to change orders which had not been issued in accordance with the requirements of the contracts. The differences between the Government and the contractor were settled by negotiations, which culminated in the acceptance by the Government of certain additional material and the payment of the further sum of approximately $375,000. The contractor, on the other hand, released the Government from any further liability. A part of the settlement involved the dismissal of a suit which the contractor had previously instituted against the Government in the Court of Claims.

In 1924 the contractor filed another suit in the Court of Claims, claiming further damages, some of which were alleged to have been caused by failure on the part of the Government to accept material in addition to that involved in the settlement. The Court of Claims held that the plaintiff was barred by the settlement from maintaining his action against the Government. It made a finding, however, that as a matter of fact the contractor had manufactured some additional material in accordance with the terms of the contracts which had been rejected by the Government.

Section 1 of the bill under consideration proposes to authorize the Court of Claims to determine the above-mentioned claim of the contractor, notwithstanding any failure of any Government official to give proper written orders for changes made in any of the contracts. It also proposes to waive any defense that the claimant is bound by the prior settlement or by the prior decision of the court. Section 1, however, contains a provision that no judgment that may be rendered shall exceed the amount heretofore found by the Court of Claims as the fair cost of manufacture of supplies left on the claimant's hands and manufactured in accordance with the terms of the original contracts and changes thereunder.

Section 2 proposes to confer on the Court of Claims authority to consider another claim, namely, a claim for losses and damages sustained by Eberhart Steel Products Co. in connection with dies, tools, plant, material, and equipment procured for making military truck parts, in reliance on assurances of officers of the War Department that additional orders would be given to the company for the manufacture of such parts. Section 2 also proposes to waive the defense that such officers lacked any authority to contract in behalf of the Government in such matters, or that such agreement was not properly executed.

The events to which this claim relates occurred about 20 year ago. As a result of lapse of time, the Government may be seriously handicapped in securing an accurate version of the facts and finding witnesses in support thereof. This difficulty is accentuated by the failure to include in the bill any maximum limitation on the amount that may be recovered under section 2. In the light of these circumstances, the Government may find itself dependent entirely upon the records produced by the claimant in support of the claim in determining the amount due, without any opportunity to check their accuracy. Moreover, the provisions of section 2 may constitute a highly undesirable precedent in other respects.

In view of the far-reaching and exceptional character of section 2 of the measure, I am unable to approve the legislation and am constrained to return the bill without my approval.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 15, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be referred to the Committee on Claims, with the accompanying bill, and printed.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, there is on the desk a message from the House on House bill 7922, making appropriations for the Executive Office, and so forth, which I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate.

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator for that purpose, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask the Senator to yield with the understanding that he does not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 7922, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
April 12, 1940.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 13, and 14 to the bill (H. R. 7922) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 17 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "; but no such transfer of funds shall be made unless the consolidation of administrative functions will result in a reduction of administrative salary and other expenses and such reduction is accompanied by savings in funds appropriated to the Federal Works Agency, which savings shall not be expended for any other purpose but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury"; and

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "unless the public-housing agency shall have adopted regulations prohibiting as a tenant of any such project by rental or occupancy,".

Mr. BYRNES. In connection with amendment numbered 17, for the RECORD I desire to state that the conferees had in mind that the reduction of savings which should be impounded in the Treasury referred to a reduction in savings of the various organizations comprising the Federal Works Agency, and not solely the administrative expenses of the Federal Works Agency.

I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to Senate amendments numbered 17 and 28.

The motion was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	Lee	Sheppard
Austin	Frazier	Lodge	Slattery
Bailey	George	Lucas	Smathers
Bankhead	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Barkley	Gillette	McCarran	Stewart
Bone	Green	McKellar	Taft
Brown	Gurney	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Hale	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Harrison	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hatch	Murray	Tobey
Capper	Hayden	Neely	Townsend
Caraway	Herring	Norris	Vandenberg
Chandler	Hill	Nye	Van Nuys

Connally	Hughes	Pepper	Walsh
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	Wheeler
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Russell	White
Donahey	King	Schwartz	Wiley
Downey	La Follette	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Seventy-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in about 5 minutes I shall offer an amendment to the bill. In the meantime, I wish to read into the RECORD two very short paragraphs from what Judge Otis said in his analysis, which was introduced last year by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. Judge Otis was speaking of the tendency of Congress—which we have manifested today—to grant more judges than are necessary. Judge Otis, speaking of the judges themselves, said:

> They would spurn any effort of any politician to secure the creation of some new judgeship for the mere sake of patronage, although his efforts be buttressed by some specious showing, or even by an honest showing of a need obviously transient. Packing a district court with unneeded judges is not only an economic waste; it is degrading and humiliating to every serving judge in the district affected. Responsible statesmen will welcome a measuring stick, if one can be devised, by the application of which to the work to be done in any district it can be determined whether a new judge is needed.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. As I recall, the Senator is not a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. REED. I beg to inform the Senator from Pennsylvania that I am not even a lawyer.

Mr. DAVIS. Did the Senator receive any information about a judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania? Was there any demand from the people of eastern Pennsylvania for a judge for the eastern district?

Mr. REED. Not so far as I know. I shall come to that matter later. I have made a rather laborious, but pretty full and accurate, analysis for each district, and I shall submit that in its turn.

I now wish to quote further from Judge Otis.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I will yield in a moment when I finish this quotation.

Judge Otis is a man of high standing, who has as much respect for the Federal judiciary and for the judicial conference as any man can have; and yet Judge Otis said this:

> Even the conference of senior circuit judges occasionally has been misled to suggest additional judgeships where there was no need. The conference and Congress would do well to consult the district judges on the ground and the organized bar, not for recommendations, but for facts. They might hope to get accurate information from such sources.

I now yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I merely wished to ask the Senator from Kansas whether he was addressing himself to any amendment he now has pending, or to the bill in general.

Mr. REED. I have been talking about the bill in general. In about 5 minutes I shall reach the amendments which I propose to offer, the first of which will affect Florida.

Mr. President, I am looking around to see what has become of my distinguished friend from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who is in charge of the bill. I do not want to lose him. I am too fond of the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New Mexico is in the Chamber.

Mr. REED. I know that this question is quite boresome, and yet it is important. It is important to the country; it is important to the people; it is important to the taxpayers; it is important to the judiciary; and it is important even to the Senate.

The Senator from New Mexico stated that no hearings were held this year on the bill, and that he relied upon the hearings held last year on a bill which is identical with the pending bill. I hold in my hand a copy of those hearings. They were held on April 13 and 17, 1939, about a year ago. They consist of 20 printed pages, aside from the tables and the statement of Judge Knox. As I told the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] a few moments ago, I intend to offer no objection to an additional judgeship for the southern district of New York.

I shall start with Florida. I do not think even the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, in charge of the bill, will defend the allowance of an additional judge for Florida.

Let me read from the record of the hearings. The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] questioned the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. Mr. Holtzoff, special assistant to the Attorney General of the United State, appeared; the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] appeared; and then the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] appeared. The Senator from Vermont asked the Senator from Florida a number of questions which I ask to have reproduced in the RECORD from the hearings. In order to save time, I shall read only one or two. I ask that the questions by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the answers by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> Senator AUSTIN. In the report of the Attorney General for 1937, at page 236, it appears that the comparative table showing the approximate time required to reach the trial of cases after joinder of issues in the several district courts of the United States, shows for Florida the following facts:
> Northern district, as of July 1, 1936. Actions at law: All ready cases tried at term following joinder of issue. As of July 1, 1937, all ready cases tried at term following joinder of issue.
> Respecting suits in equity, as of July 1, 1936, cases heard promptly after joinder of issue in or out of term. As of July 1, 1937, cases heard promptly after joinder of issue in or out of term.
> Respecting suits in admiralty, as of July 1, 1936, cases heard promptly after joinder of issue in or out of term. As of July 1, 1937, cases heard promptly after joinder of issues.
> Now, then, as to the southern district, there is a ditto under July 1, 1936, and 1937, relating to actions at law.
> As to suits in equity, as of July 1, 1936, they were 5 months behind; but as of July 1, 1937, there was a great improvement, and cases were heard promptly after joinder of issues.
> There is a similar record respecting suits in admiralty. In 1936 they were apparently 3 months behind with their work, but in July 1937 cases were heard promptly after joinder of issues.
> Have you any comment to make about that?
> Senator PEPPER. No; except that I think the situation is considerably worse now than it was at that time.
>
> Senator AUSTIN. All right. We will want to know about that.
> Mr. HOLTZOFF. The table this year, showing the condition, as of July 1, 1938, does not disclose as good a condition as that you just now read, Senator AUSTIN, as of July 1, 1937. Apparently, there has been a falling behind during the year following.
> Senator PEPPER. That is my understanding.
> The CHAIRMAN. What is the statement in respect to that?
> Mr. HOLTZOFF. In the northern district for the Pensacola division, 6 months or less: Gainesville division, 6 months or less; Marianna division, 12 months or less; Tallahassee and Panama City divisions, the same. That applies to law and equity. The southern district shows 60 days in actions at law and from 30 to 60 days in equity actions.
> Senator AUSTIN. Apparently, there is a localized temporary condition.
> Senator PEPPER. I have not been in the practice for the last 3½ years, but the active practitioners at the bar and the judges say that the congestion has grown steadily worse. I do not think that is just a peculiar situation.
> Senator LOGAN. There is one thing that will have to be cleared up this year. I see the Florida courts are further up than any courts in the United States. That is one thing I would like to have some information on.
> Senator PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, if you will give me an opportunity to supplement this showing by some additional testimony, I can meet that. If you will just let this be considered a partial hearing on the subject, I will be very grateful.

Mr. REED. After several questions had been asked, the distinguished Senator from Vermont, speaking of the satisfactory condition in which the docket appeared, said:

> There is a similar record respecting suits in admiralty. In 1936 they were apparently 3 months behind with their work, but in July 1937 cases were heard promptly after joinder of issues.

The Senator from Vermont then asked the Senator from Florida if he had any comment to make about that.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] said:

> No; except that I think the situation is considerably worse now than it was at that time.

On the next page, page 14, the late distinguished Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Logan, said:

> There is one thing that will have to be cleared up this year. I see the Florida courts are further up than any courts in the United States. That is one thing I would like to have some information on.

And the Senator from Florida said:

> Mr. Chairman, if you will give me an opportunity to supplement this showing by some additional testimony, I can meet that. If you will just let this be considered a partial hearing on the subject, I will be very grateful.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator propose to read into the RECORD the number of cases pending at the end of the fiscal year 1938 and at the end of the fiscal year 1939, so that the facts will appear in the RECORD?

Mr. REED. To the sorrow of the Senator from Florida I intend to do that exact thing.

Mr. PEPPER. I will be very appreciative if the Senator will do that so that the record will appear.

Mr. REED. Last year the Senate passed a bill which went over to the House of Representatives, and is still lying on the Speaker's desk; the House did nothing with it; but a House bill has come over to the Senate, and is presented to the Senate without any further information, any further hearings, or any further hearing. That may be good work for the Judiciary Committee or for any other committee. I have heard the Judiciary Committee praised, and I have no criticism of members of the committee as individuals, but I do not think they did a good job in this case. I am going to read to demonstrate that, starting in a moment. I have the hearings on the House bill. The House committee held hearings for 1 day. When I sent over for information this is what I got about the House hearing:

The House Judiciary Committee advises there were no printed hearings on H. R. 7079. The hearings lasted only 1 day and all they have is the transcript which cannot be sent out of the office.

I do not know how my office force happened to get it, but here it is. I have to return it for the files of the House committee.

Mr. President, I have stated these things to show that courts are being "packed" without due consideration by the Judiciary Committees of the two bodies.

Now I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 2, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "6" and insert in lieu thereof "5" and to strike out lines 18 and 19.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the clerk be good enough to read lines 18 and 19, so that the few Senators present may know what is being considered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read as requested.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, lines 18 and 19 read as follows:

(c) One, who shall be district judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, on Friday last I distributed among the Senators present a table of nine pages joined together. The first two pages refer to the business of the northern and southern districts of Florida for the last 10 years. I ask to have these two pages inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Authority: Reports of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. REED. I will be happy to furnish any Senator interested with a copy of these tables which I distributed on Friday, if he did not get a copy then.

I wish to take up the reply of the Senator from Florida to the Senator from Vermont as to the condition of the docket through the various years.

May I inquire of the Senator from Florida if he desires a copy of these tables?

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator, but I have a statement on the subject.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there are two districts in Florida, one of which is the northern district. If anybody of any responsibility and with any understanding will take a look at the first page of the table reverting to the northern district of Florida, where there were pending at the end of 1939, 90 criminal cases, 35 United States civil cases, 37 other civil cases, and 49 bankruptcy cases, and state on this floor, on his responsibility, that that showing justifies an additional judge in that district I will be glad to hear him.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator does not mean to leave the impression that an additional judge is to be provided for that district alone, does he?

Mr. REED. The additional judge is, as read by the clerk, provided for the northern and southern districts of the State of Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. That is, one for the whole State of Florida, one for the two districts; not one for each district, of course.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Florida agrees with me, does he not, that the work shown on the first page is very much less, in fact, about one-fourth, of what a judge ought to be expected fairly to handle.

Mr. PEPPER. I will be glad to have the Senator make any comparison of the volume of work which the judges have to do in either one of the Florida districts with any other district in the country, but I do not want the Senator to confuse the minds of Senators. An additional judge is not sought for the northern district of Florida or individually and singly for the southern district of Florida, but for the northern and southern districts, covering the whole State. The Senator cannot, of course, present the actual picture unless he shows the figures for both districts, for the whole State.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Florida has the tables in front of him, all he has to do is to get the figures for the southern district of Florida which now has three judges. Here are the figures. I hope the Senator from Vermont will listen to them because he asked the Senator from Florida about these various things, and the Senator from Florida said conditions have grown worse since 1937.

Now let me read what the facts are as to the southern district of Florida. These figures are found on the second sheet of the tables, and I again repeat they are taken from the records of the Department of Justice. Let me make a comparison of 10 years ago and now. In 1930 at the end of the fiscal year there were 879 criminal cases pending on the docket of the southern district of Florida; at the end of 1939 there were 239 cases pending.

On the United States civil docket, that is to say cases in which the United States is one of the parties, there were in 1934, 475 cases on the docket; at the end of the fiscal year, in 1939, there were 132 cases pending.

Of the other civil cases there were 1,048 cases pending at the end of 1930, and there were 415 cases pending at the end of 1939, with 3 judges on the bench.

According to any yardstick that may be applied the southern district of Florida has one more judge than it now needs.

Let me refer to what the Senator from Florida said to the Senator from Vermont. His only answer was that from 1937 conditions have grown worse. I now show the condition of the docket beginning with 1937:

In 1937 there were pending 207 criminal cases. The number has since increased to 239, but, Mr. President, it has been testified by everybody that the criminal cases in the Federal courts require very little attention from the judge; they are comparatively simple and usually easy to dispose of. The distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] made the statement last year on the floor that a Federal judge could dispose of as many as 50 criminal cases in 1 day. I do not mean every day he could do that and the Senator from Texas, of course, did not mean that, but they are usually disposed of by pleas of guilty.

As to United States civil cases, at the end of 1937 there were 180 cases pending. At the end of 1939 there were 132. As to other civil cases—which all my lawyer friends agree, and all Senators have stated in this discussion, require the principal attention of the court—at the end of 1937 there were 608 cases pending, not an unusual number for a three-judge court. At the end of 1939 there were 415 cases pending. So instead of the situation in Florida becoming worse it has become definitely better. Nobody can stand here and justify the appointment of an additional judge to a court which already has three judges, and has pending 239 United States criminal cases, 132 United States civil cases, and 415 other civil cases.

That is my case against Florida. I ask for a vote upon this amendment, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	Lodge	Slattery
Ashurst	George	Lucas	Smathers
Austin	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Bailey	Gillette	McCarran	Stewart
Bankhead	Green	McNary	Taft
Barkley	Gurney	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bone	Hale	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	Harrison	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Capper	Hatch	Norris	Tobey
Caraway	Hayden	Overton	Van Nuys
Connally	Herring	Pepper	Wagner
Danaher	Hill	Reed	Walsh
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Russell	White
Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz	Wiley
Downey	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Ellender	Lee	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I overlooked the fact that I had a third sheet of this statement, in which I had joined the northern and southern districts together, so as to make a joint showing for the four judges. I desire briefly to comment upon that part of the statement, and then offer it for the Record. It is for both the northern and southern districts, with four judges at this time. In 1930 there were 999 criminal cases pending. In 1939 there were 329. In 1930 there were 497 United States civil cases pending. At the end of 1939 there were 167. Of the other civil cases at the end of 1930 there were 1,182 cases pending. At the end of 1939 there were 452 cases in the two districts.

I ask to have the table printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Authority: Reports of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have examined all the bills, and I want the Senator from Florida to correct me if I am wrong, but I do not find that the House ever included provision for a judge for Florida in a bill which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary to the House.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator making the inquiry, because there is room for some confusion in the RECORD.

When the House Committee on the Judiciary first reported the bill it did not contain provision for a Florida judgeship. Subsequent to that time the House committee reconsidered the matter and favorably reported a bill containing provision for a Florida judgeship. When the bill was before the House, Mr. WALTER of Pennsylvania, chairman of the subcommittee handling the matter, in a position analogous to that of the able Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] in this body, offered an amendment providing for the Florida judgeship. I regret to say that on a strictly party vote the amendment was defeated, the vote being 89 ayes to 93 noes, as appears on page 2909 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I do not know of any Democrat in the House who voted against the amendment that afternoon. So the fact is that the bill was favorably reported by the Senate committee and favorably reported by the House committee, that the judgeship was provided for in the Senate bill by the Senate itself, and failed by four votes in the House of Representatives when the matter was considered in the House, in spite of the fact that the amendment was actually offered on the floor as a committee amendment by the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, nothing is further from my desire than to misstate, or to leave any wrong impression. The bill as it came from the House to the Senate did not contain provision for a judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida. It did contain provision for a judge for Georgia, which the Senate committee has stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike from the amendment of the committee on page 2, line 12, the word "six," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "five", and to strike out lines 18 and 19, as follows:

(c) One, who shall be a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are two amendments; but if there be no objection, they will be voted on together.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. REED. A parliamentary inquiry. There is some confusion as to the question before the Senate. Will the Chair be good enough to state what the question is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from Kansas, to strike from the bill on page 2, line 12, the word "six" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "five", and to strike out lines 18 and 19.

Mr. REED. Lines 18 and 19 provide for an additional judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida.

Mr. HARRISON. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will continue with the call of the roll.

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the calling of the roll.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senators from Missouri [Mr. CLARK and Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], are detained on public business.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senators from Utah [Mr. KING and Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] are absent, attending important committee meetings.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], and the Senators from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT and Mr. NEELY] are detained in various Government departments.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are unavoidably detained.

I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Florida, the Senator from Mississippi, the Senator from Michigan, the Senators from Missouri, the Senators from Maryland, the Senator from Pennsylvania, the Senator from Arkansas, the Senator from Indiana, the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from Tennessee, the junior Senator from Utah, the Senator from Kentucky, the senior Senator from West Virginia, and the Senator from Iowa would vote "nay."

I desire to announce the following general pairs on this question:

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD];

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW] with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]; and

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who would vote "nay."

Mr. STEWART. I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], who, I am informed, would vote "nay," and vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who would vote "yea" if present and voting, has a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who if present and voting would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS], who would vote "nay" if present, and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—18

Austin	Gibson	McNary	Tobey
Bailey	Gurney	Norris	White
Capper	Hale	Reed	Wiley

So Mr. REED's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we have now reached Oklahoma. I wish to say that again we have a judgeship which the House did not include in the bill as it came to the Senate. We have here a situation very much like the situation in Florida.

Mr. President, in the tables which have been prepared from the records of the Department of Justice we have the records for two of the districts of Oklahoma. The additional judge is for the western district of Oklahoma.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there an amendment pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. I mean is there pending any amendment to the committee amendment as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no particular amendment pending at the moment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am talking about the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator from Kansas has already made two speeches on the bill and the committee amendment, and so he has exhausted his right to make speeches on the bill and the committee amendment for this day. If he wants to offer an amendment which he wishes to discuss, I have no objection, but the Senator has already exhausted his right to speak on the general bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 2, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof "five"; and, in lines 15 and 16, it is proposed to strike out "western district of Oklahoma."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we have a situation here very much like that in Florida. Doubtless the vote will result the same way as did the vote on the judgeship in Florida. I ask permission that the two tables which have been prepared from the Department of Justice records, may be inserted at this point in my remarks, and then I wish to discuss them.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Authority: Reports of the Attorney General of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes to make a statement with respect to the point of order just made. The Chair did not rule on the point of order. The Chair asked the parliamentarian how many times the Senator from Kansas had spoken on the committee amendment, as amended. The parliamentarian told the Chair that the Senator from Kansas had spoken once today and once Friday.

The Chair wishes to state to the Senate once more that so far as the Chair is concerned, a day means 24 hours, and does not mean 48 hours, or 48 days. The Chair wishes that to be understood, so that when the Chair rules on the point of order the Senate can overrule the Chair if it sees fit to do so. But the Chair is going to hold that 24 hours is a day.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Chair permit an inquiry to be made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Indeed.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Kansas spoke this morning on the bill and the pending amendment. He yielded to another Senator to make a point of no quorum, which was done, and the Senator from Kansas, thereafter, continued to speak on the pending matter, without any specific amendment being before the Senate. Does that mean that the Senator has made one speech or two speeches today?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes the Senate to understand, as the Chair has remarked before, that, in the judgment of the Chair, a day means 24 hours.

Mr. BARKLEY. The point I made is that for the 24 hours——

The VICE PRESIDENT. And if the Senator has spoken twice today since the Senate went into session at 12 o'clock he undoubtedly cannot again speak on the committee amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the point I made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained, if the statement of facts outlined by the Senator from Kentucky is correct.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kentucky might also mention the fact that the Senator from Kansas yielded to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to have action taken upon a conference report, and the Senator from Kansas also yielded to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] for the purpose of dealing with a veto message of the President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senator from Kansas yields, after having spoken on the amendment, and thereafter again yields the floor, after having spoken on the same amendment, he has spoken twice on the same day.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to take no advantage of the Senator with regard to yielding to take up conference reports, because they are automatically more or less privileged, but when the Senator occupies the floor in what is evidently an effort to delay a vote on the bill, and then either himself makes the point of no quorum, or yields to some other Senator for that purpose, he yields the floor, and although as a matter of courtesy and custom we permit him to go on and speak again, he has made two speeches, because when the Senator yields the floor and occupies it again he occupies it for the second time.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to say that the Senator from Kansas yielded to me to offer a conference report, with the understanding that he did not yield the floor. Unanimous consent was granted at that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That puts a different face on the matter. If unanimous consent was granted by the Senate when the Senator yielded the floor for the purpose of action being taken on a conference report, that the Senator would not lose the floor thereby; of course, then, he did not lose the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I make no point on that score. I was present, and I know the Senator yielded on the understanding that it did not take him from the floor. That is not the point I make. I say, however, that when a Senator has the floor and speaks for any considerable time, or at all, and then yields to another Senator to make a point of no quorum, he yields the floor, and if he occupies it again it is a second speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's statement in connection with the parliamentary situation is correct.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the Senator wants to make a statement similar to that made by the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Kansas yields to the Senator from New York for other than a question, under the peculiar rules of the Senate he yields the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to let the Senator from New York make his statement without displacing me from the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I asked the Senator from Kansas if he would yield to me in order that the Chair might hand down a veto message from the President of the United States, with the understanding that the Senator from Kansas would not lose any of the privileges that would normally belong to him were he to refuse to yield to me.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I now wish to address myself to the amendment to the committee amendment, as it relates to the additional judge for the western district of Oklahoma. I live close enough to Oklahoma to know something about Oklahoma. A part of the population of Oklahoma had to leave Kansas and it went to Oklahoma. Consequently they have more criminal business in Oklahoma than we have in Kansas. But, Mr. President, they have more judges in Oklahoma now. The population of Oklahoma is 2,600,000, and there are four Federal judges there. The State of Kansas, with approximately 2,000,000 people, has one Federal judge.

Mr. President, Kansas and Oklahoma are both oil-producing States. They are both farming States. Oklahoma raises cotton; Kansas raises wheat. There is no great dissimilarity between conditions in Oklahoma and Kansas, except Oklahoma has some people who did not find it healthy to stay in Kansas.

The tables which I have presented for the RECORD cover a period of 10 years. At the end of the year 1930 there were pending 217 criminal cases in the eastern district of Oklahoma. At the end of 1939 there were 80 cases pending.

Of the United States civil cases there were 160 pending at the end of 1930. As the end of 1939 there were 67 such cases pending.

Other civil cases, as has been previously stated, are regarded as taking more time of the court. Back in 1930 in the eastern district of Oklahoma there were 249 such cases pending.

At the end of 1934, 64 cases were pending. By any yardstick that can be used, the eastern district of Oklahoma does not produce sufficient business to occupy the time of a judge for one-third of his time.

Let me discuss the western district of Oklahoma. I will very frankly say that business in that district is much heavier. At the end of 1930, 541 criminal cases were pending. At the end of 1939 the number had been reduced to 103. At the end of 1930, 199 United States civil cases were pending. At the end of 1939 there were 84. Of the other civil cases pending, there were 266 in 1930 and 195 on the 30th of last June.

It must be remembered that the western district of Oklahoma now has one and one-third judges. There is a roving judge in Oklahoma who goes from one district to another; and he is available, as well as whatever assistance can be rendered by the judge from the eastern district, which has not enough business to keep a judge occupied one-third of the time. There is absolutely no justification for an additional judge for the western district of Oklahoma. The House refused to recognize it and the provision was inserted by our own Judiciary Committee when the bill was reported.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am sure the Senator from Kansas desires the record to be stated accurately. The statement just made is a misstatement of the record. When we sent the bill to the House, the House paid no attention to our bill. That was last July, if I remember correctly.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then, during the present session the House took up its own bill, reported from its own committee, and finally passed the bill. The bill sent to us from the House contains a provision for an additional judge for Oklahoma.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator is correct. My recollection is that the House committee, as it reported the bill to the House, did not include in the bill a judge for Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is correct in that statement.

Mr. REED. But a provision for an additional judge for the western district of Oklahoma was inserted on the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll?

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Schwartz
Ashurst	Downey	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Austin	Ellender	Lee	Sheppard
Bailey	Frazier	Lodge	Slattery
Bankhead	George	Lucas	Smathers
Barkley	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Bone	Gillette	McCarran	Stewart
Bulow	Green	McKellar	Taft
Burke	Gurney	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Byrnes	Hale	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Capper	Harrison	Mead	Tobey
Caraway	Hatch	Murray	Van Nuys
Chandler	Hayden	Norris	Wagner
Chavez	Hill	Overton	Walsh
Connally	Hughes	Pepper	White
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	Wiley
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] has made the argument that Oklahoma does not need an additional judge, as recommended by the judicial conference. The Senator from Kansas also has made the statement that a number of people had to leave Kansas and go to Oklahoma. It is true Oklahoma has been on the receiving end from Kansas of a considerable amount of dirt and wind. It may be that during the administration of the Senator while he was Governor of Kansas a number of Democrats did go to Oklahoma from Kansas, but, anyway, the Senator has said that we do not need this additional judge. We do need the judge, because in Oklahoma the people resort to the courts. Of course, in Kansas they may settle their differences with shotguns, but in Oklahoma we are civilized and resort to the courts and use the democratic processes in settling our differences. So we need this additional judge.

As a matter of fact, one is needed in Kansas, according to the recommendation of the judicial conference, which the Senator himself has been so free to quote today, and upon which he is willing to rely for everything except for the fact that they need a judge in Kansas. I am persuaded that if there were a Republican administration the Senator would be very anxious to approve the need of a judge in Kansas.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am afraid the Senator did not correctly state the position of the Senator from Kansas when he said the Senator from Kansas is willing to rely upon the report of the judicial conference for everything except the judge in Kansas. I do not think that is correct at all.

Mr. LEE. Perhaps my statement was too sweeping.

Mr. HATCH. The judicial conference recommended an additional judge for Oklahoma, but I do not believe the Senator from Kansas agreed to that.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator for the correction. The Senator from Kansas has, from time to time, referred to the report of the judicial conference.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment more?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am sure the Senator from Oklahoma does not believe that the Senator from Kansas relies altogether upon the report of the judicial conference, because every judge for whom provision is made except one was recommended by the judicial conference, and I am quite sure that the Senator from Kansas is going to move to strike some of them from the bill.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of what the Senator from Kansas said about so many people leaving Kansas and moving into Oklahoma, apparently for some reason the Senator did not state, it seems to me, from that statement alone, that another judge is needed in Oklahoma to take care of the people who have gone from Kansas into Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator, and there is, possibly, basis for his statement.

Mr. President, what gives rise to this sudden activity on the other side of the Chamber opposing provision for additional judges? All at once we have a stirring in the valley of dry bones, and as each bone joins another bone life seems to be breathed into the body of the G. O. P., the "grand old elephant." They have had him under the oxygen tent since 1936 trying to breathe sufficient life into him to keep him alive until the election of 1940; and all at once, now on the verge of the election, we see great activity on the part of Republicans trying to prevent the appointment of additional judges that have been recommended by the judicial conference, headed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States himself, advocating the additional judges on the basis of docket case loads.

In Kansas, I understand, there is a river named the Republican River. I think some of the ladies met one time in an effort to change the name of that river, on the ground that it was not a romantic name, but one fellow, who must have been from Oklahoma—at any rate, he was a Democrat—got up and opposed the renaming of the river. He made the argument that carried the day when he pointed out that it was narrow; it was crooked; it was dry part of the time and wet part of the time; and so the name Republican River was retained.

The Senator from Kansas seems eager, one after another, to name for slaughter the different judges that have been recommended by the judicial conference. I did not ask for that judge; my colleague, the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] did not ask for the additional judge. We prepared bills at the request of the Senator from Arizona, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, in order that he might know whether we agreed on an additional judge. We prepared bills and submitted them only after the report of the judicial conference recommending an additional judge for Oklahoma.

The case load in Kansas argues for an additional judge; it is heavy enough for an additional judge; but the Senator from Kansas is opposing an additional judge. No one stroke, in my opinion, would so sabotage democracy as to stymie and throttle down the judicial process. The humble individual citizen has only one recourse for the protection of all the rights that are written in the Declaration of Independence, guaranteed in the Constitution, and safeguarded in every statute. All citizens have to depend upon free access to the courts of justice. That is democracy itself. Throttle that, stymie that, sabotage that, and you strike a death blow at democracy. There is no truer maxim than the old saying that "Justice delayed is justice denied." I would rather have several judges too many than to have one judge too few. In the scheme of the whole National Government the salary of a judge is infinitesimal compared to the need of keeping open the courts to the people who wish to sue for their rights. To whom does the delayed docket give advantage? To the poor man? Certainly not. It is the big fellow's hope to delay until he sweats out his opponent. "Justice delayed is justice denied." We need these judges.

Now I want to give some facts as to the case load in these States. The Senator from Kansas said that the condition in Oklahoma was very similar to that in Kansas.

Listen to this comparison of the case load in 1938. In that year the Kansas case load was 592; in Oklahoma the case load for the same year was 2,090. Oklahoma's docket is overcrowded. I am speaking now of the western district of Oklahoma. In 1938, in that district alone, we had a case load of 545, and the average case load of one docket throughout the Nation was 371. That meant that the western district in Oklahoma was carrying a load of 174 more cases than the average throughout the Nation. The figures for 1939 make an even stronger case than that. I take the figures of the Senator from Kansas, which he has had prepared, and I total them up for 1939.

For the western district of Oklahoma we find the number of criminal cases was 103. I am speaking now of cases pending which were not adjudicated or terminated in 1939, but which were left hanging over on the docket of the western district of Oklahoma alone. Criminal cases, 103; United States civil cases, 84; other civil cases, 195; bankruptcy cases, 302.

The total of undecided cases in the western district of Oklahoma in 1939 was 684—684 unfinished cases.

How many were terminated in that district? Altogether, adding them, 1,098 were terminated. Add the number of cases that were terminated to the total number of cases that were left undecided or pending, and we have a total of 1,782 cases for one docket in 1 year. Divide that number by one judge, or even one judge and part of the time a roving judge—that would make 1,782 cases divided by 300 days, assuming that there would be 300 days in which court could be held—and we would have five and nine-tenths cases every day which would have to be terminated in order to take care of that docket.

Now let us see how Oklahoma compares with other States of similar population and case loads.

Virginia, for example, had a population in 1930 of 2,421,851. Louisiana had a very similar population. Tennessee had a very similar population. Oklahoma had a population of 2,396,040 plus. Here are four States of about the same population. Each one of these States has four judges. Now let us see the number of cases terminated in Tennessee. In 1938 the number was 1,442. The number of cases terminated in Louisiana was 1,173.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LEE. I will yield as soon as I finish this statement. In Virginia the number terminated was 1,345, but the number terminated in Oklahoma, having approximately the same population and the same number of judges, was 2,090.

Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the table from which I have just been reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Statement showing the number of district judges in the State of Oklahoma, as compared with other States having 4 judges and approximately the same population

State	Number of districts	Population, 1930 census	Number of district judges	Number of cases terminated during fiscal year 1938
Oklahoma	3	2,396,040	4	2,090
Virginia	2	2,421,851	4	1,345
Louisiana	2	2,101,593	4	1,173
Tennessee	3	2,616,556	4	1,442

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas wanted to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma—I do not know whether or not this suggestion has any application to his State—that, as compared with Kansas, Oklahoma is comparatively a new State, is it not?

Mr. LEE. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. My experience and observation as a lawyer show that new States are apt to have a great deal more litigation per capita than a State which is old and settled, where no land titles are involved, and from which Indians have been moved to other places.

Mr. LEE. That is true. I thank the Senator; and I wish to add the statement that Oklahoma has almost half the Indian population of the United States—something under half. They are all wards of the Federal Government. The Federal courts have jurisdiction of every case pertaining to an Indian title or pertaining to these wards of the Federal Government. Then add to that the fact that Oklahoma legally is a "dry" State, and that we have a State law which the legislature passed last year which prevents the importation into the State of intoxicating liquor in violation of the State law. That also is an infringement of the Federal law, and the Federal courts have jurisdiction of those cases. So there are many reasons why the State of Oklahoma has a heavy case load.

Mr. President, I now wish to read a portion of a letter from the presiding judge of the western district of Oklahoma. I may say that this judge is a Republican, a man of the highest type, a very capable, able, and vigorous man. The letter is from Edgar S. Vaught, district judge.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA,
Oklahoma City, Okla., March 22, 1940.

Hon. JOSH LEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
DEAR SENATOR LEE:

* * * * * * *

There is enough work in this district for two judges in addition to the assistance the roving judge would give to the district, and the work is gradually increasing, not necessarily in the number of cases filed, but with respect to the amount of work necessary to handle the cases filed. It is practically three times what it was when I went on the bench 12 years ago.

For instance, all Federal income-tax cases are filed in this district because service can be had upon the collector of internal revenue. All State income-tax cases are filed in this district because service can be had at the capitol on the tax commission. Practically all three-judge cases are filed in this district because this is the only place where service can be had upon the State officers. To test the constitutionality of a State law and enjoin its enforcement requires service upon the Governor and the attorney general. A number of cases have been filed in this district by the Government under the Sherman antitrust law, and a great many other cases are being filed under recent legislation enacted by Congress.

There are enough cases filed in this court, in which the Government is either plaintiff or defendant, to occupy all of the time of one judge, and at least one-half of the time of an additional judge. At the present time I have enough submitted matters on my desk to occupy all of my time for the next 3 months. * * *

That letter is signed by Edgar S. Vaught, district judge.

Mr. President, I did not want the RECORD to show the statements of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] that an additional judge was not needed in this district without putting into the RECORD at this point the data I have submitted showing the actual need for an additional judge. This judgeship has been recommended by those who looked into the situation, and recommended the creation of the additional judgeship. I do not believe one of the members of the Judiciary Committee has a personal interest in this matter. There may be an exception to that statement, but I do not call to mind anyone of the members who has a personal interest, in that any of these judgeships affects his State. Therefore, I feel that we have had an impartial consideration of the judgeship matter, and a recommendation accordingly.

Nothing would further the democratic processes more than adequate opportunity for all cases to be heard on schedule.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have been voting in favor of the amendments offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. I shall vote for the motion now pending; and, if I have a chance to do so, I shall vote against the passage of the bill itself.

It seems to me that I owe it to my colleagues to express an idea which shows on what my opposition to this proposed legislation is based, and which, so far as I know, has not heretofore been presented in this discussion.

I am, and have been for a great many years, a member of the Judiciary Committee. Since I have been on the committee, and also before that time, I have observed the great increase in the number of Federal judges which has taken place during the past 15 or 20 years. I think it paints a picture that points to a danger to our judicial system and to our method in this country of attaining justice through the Federal judiciary.

I have no fault to find with the individual judges. I am not criticizing any of them. They are human beings. Some of them work harder than most other men work, and work conscientiously and diligently. Others do not. A judge who may be overcrowded today in his district may have very little to do in that district 2 or 3 years from now; and the situation may be reversed. A judge who now may have a great deal of leisure will, for some reason or other, find his work overburdensome in the years to come.

I think Congress is mainly responsible for the increase in the number of Federal judges.

Up to a year or two ago I tried as best I knew how to meet the situation, although I did not seek to reach a solution in the way proposed in the pending bill. I happened to have the honor of being chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for a number of years. While I occupied that position, and some time before I had been elevated to that place, I made a study of our system of jurisprudence. I introduced bills and had hearings on them and endeavored to meet the situation in a way which did not meet the approval either of the committee or of the Senate.

For the last year or two I have not been active in connection with this question, but as I sit here and listen to the debate now proceeding, and the talk of overcrowded courts and overworked judges, I cannot help thinking of the time when I tried to relieve the country of that situation, which had been growing and is now growing, to a great extent, I think, through the action of the Congress itself.

Several years ago I introduced identical bills at two or three sessions and had very extensive hearings on them. On one or two occasions I succeeded in getting a majority of the Committee on the Judiciary to report the bills, but they never passed the Senate. I know that my colleagues on the committee and in the Senate and the Members of the House who were opposed to the theories I entertained were perfectly conscientious, and in any vote I cast I do not want to be considered as in any way reflecting upon the honesty, the ability, or the conscientious conviction of any member of the Committee on the Judiciary, or of this body, or of the House of Representatives.

As I looked at the question from the study I made, I reached the conclusion that one of the ways by which we could reduce the number of judges on the bench was by decreasing their jurisdiction. Congress is proceeding in the opposite direction now. We have passed a bill at this session, which is now in the House, I understand, being debated in the House today, and which will probably pass, which would add to the burdens and the work of all the Federal district judges in the United States. I have a fear in my mind that we are now proceeding, and have been for several years proceeding, in a direction which will mean an increase from day to day and from year to year in the jurisdiction of Federal judges, until it will appear plain to our people that we have gone to the very extreme, and that we are traveling in a dangerous direction.

For instance, at the present time the United States district judges have jurisdiction to try cases arising between citizens of different States if the amount involved is more than $3,000, regardless of whether there is involved in the litigation any question of Federal law or Federal supremacy. It seemed to me that that kind of jurisdiction should be left to the States. By a simple act of Congress we could take away from the Federal district judges the jurisdiction which they now possess under an act of Congress in diverse citizenship cases.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEE. The Senator from Nebraska believes, however, does he not, that the Federal courts should follow the Federal law as Federal laws cover increasingly more territory?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not find any fault with that theory. I agree with the Senator. I am not finding fault with the Federal judges. I am finding fault with the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Mr. LEE. Then are we not going at the matter backward, if we start by cutting off the jurisdiction of the Federal courts rather than limiting the extension of Federal law?

Mr. NORRIS. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. LEE. If we pass Federal laws which cover more territory, then if we want to reduce, is not the way to do it to reduce the number of Federal laws which are extending to more and more territory rather than to start in by cutting off the jurisdiction of the Federal courts?

Mr. NORRIS. I admit the theory is perfectly logical, and I may be occupying an illogical position. I am driven to it after a great deal of thought, after a great deal of consideration. I have listened to arguments made on the proposed law since it has been pending in the Senate.

Let me go back to the point I was discussing when I was interrupted by the Senator from Oklahoma. At the time to which I referred I was rather active in seeking to reduce the jurisdiction of Federal district judges, and I wrote every district judge in the United States asking him to give me a statement from his records as to the number of cases arising involving diverse citizenship within the year I mentioned in my letter, and the time which had been consumed by the court in the trial of that kind of litigation. I received an answer to nearly every letter I wrote, some of the letters critical because the judges resented the use I wanted to make of the information, which I had told them frankly in my letter. Some of the replies were favorable and some of them did not express any idea as to whether my position was right or wrong, but gave me very fully, as they saw it from their experience, a statement of the time they had consumed in trying cases which involved no Federal question whatever.

I am speaking from memory in all I say, because I have not looked up the various statistics, with which I was quite familiar at the time, and I may be wrong in my recollection of some of the incidents to which I wish to refer. I remember one of the letters especially, that of a Federal district judge in New Jersey, Judge Clark, since elevated to the circuit bench, a man whom I consider one of the best educated, the shrewdest, most honest, and hard-working judges in the United States. In answer to my letter he wrote me fully, and, to illustrate, he gave me a full description of all the litigation and all the lawsuits which had been tried at a term of court during which he presided, and which had just been concluded. His report was similar to those of many of the other judges. He stated that during the term of court then just concluded nearly all the time of the court was taken up in trials before juries of cases in which the questions of law involved were not remotely connected with any act of Congress or with any Federal question whatever.

I see the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] sitting before me. He comes from a State just south of the one which I in part try to represent. Located in southern Nebraska, within 2 miles of the Kansas line, is a beautiful little city known as Superior. If I am in the grocery business in Superior I may incorporate my business under the laws of Kansas and do business in Nebraska. But let us assume that I am not incorporated, and do business in Superior, Nebr. If the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], whose business is incorporated in another State, comes along with a claim against me, he may sue me in Kansas, and I must go to Kansas with my witnesses. I must meet him in that State, and go all the way through the Federal courts up to the Supreme Court of the United States. The only reason that is true is because his business is incorporated.

The courts of Nebraska are established, as are the courts in every other State, to do justice between litigants. But if I am sued in Superior, in the illustration I have given, my opponent has a choice of courts. He may go into the State court, or he may go into the Federal court. If he lives in New York City or in Chicago, and is an immensely wealthy individual, or a corporation, he will sue me in the Federal court. The reason for that is that it is more expensive to litigate in the Federal courts than it is in the State courts. I have to travel to Kansas if my competitor sues me there.

But, Mr. President, if my competitor, who is not incorporated, who does business in the same city, who is in the same business, with the same capital involved, should desire to bring suit, he has no choice. He cannot go into the Federal court. He must litigate in the State court of the State in which he does his business, the State in which he lives, where his property is located; and when his case is finally ended by a decision rendered in the State Supreme Court he has reached the end so far as that litigation is concerned. No Federal question is involved.

That, Mr. President, is the picture of two men doing the same kind of business, with the same capital, residing in the same town, doing business perhaps side by side, in that Nebraska town. I have always felt and still feel that such a situation is not a fair one; that it is not the right way to litigate; that it does not afford justice to litigants at the least possible expense and with the least possible delay.

Mr. President, I find from reports I have received and from letters similar to the one from Judge Clark which I mentioned, that approximately one-third of the time of all the Federal district judges in the United States is consumed in trying cases in which no Federal question is involved; cases which ought to be litigated under State law, under the law of the State where the litigants live, where they own their property, and where they do business.

The method of litigating which I have described places certain litigants in a dilemma. To my way of thinking it is an injustice, as it results in delay in litigation. The expense must be borne by the people of the United States. That sort of business increases the work of the Federal judges. That sort of business, as it grows and will continue to grow, means the appointment of additional Federal judges, and we shall have repeated here what has happened over and over again during the last 20 years—a great cry arising for an increase in the number of Federal judges. Those who ask for the increase will come before us with an argument such as that presented by the Senator from Oklahoma, a logical argument, and say that under the laws passed by Congress such and such a judge has been saddled with a great deal of work which perhaps he ought not to have to perform, and that therefore another judge is needed to help him out.

Mr. President, on the other hand, in the picture which I am trying to paint no question of human life is involved. It is simply a question of dollars; simply a question of money, that is all. Those who are incorporated in a different State from that in which they do business are given the opportunity to select the forum in which they may try any litigation they may bring or any which has been brought against them.

Suppose that instead of the question of property being involved we consider a case involving a crime. Suppose the Senator from Kansas comes across the line 3 miles into Superior and kills me, a resident of Superior, Nebr. Although he lives in a different State, can he have a choice between the Federal and State court? No; he cannot. He is bound by the laws of the State of Nebraska. He must defend himself in the State court of Nebraska. He cannot be heard to cry, "My life is at stake. A human life is involved, something more precious than all the gold in the world. I want my case tried in the Federal court." The Senator from Kansas cannot be heard to make such an appeal. But if more than $3,000 is involved in a civil case, then the Senator has a choice. Then he can go into either jurisdiction; he can go into that court which he considers most favorable. In some cases he can go into one jurisdiction and have the matter tried, and, if he fails, begin over again in the Federal court. Such cases have occurred.

Mr. President, in connection with a bill the passage of which I advocated in the Senate I referred to what had happened, for instance, in the State of Montana. The case in question involved a gas company. The proper authorities of the State of Montana had undertaken to fix the price of gas to be charged by the corporation, which was incorporated outside the State of Montana. The corporation was doing business in Montana, and a complaint was made against it with respect to the price it was charging the consumers of gas in a certain city in Montana. A hearing was had before the State board which had jurisdiction over the matter. Most States have similar boards, which are called by various names. A hearing was had in this case before the Montana State board. The State spent thousands of dollars in securing expert testimony and in engaging the services of engineers to establish what was a proper price for gas. The foreign corporation did the same thing. No one complained that a fair trial was not had. No one complained of being interfered with in any way. The case proceeded for a long time, as such cases do, in the way of gathering the evidence. The evidence was finally submitted to the board, and the board, as I remember, decided in favor of the foreign corporation. I may not be accurate in my recollection, but for the purpose of the illustration let the statement suffice that the board made its decision in favor of the foreign corporation. The officials of the municipality involved appealed that case, under the law of Montana, to the courts of Montana. The case traveled its way through the different courts of Montana and reached the Supreme Court of Montana, which finally decided in favor of the municipality and ordered the rate set by the municipality to go into effect.

The foreign corporation, under the rules of the Montana court, filed a motion for a hearing. The motion was argued, and the Supreme Court of Montana again, after a reargument of the case, held to its original decision, a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Montana. As I remember, there were seven judges on that court.

It happened that after the final order of the Supreme Court of Montana was issued and was taken to the lower State court, to put the order and the judgment of the supreme court of the State into effect, a lapse of several months occurred. In the meantime before the lower court could act on the matter the foreign corporation came into that court and dismissed its case, and the next day commenced the case de novo in the Federal district court in Montana. The State came into that court and challenged the jurisdiction of the Federal court, and set up the proceedings that had been had in the State court. Before any trial was had in the district court the question was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, which held that the foreign corporation had a right to dismiss its case before the final judgment was rendered, and the final judgment could not be rendered, because the corporation dismissed the case before the court convened. So the municipality had to go into the Federal court. The case had once been to the Supreme Court of the United States. Then it went into the Federal court. A new set of engineers was employed, another investigation of the question was made, and the case was finally submitted to the Federal district court in Montana. I do not now remember how that court decided the question. Whichever way it was decided, the losing party appealed, and the case was taken to the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals. I do not remember what the decision was there; but whichever side was defeated appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that Court finally held that the original order, made 7 years before, was right, and ordered the district court to enforce it.

Seven years had elapsed from the beginning of that case until the Supreme Court finally got it. It had been through the State courts. It had been twice argued in the Supreme Court of Montana. It had twice been to the Supreme Court of the United States, and finally judgment was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States. I shall never forget it. I had some correspondence with the attorney general of Montana before the case was decided by the Supreme Court. In the ordinary course of sending the case down to the lower court for proper adjudication in accordance with the opinion of the Supreme Court, the case had not yet reached the district court in Montana. I suggested to the attorney general that I anticipated that when it should arrive there the first thing the foreign corporation would do would be to file a motion to the effect that since the case had originally been decided 7 years before, conditions had entirely changed in the municipality, and that the ruling of the commission, made 7 years before, was, therefore, out-of-date. As I now remember, the attorney general of Montana wrote me afterward that I had prophesied the truth. That is what actually happened when the case got back to Montana.

All that difficulty would have been avoided if the Federal courts had not been given jurisdiction in diverse-citizenship cases. Ever since that was done we have been passing laws increasing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and adding to their burden. Following the increase of jurisdiction brought about by our laws, we have continually had to face the demand—which I admit cannot logically be denied—for more Federal judges.

So the Senator from Oklahoma is logically correct. I may be illogical, but I have tried other methods. I have seen this condition go on for years and years, until it seems to me the only thing to do is to allow it to go on and reach a conclusion, which must be a conclusion brought about by the people of the United States, when they decide that we are going to extremes and that we must halt somewhere.

The Federal Treasury cannot stand the burden. It involves not only increased judges but increased salaries. When judges become incompetent we appoint more judges. When a judge becomes old and can no longer perform his work properly, we appoint more judges—and so on, without limit. It seems to me that the only way—it may not be the right way, but I have decided that it will control me in my vote—is to deny, whenever possible, the great outcry for increases in the numbe rof judges all over the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have the honor to serve with the Senator on the Judiciary Committee, and I always value very highly what he says. Is it not true that in the long run the expenses of the judge, the marshal, and the attachés are merely a small percentage of the cost to litigants and others who have business before the courts?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. That cost is increased many times by delay.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is. I admit that instances of injustice may possibly arise if we follow the course I have outlined. It probably is not logical. To me, it is the only outlet.

Mr. CONNALLY. On the 4th of July we boast about our Bill of Rights, constitutional prerogatives, and all that. Is it not true that a right is of very little value unless one has a forum or court in which to enforce the right? Unless a man can go into the courts and establish his rights, they are not worth very much.

Mr. NORRIS. The ordinary man going into a Federal court must either settle with his adversary or become bankrupt.

Mr. CONNALLY. Justice must be prompt and speedy.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. A right which one's administrators must administer is of little value.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in my own experience as a country lawyer 250 miles away from the place where the Federal court was held, I have seen many of my neighbors being taken 250 miles to a Federal court in ordinary foreclosure cases. The mortgage was owned by somebody in New Hampshire or New York. The action could be commenced in the Federal court. The ordinary man living in that part of the country, if he was not incorporated, had to commence his case in the State courts. I myself have advised many a man who came to see me about an ordinary foreclosure case, and who said, "Here is a case against me involving $3,000 or $3,500. I think I have a defense." I did not know—because necessarily I could not try the case—whether he was right or wrong. He might have been wrong. At least he had a right to think he had a defense. He would say to me, "I am sued in the Federal court, 250 miles away. I want to employ you to defend me."

I had to tell him that, after we should have traveled the 250 miles with our witnesses and got to court, the first thing we should probably find would be that we should be met with a motion to continue the case. We should have to contest that motion. I said, "If that happens, we shall all have to come home again. You had better go to the place of holding court and hire a lawyer." I did not know how the case would come out; but the eastern party holding the mortgage knew what the law was. The lawyers knew that delay was their greatest lever in obtaining a settlement.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not wish to annoy the Senator——

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator never annoys me.

Mr. CONNALLY. The issue which the Senator is now discussing could probably be met by raising the limit of jurisdiction. Instead of $3,000 it ought to be $10,000 or $15,000. I have long thought that we ought to deny Federal jurisdiction except with respect to large claims.

Mr. NORRIS. I should raise the limit to $25,000. The best way is simply to repeal the law and take away the jurisdiction.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the limit of $3,000 was fixed, $3,000 meant as much as $15,000 or $20,000 now means.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. What I am saying, Mr. President, is that the principle is wrong. In a foreclosure case away out in Furnas County, Nebr., no Federal question was involved. The person who owned the mortgage and who loaned the money on the farm did not have to lend the money in Nebraska. He voluntarily came into the jurisdiction of the State. So far as I know, he could obtain absolute justice in the State courts. But often justice was what he was afraid of. The result was, 9 times out of 10, that a man 250 miles away from the place of holding court either made a settlement, or, from lack of money and ability to fight the case, he quit and gave up. I think that condition is involved here. Perhaps it is not. Perhaps other Senators do not agree with me, but I want to reach the point where we will remedy that situation. That is the reason why I have been voting for these amendments.

Under the present conditions perhaps my vote is sometimes wrong. Sometimes it is not. Sometimes I do not know whether it is right or wrong. That is the reason, right or wrong, why I shall vote against the pending bill. If I had my way, perhaps it would do more harm than good, but at least I will attract the attention of the country to an evil which is dragging us down, which is overburdening the Federal judiciary and making its courts not courts of justice, because of the delays which occur, the distances which must be traveled, the increased attorneys' fees which must be paid. This condition is not the fault of the judge. He is not to blame for it. We are to blame for it.

Let us take, as an illustration, the Interstate Commerce Commission. On account of the complexities of our civilization, all kinds of boards and commissions are being created. I think the right thing to do would be to provide that a finding of fact by the Interstate Commerce Commission, for instance, should be final, and no court should have any jurisdiction to set it aside. I could make the same statement as to the other boards, some of which we have recently created. Some may be so small, of such slight importance, that perhaps it would be wrong not to permit an appeal to the courts; but nearly every day of our lives we are providing for appeals from all kinds of boards to the courts of the United States. Often that means a denial of justice, not because the courts are wrong, not because the individual is wrong, but because we have made the road so tedious, so long and so expensive that an ordinary man cannot travel it. Therefore it seems to me that instead of being continually enlarging our jurisdiction and giving the right of appeal we ought to provide in the case of most of these boards that a finding of fact never can be interfered with by any court.

I know the answer is made—it is made in committees, it is made everywhere where we propose that course—"Why, what do these little fellows know about these matters? The only place where we can get justice is in our courts." If we have fallen that low, we are in a bad row of stumps. The men on those commissions are human. They may go wrong. They may make mistakes. Occasionally, they may be corrupt. The same thing may be said of every court under the shining sun in this civilized world. Judges are all human. None of them are perfect. Some of them are wrong. Most of them are honestly, conscientiously wrong, as some other judge decides, because the decisions of our courts are continually being reversed by other courts. For instance, we have a circuit court in one part of the United States deciding a question one way, and a circuit court of equal jurisdiction, in another part of the United States, presided over by men of the same class, deciding the same question in just the opposite way. It does not mean that either one is corrupt. It means that they are both human; and we run no more risk of bringing about injustice in a railroad freight case before the Interstate Commerce Commission by letting them have the final say about the facts than we would if we let any court in Christendom have the same jurisdiction; and to a greater or less extent that argument applies to every board which has to pass on findings of fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] tells me he has two or three more amendments to offer. It is obvious that we cannot conclude the consideration of the bill tonight. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that at an hour not later than 1:30 o'clock p. m. tomorrow the Senate proceed to vote on the bill and all amendments thereto without further debate; and in that connection I ask unanimous consent that the requirement for a roll call be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the request, of course, includes a motion to recommit, which I think will be made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; any motion of substitute therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting a convention and sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters which had been favorably reported.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters, which have been favorably reported, be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 16, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 15 (legislative day of April 8), 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 15, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord and Father of mankind, in humble petition we bend low at the altar of prayer. We lift our voice, praising Thee for our own blessed land of light and liberty. O give us the cross; give us Calvary; and with these may we stand with lamps of truth blazing across the sighing breast of the world, weighed down with violence and passion. We thank Thee for the Galilean Teacher, who is still the Carpenter of Nazareth; who is still vanquishing the tempter with unshaken power; who is still at the wayside well to help the weary; who is still at the tomb weeping with the mourners. O God, let the beauty of the Lord be upon all mankind, which is staggering with increasing tragedy and marching the fiery ways, leading to darkness and death. Perform again the great miracle and command the sun of time to stand still that the armies of the Lord may come forth in patience and restraint to succor the victims who are faced with a blind destiny; grant that the forces of evil may see the salvation of our God. Be with our President, our Speaker, and the Congress, and bless them with the courage and wisdom which they so much need in these momentous days. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 12, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2505. An act to amend an act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress, approved June 18, 1929, so as to change the date of subsequent apportionments.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3097. An act for the relief of Katherine M. Drier.

USE OF PRIVATE VEHICLES FOR OFFICIAL TRAVEL

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, with the approval of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], the ranking member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6693) to amend the provisions of law relating to the use of private vehicles for official travel in order to effect economy and better administration, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments. The amendments are simply the insertion of two words and a clarifying amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "to read as follows" and insert "by striking out the words 'his own' wherever they appear therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'a privately owned.'"

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOME-MADE BEDSPREAD INDUSTRY

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, during the last year the Subcommittee on Labor Appropriations made provision for an appropriation to conduct an investigation of the home-made bedspread industry, with particular reference to what effect may have been had upon that industry and the workers in the industry by the administration of the Fair Labor Standards Act. I have just been furnished by the Wage and Hour Administrator with a copy of the report which has been made. In view of the fact that the House is to consider within a few days proposed amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act, I believe this matter would be of very great interest to the Members of the House, and I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD by inserting a copy of the report, certain excerpts from the hearings had during the present year on the Labor-Federal Security Agency appropriation bill, and a copy of a letter I have just addressed to Colonel Fleming, the Wage and Hour Administrator, with reference to the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The matter inserted is as follows:

[Excerpts from hearings on Labor-Federal Security Agency appropriation bill, 1941, held on February 14, 1940]

HOME-MADE BEDSPREAD INVESTIGATION

Mr. TARVER. Now, Colonel, I want to ask you about the expenditure of a comparatively small fund, $500, which was provided by the committee in the appropriation bill for the present fiscal year, for the investigation of what is known as the home-made bedspread workers industry, which centers around my home town in Georgia.

Mr. Andrews told us last year that this investigation could be made for that sum. I am familiar with the conditions in that industry, where thousands of women, principally farm women, who, prior to the enactment of the wage and hour law, had been engaged in the manufacture of bedspreads in their homes, have practically been eliminated from that industry because of the requirements of the law.

I suppose you may be familiar with the conditions in that industry. It is an industry where the work is or has been performed at home by women workers, in connection with their household duties. After washing the dishes from the breakfast table in the morning, the mother or daughter may sit down in the home for 2 or 3 hours in the morning and work on bedspreads, and then do the same thing in the afternoon. Perhaps mother and Sally work today and tomorrow it may be Sally and Jane, daughters in the family, who work. Perhaps they work 1 hour today and 5 hours tomorrow. It is a matter of impossibility for them to keep any records such as are required by the Wage and Hour Administration, and the compensation, not adequate, which they have received heretofore from the work done on the spreads has not been as much as the requirements of the wage and hour law; but nobody will pay them that much to carry on this work. Therefore, a source of income in some four or five counties of my district, which was formerly very beneficial to the farm population and enabled those farmers to carry on where they might otherwise have been unable to do so, has been cut off.

I called Mr. Andrews' attention to this situation last year and, at his suggestion as to the amount necessary to conduct an investigation of this industry, the $500 was provided. I would like to know what was discovered as a result of that investigation. Of course, the whole idea is that, in an industry of that character, some discretion ought to be vested in the Administrator to provide rules and regulations which would permit the continuance of employment, since it was not the idea of Congress, in the enactment of the law, to decrease the employment, but rather to increase it.

A great deal has been said about the conditions among the Puerto Rican needle workers, but this is a condition which exists in our own country, in continental United States, which certainly is entitled, in my judgment, to equal consideration with that which has been and is being accorded to the condition of the Puerto Rican needle workers.

Having said that much by way of explanation of my inquiry, I would like to know what has been the result of the investigation which supposedly has been made under the jurisdiction of the Wage and Hour Division.

Colonel FLEMING. I presume Mr. Vincent can answer that question better than I could.

Mr. VINCENT. We held a hearing, Mr. Chairman, on the making of these tufted bedspreads. We had both the machine chenille, it is called, and also representatives who spoke for the hand work that you mention. It was one of those rather exceptional situations where it is not easy to deal practically with it unless the Administrator had some such discretionary power as you mentioned.

I think anyone who heard the facts as I heard them would say that it is not practicable to pay the hand workers a minimum wage required by this act. The bedspreads sell at prices which would not permit it.

This is part of the picture, however. Seven or eight years ago practically all of the tufted bedspreads were made by hand. Now about 90 percent of them are made by machines. You have employed on machines down there at this time approximately 7,000 machine operators in two different types of employment, but both on the machines. They are being paid the minimum wage, excepting we are issuing them special certificates authorizing them to employ learners at a lower rate as they need them.

As to the remaining part of the tufted bedspreads in the hand-work part it now amounts to possibly not over 10 or 12 percent of the total volume. I think that is due primarily to the fact that the machine making is cheaper production and also a very artistic looking item, and in the last 7 or 8 years has been able to go on the market at lower prices.

So that the normal processes of that transition from hand work to machine work, without any respect to the Wage and Hour Act, has resulted in great decline in the number that could be employed on the hand work. The best estimates we have, however, indicated that probably 3,000 to 3,500 could still be employed on the hand work if they could be employed at figures which would permit the goods to be sold on the market at prices which they were bringing.

Typically, that hand-work stuff is sold in large department stores and chain stores.

There is still a class of trade which is very different, as was indicated to me, that prefer hand work, although most of it is machine work. I must mention that I cannot make a suggestion that would in any practical way take care of the situation under the rather rigid provisions the Administrator is operating under.

Mr. TARVER. You spoke of a hearing which was had, but that does not, of course, have to do with the question of the investigation which was promised, and which was had, because I happened to know your investigators did visit that area. I wonder what was developed by those investigators?

Colonel FLEMING. I think Mr. Daugherty, who is head of our economic and research statistics branch, can explain that.

Mr. DAUGHERTY. Approximately $540, Mr. Chairman, was expended in making the study of the hand-made bedspread industry by the Children's Bureau of the Labor Department, who investigated the conditions in the homes, the conditions as to the ages of the people, and the wages and hours, and the people who distributed the income through the homes. And in addition an investigation was made in the home-work industries, both urban and rural, and the results will be shortly available.

Mr. TARVER. They are not now available?

Mr. DAUGHERTY. They are not now presently available, but should be in a week or so.

Mr. TARVER. I was somewhat disappointed when the investigators visited this area, which is my home, in making this investigation, that they did not contact me, nor give me any opportunity to put them in touch with some people from whom they might have received valuable information. I hope they have been able to secure the necessary information otherwise, but I should have been glad to cooperate with them in that particular. I am also advised when they contacted the so-called bedspread manufacturers, who are nothing more or less than people who furnish the materials for these workers to use in the making of the spreads, that some of these bedspread manufacturers offered to take them to their employees, who had been thrown out of their employment through the operation of the wage and hour law, and they declined their services in that connection, stating they preferred to contact them themselves without the assistance of the bedspread manufacturers.

I am not sure, therefore, that the investigation has been conducted as thoroughly and as impartially as could have been desired, but I shall be able to determine that when I have been advised of the results of the investigation, which I hope may not be a considerable time. I trust that the work of the results will be available in a month at least.

Mr. DAUGHERTY. Oh, yes, indeed.

CLASSIFICATION OR DEFINITION OF HOUSE WORKERS AS CONTRASTED WITH INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS

Mr. KEEFE. May I ask a question just for information in connection with this? I am interested in this phase.

Mr. TARVER. Yes, sir; Mr. Keefe.

Mr. KEEFE. I understand this home matter of the bedspread industry in which you are referring to the manufacturers, so-called, is some individual or company which furnishes raw material to these farm women and householders to work on in the homes.

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. And when it is done they take it and sell it through the regular channels of trade.

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. And pay the women so much apiece for making them; is that right?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. I wish to direct this inquiry to Colonel Fleming: Is there anything in the law that prohibits the people, who have been described by Judge TARVER, from becoming independent contractors, so as to remove them from under the provisions of the Wage and Hour Act, or has some ruling been made that prevents that?

Colonel FLEMING. I think I would rather have Mr. McNulty answer that legal question.

Mr. KEEFE. Perhaps that would be better.

Mr. MCNULTY. We do not feel in the ordinary case the home worker is an independent contractor.

I call the Congressman's attention to the fact that in section 3a of the act a rather broad interpretation is given to the term "employee." It is defined to include any person acting directly or individually in the interest of an employer in relation to an employee. An employee includes any individual employed by an employer as defined.

We felt, too, that some of the decisions construing other statutes, which were not passed for remedial purposes, might not be controlling on the question of who is an employee within the meaning of a remedial act such as this primarily is.

Of course, you have to consider every particular case on the facts of that case naturally.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, Mr. McNulty, I think this should be said with reference to the manner of carrying on this business. Those who do the work on the spreads are not subject to the direction nor control of the person who furnishes the materials upon which they work. They are not required to work at any certain stated periods, and choose their own periods of labor as may suit their convenience. They may make 2 spreads a week or 25 spreads a week, according to their own idea as to how long they want to work on the making of the spread, and they are paid on the piece-work contract basis for whatever they do.

Mr. MCNULTY. As to time that appears to be true. However, as to the other details of the performance of their work, from the information we have received it appears they are subject to the control of the person who gives them the material and receives back the goods for sale.

Mr. TARVER. That gets down to the very point of investigation. You have received incorrect information, if that is the information you are acting upon, because I know of my own personal knowledge that they are not subject to the direction and control of those who furnish the materials. And there is not any reason for your having been so advised that I can determine.

Mr. KEEFE. May I make this further inquiry for information purposes?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. You referred to this as a remedial act, the Wage and Hour Act. Do you distinguish between this act as being remedial, and compensation acts, for instance, which deal with compensation for employees who are injured in industry?

Mr. MCNULTY. Under several compensation acts, I believe in New York, for example, home workers are held to be employees. I understand the attorneys general of some other States have ruled they were not.

Mr. KEEFE. It depends upon the facts in the case.

Mr. MCNULTY. It always depends upon the facts in the particular case.

Mr. KEEFE. I have had a rather broad experience in the compensation laws, and that question has been repeatedly before the courts and has been repeatedly passed upon, depending of course upon the facts.

If you show for instance an employer, a manufacturer, goes out and hires these farm women to do this work and furnishes the material and enters into an agreement to pay wages, you are confronted with one situation, but if the situation is that here is a person doing a work for Judge TARVER, for instance, in this bedspread manufacture, and you call him such, and he simply furnishes the material, and they can work on it when they please.

Mr. ENGEL. And they use their own tools.

Mr. KEEFE. Yes; they use their own tools. And he does not stipulate where the work shall be done, nor the time that shall be expended, and it is pretty hard for me to see how you can reach the conclusion that you do.

Mr. TARVER. I have entertained the belief that these so-called employees are not employees, but they are independent contractors, and that they do not come within the jurisdiction of the wage and hour provisions, but the Division has entertained the contrary opinion, which has resulted in that work disappearing in the main.

The work of the machine-made bedspread has a great deal to do with the elimination of a large part of the volume of work which they formerly carried on by hand work, but it has not been by any means the sole cause. It was carried on in considerable volume. I submitted to the Wage and Hour Administration a petition signed by 3,500 workers last year, showing that they had been employed prior to the effectiveness of the Wage and Hour Act, but since then they had not been, and I have been urging that there might be accorded some consideration to that matter so that they could continue to receive the small income that they would be able to earn in this way. I am not speaking for the bedspread manufacturers, but I am speaking for these women who have been thrown out of employment. This is a very serious situation for them and for their families. I had hoped something might be done by regulation, and if that should be impossible, to secure amendment of the law.

By the way, I want to ask Mr. Fleming a question. Mr. Andrews recommended to the Committee on Labor an amendment to the existing law, which is incorporated in all three major bills, which are now pending for the amendment of the Wage and Hour Act vesting in the cases of these rural home workers discretion in the wage and hour administrators to so modify by regulation the requirements of the law as to permit the continuance of their industry. I want to inquire if your views on that problem are in accord with those of the preceding Administrator, who made that recommendation to the Labor Committee.

Colonel FLEMING. I do not think I have been with the Wage and Hour Division long enough to express myself on that at this time.

Mr. TARVER. I certainly want to direct it to your attention, because this is a problem which, although it affects only a few thousand people, is one, in my judgment, that ought to have careful consideration and judgment.

Colonel FLEMING. I will give it consideration and judgment.

Mr. TARVER. I hope you will give attention to it within a short period.

Colonel FLEMING. I intend to.

Mr. ENGEL. What about your ruling as to similar contractors where they cut pulpwood by the cord in other States? Have you had any question of that kind coming up as to individual employees?

Mr. MCNULTY. I do not recall any case of that kind in the North.

Mr. ENGEL. Or any case of that kind in the South?

Mr. MCNULTY. We had a case of that kind in the South. As you, Mr. Chairman and Congressmen, have pointed out, every lawyer understands the principle, but it is a matter of applying the principle to the facts of the particular situation.

In this particular case we thought the facts were that these employees were directed as to the details, as to how that wood should be cut, as to how they should stack that wood, and what they should do to it. As to how they were paid for the stack—I think it was by the pen after it was completed, but nevertheless it was just another employee paid on a piece-work basis. They were subject to the complete control of the man hiring them.

Mr. ENGEL. Practically every one of those contractors have been held under the compensation laws to be independent contractors. I am perfectly frank in saying that in my judgment the Wage and Hour Division has been actuated in this matter by a desire to bring as many people under the law as they could. Apparently they have attempted to write provisions into the law to include almost everyone. When we discussed this matter with Mr. Andrews he said that he regretted that millions of people had been left out.

I want to ask another question.

Mr. KEEFE. I just want to ask this question.

Mr. ENGEL. You go ahead, Mr. Keefe.

Mr. KEEFE. In my State there are innumerable decisions of the supreme court bearing upon the question as to the application of this principle of independent contractor, which arises in a variety of ways, as you as a lawyer know. It very frequently arises in the question of the application and interpretation of the compensation laws. It arises in such fashion that frequently you can cite innumerable cases.

You take this question of where there is a man employed by an automobile dealer as a salesman. He comes to me as a lawyer, that dealer, and asks me the question, Is this salesman of mine subject to the wage and hour provision in the law?—assuming that it is a concern that is subject to the act. I take the facts in reference to his employment and turn to a decision of our supreme court, which is identical as to the employment, where the court has held that that employee or that individual is not an employee, but he is an individual contractor.

Now, the question in my mind is how I as a lawyer, and hundreds of others throughout the country confronted by the same question, can in good conscience and faith advise that man that that employee is not subject to the wage and hour provision, because he is in fact an independent contractor, as so determined by our supreme court, and to you in the determination and in the making of these rules which are applicable all over the country take into consideration the conflict of opinion that may exist as between States, for instance, in the determination of that question.

Mr. MCNULTY. Certainly; we always refer to decisions. We do not give opinions on the law as we think it ought to be.

Mr. KEEFE. Just one other question.

You then make your determination upon the specific facts of each specific case.

Mr. MCNULTY. We always limit our opinions either upon facts given by the inquirer in his communication to us, or as we have found them to be as a result of investigation.

Mr. KEEFE. If the supreme court of my State, for instance, were to hold that the relation of employee and employer does not exist, would you attempt by regulation or finding in your Department to override or question or challenge or in any way change that opinion of that supreme court? That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. MCNULTY. Of course, my answer has to be we might or might not, depending upon whether or not in view of opinions of other courts we felt the current of the decisions indicated the particular opinion was right or wrong, or whether in view of the language of the particular compensation law that it interpreted and the language of our act, we felt that the issue had been settled by that opinion, or that the opinion was in point with reference to our act.

REPORT OF HOME-MADE BEDSPREAD INVESTIGATION

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION,
Washington, April 12, 1940.

Hon. MALCOLM C. TARVER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TARVER: At the recent hearing on Labor Department appropriations, Mr. Daugherty, our Director of Research and Statistics, promised that we would shortly put in your hands a study of industrial home work in the manufacture of candlewick bedspreads. Attached you will find the results of a survey among the home workers made by the Children's Bureau at the request of the Wage and Hour Division.

As you know, a representative of the Wage and Hour Division was in Dalton after the completion of the Children's Bureau field work, to study other aspects of the problem. Besides visiting you in your office, he consulted employers, home workers, factory workers, civic leaders, bankers, and other business leaders, to get a comprehensive picture regarding the nature of the home-work problem since the enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Having the benefit of these surveys, we have reached the following conclusions:

(1) Much of the unemployment and poverty which was found to exist among the candlewicking families at the end of 1939 was the result of competitive factors over which the Fair Labor Standards Act had no influence. Even before the passage of the act, the chenille bedspread had captured much of the market which had formerly been occupied by the candlewick bedspread. Many of the families which formely engaged in candlewicking now have members at work in the chenille factories.

(2) The Children's Bureau points out that the existence of illegal child labor among many of the tufting families is openly conceded. It must be pointed out that this type of violation affects the health and education of the children in the community and is almost impossible to eradicate while home work continues to exist.

(3) The average earnings of hand tufters do not seem to exceed 10 cents an hour in the work which is now being done. This, of course, is far below the 32½-cent minimum required by law. It is our understanding that informed opinion in your community regards the hourly basis of computing wages as entirely impractical in home work, and is very strong for the view that the piece-rate method of compensation of a certain number of cents per ounce tufted, which was effective during N. R. A., represents the desirable solution. Without commenting at this time on desirability of a piece-rate method of compensation, we should like to point out that even to reach average compliance with the minimum wage fixed by law, it would be necessary for the spread houses to increase their payments to home workers for labor from 300 to 500 percent. This would cause a rise in the prices of the finished product and diminution of the market. Many of the persons in the Dalton area, in advocating piece rates, assume that the prices effective under the N. R. A. code of fair competition would be adopted. It must be pointed out that those prices were variously estimated to yield between 10 and 20 cents an hour.

(4) In our survey we were particularly struck by the poverty of the mountain families engaged in the home work; and it seemed to us, while the $3 per week earned by the average home-work family might serve to alleviate poverty in a small degree, that the actual solution lies elsewhere. Consultation with Dr. Alexander of the Farm Security Administration indicated that the home-work areas in the mountains near Dalton were all regarded as agriculturally submarginal and fit primarily for forest. It was Dr. Alexander's opinion that the primary remedy for poverty among the mountain families lay in their resettlement on better soil. Because of your interest in the welfare of these people, his view is submitted to you.

The Women's Bureau, recognizing the needs of the bedspread tufters, has undertaken a study of the use to which the skills of these women may be put through the development of community workshops. As our representative indicated to you, when in Dalton, the development of such workshops, with the aid of other Government agencies, may prove to be of great value.

Because of the interest of the Labor Committee of the House in pending legislation on this subject I am sending a copy of the attached report to the chairman of this committee.

Very truly yours,

PHILIP B. FLEMING,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers, Administrator.

HOME WORK IN THE CANLEWICK-BEDSPREAD INDUSTRY

(Prepared by Industrial Division, Children's Bureau, U. S. Department of Labor, April 1940)

DESCRIPTION OF THE STUDY

The candlewick-bedspread industry was selected as one of the industries in which present home-work conditions were to be briefly surveyed by the Children's Bureau at the request of the Wage and Hour Division. It served as an example of home work in a rural area and also of conditions in an industry which has made some effort to use home-work handbooks. Furthermore, it is of special interest because of the recent decline in home-work distribution by the industry, attributed by some to the Fair Labor Standards Act[1] and because of the shift from a hand-made to a machine-made product.

The field work for this study was carried on during October 1939. Two hundred families who had worked in this industry were visited who were scattered throughout the candlewick-bedspread area of northern Georgia and in one bordering county of Tennessee.[2] Some of the families were located through lists provided by employers, but most of them were located through information given by other home workers. Of these families, 78 had received home work during September or October 1939. The 122 other families had formerly been home workers in the industry, but had received no work as late as September 1939.

Very little home work was found in any of the areas visited. That only a comparatively small number of families with current work were located for interview during the time available for this brief survey is a reflection of the fact that only a few of the persons who at some previous time had been home workers of the industry were receiving work during the fall of 1939. The 122 families that were no longer doing home work when interviewed in October 1939 undoubtedly represent a much smaller proportion of all such families in the area than the 78 working families represent of all families receiving home work at that time.

The localities represented by the home workers visited include remote valley and mountain farming sections as well as towns, small communities along the main highway (U. S. route No. 41), and other rural settlements. Seventy of the 78 home-work families receiving home work currently lived in Whitfield, Murray, and Gordon Counties of Georgia. It is believed that the number of working families interviewed, even though small, was representative of the limited number of families doing home work for the industry in this area during the time of the study.

From the 78 currently employed home workers information was obtained on the amount and kind of home work being done, child labor, hours of work, earnings, extent of dependence on home-work earnings, and the use of handbooks required for home-work production under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. From the 122 families formerly doing home work, information was collected on the time they last did bedspread home work and on their present employment and general economic status. In addition, the representatives of the Bureau interviewed employers, county relief workers, union officials, and others in the counties visited regarding the background of the industry.

BACKGROUND OF THE INDUSTRY

Early handicraft phase

The hand tufting of candlewick bedspreads, long known as a handicraft of the southern Appalachian Mountain people, began to develop commercially in the early 1920's. The industry has grown up in northern Georgia, where the homework distributed by the industry has gone into a large proportion of the homes within a 50-mile radius of Dalton, Ga. The home workers have been people living in all types of communities in the area, the comparatively inaccessible mountain districts and the small villages and the towns. The employer's place of business was and still is usually a small 1-room "spread house," where preparations for distributing home work are carried on, including stamping designs on the sheeting used and assembling the candlewick yarn, so-called because the same kind of yarn was once used for hand tufting of bedspreads as was used for wicks of candles. The actual distribution of the bedspreads to the home workers, many of whom live in places remote from the employer's place of business, has been carried on by "haulers." This term is commonly used by the industry to refer to deliverymen who take the spreads to the workers' homes and who, in effect, serve also as contractors for the owner of the spreads. The owner would give the necessary sheeting, stamped with the designs, and the required yarn, to the hauler, who, in turn, hired, supervised, and paid the home workers. The hauler took a "commission" out of the money given him by the owner of the materials for the production.

Wage rates and earnings for home workers in the industry prior to the depression were considered, according to a representative of the industry, to have been generally not out of line with prevailing returns from other remunerative work available in the area. However, early in the depression, 1930–31, the employers set and the workers accepted greatly reduced rates of pay for the work. Indeed, so acute was the wage- and price-cutting trend that in 1932 some distributors formed the Candlewick Bedspread Association in the hope of stopping the downward movement.[3]

According to a study of the United States Women's Bureau, there were approximately 8,000 home workers in the industry in Georgia by 1933–34, of whom many worked only part time. (This study revealed that the usual weekly earnings in the period 1933–34 were less than $1 for 26 percent of the home workers and as much as $4 for only 10 percent. These earnings often represent a long workweek and daily hours from "sun up to sun down.") Other sources of income for these home-work families included farm products used and sold and a limited amount of wage employment. Some of the families were receiving relief.[4]

N. R. A. period

Under the N. R. A. a code of fair competition for the candlewick-bedspread industry was approved on June 1, 1934, and was in effect until May 1935, when the codes of the N. R. A. were invalidated by decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The wage clause of the code relating to home work did not prescribe a minimum hourly rate, but did establish a wage scale based on the number of ounces of yarn tufted into a spread. The rates were 8 cents per ounce of yarn for lightweight bedspreads and 10 cents an ounce for heavier spreads.[5] It was claimed by the manufacturers that the code piece rate would result in hourly earnings of 15 to 20 cents, or an increase of 200 to 300 percent over preceding rates.[6]

Although no statistics are available on hourly earnings of home workers under the N. R. A. piece rates, the assistant deputy administrator in charge of the code stated that home workers probably received less than 10 cents an hour.[7] The code permitted haulers' commissions to be taken out of the rates set, but placed a limitation on such commissions to 15 percent, or not more than 30 cents per spread. This limitation, however, proved to be difficult of enforcement.[8]

Growth in machine production

Within the brief span of 5 years, 1934–39, the candlewick hand-tufted bedspread area centering about Dalton, Ga., experienced an industrial revolution, tufting by machine methods supplanting hand tufting and production being enlarged.

In 1933 the development of the machine-tufted spread had started.[9] By 1938 there were in the north-Georgia area about 75 firms manufacturing tufted bedspreads in factories by a machine process known as chenilling. In these factories about 7,000 workers were employed.[10]

By 1938 about two-thirds of these manufacturers had completely discontinued the production of hand-tufted spreads, the machine-made product, called chenille bedspreads, having proved more profitable.[11] Sales of the chenille product increased rapidly, doubling every 2 years, and in 1938 sales were estimated to have reached $12,000,000.[12]

The main sales outlet for chenille products are department stores, chain stores, and mail-order houses. Another outlet is the highway "spread line" catering to tourists. These "spread lines" are found chiefly along United States Route 41 from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Atlanta, Ga., and so numerous are their displays of bedspreads that this part of the highway is sometimes known as "bedspread alley." Frequently the "spread line" operator has an indoor showroom and workroom either in the front room of his own dwelling or in a nearby shack. Usually these "lines" are an adjunct to a gasoline filling station. Many of these operators have their own machines for chenilling and a great many of the products offered for sale are made in their own homes or workrooms. They usually have a few hand-tufted bedspreads for sale which have been made by neighbors. They may also sell some machine-made "seconds" obtained from the factories making chenille products. Mail-order business is solicited.

In the early days of machine production the retail prices of machine-made spreads were relatively high, due partly to the fact that they require more yarn than hand-made spreads. As the factories became more efficient, and competition with the hand-tufted product developed, chenille bedspreads began to be produced for the low-priced market. Recently an electrically propelled punch-work needle was introduced which tufts a design using less yarn than generally is used in the chenille bedspread and which closely resembles the hand-tufted product. Another type of machine-made spread in the low-price field has the fluff sewed onto the material. Such innovations have made it possible for the machine-made candlewick bedspread to reach into the lower-priced markets formerly held by the cheaper hand-tufted bedspreads and various kinds of cotton and rayon spreads not of the candlewick type.

The introduction of machine-made spreads to the low-priced field gave a fresh impetus during 1937 to the production of a very low-priced type of hand-made spread requiring little yarn, which could be made by the home worker in about 2 hours and for which the home worker received 5, 10, or 15 cents. This type of spread had a short period of popularity, but from then until October 1938, when the Fair Labor Standards Act became effective, wage rates for hand tufting continued to be very low.

The demand for these cheap spreads having proved short-lived, apparently the only important market remaining for the hand-made bedspread, with the exception of those sold locally to tourists, is for the higher-priced heirloom type of bedspread.

Opportunities for factory employment increased in this north-Georgia area simultaneously with the decline of home work. Today many members of the mountain families that had formerly done hand tufting who could arrange transportation and could "make production" (i. e., produce sufficient work at piece rates paid to meet minimum-wage requirements) are working in the bedspread factories. Most of the factory workers live within 10 miles of the factory, some having moved to town to be near their work. Others come to work daily from distances of as much as 20 miles. At present most of the factory employees are young women. Men are employed chiefly as mechanics to service the machinery, but some also work as machine operators.

With this sudden change from a handicraft industry to one depending largely on machine methods of production, it has been inevitable that some of the former hand workers have not been absorbed into the factories on being deprived of employment opportunities in hand production. Throughout the history of manufacturing, this has been the experience of industries undergoing a revolution in methods of production. The contracted employment opportunities at hand tufting are clearly due to this technological change within the industry rather than to the application of minimum-wage regulation under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. Interesting evidence that the Fair Labor Standards Act is not the chief cause of reduced employment opportunities for hand tufters is contained in the report from the industry that for the year 1938 only 5 percent of the product of the candlewick-bedspread industry was hand tufted;[13] the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 did not go into effect until October 24 of that year.

Description of home-work processes

Home workers were found at the time of the Children's Bureau study to be engaged in three types of home work on candlewick bedspreads—hand tufting, fringing (a hand process performed on both hand-tufted and machine-made spreads), and operating chenilling machines.

Hand tufting: This is a comparatively simple hand operation that requires mainly strength and endurance. The worker receives from her employer a muslin sheet on which is stamped the pattern to be tufted together with the necessary yarn. The worker, using her own large tufting needle, lines the pattern with tufting stitches and then clips the stitches with scissors. The arduous part of tufting is pushing the needle with the yarn through the sheeting. The worker almost always has some protection for the finger used to push the needle. The time required to tuft and clip a spread ranges from about to 2 to as much as 36 or more hours, depending on the complexity of pattern, the weight of the muslin sheeting, and the speed of the worker. Sometimes the home worker hems the muslin, but frequently that is done at the "spread house." The laundering of the finished spread is taken care of by the employer after the tufted bedspread has been returned to him.

Fringing: Fringing is a semiskilled home-work process quite distinct from hand tufting. Workers stand at large frames and draw threads rapidly through the edges of a bedspread that has been stretched over the top of the frame and fastened down with clothespins. The spacing of the stitches is measured by lines drawn on the board over which the spread is fastened. The time required to fringe a bedspread is 1 to 3 hours, depending on the type of fringe. The volume of such work is small, since only a small proportion of bedspreads are fringed.

Operating chenilling machines: The operation of machines that do machine tufting is customarily a factory operation but occasionally is done in homes. In this home-work process the spread is tufted and the stitches clipped by machine. The operator uses the same type of muslin sheeting as does the hand tufter, on which the design is stamped and which the machine stitching follows. The machine used for chenilling is a special type of power sewing machine with an attachment designed to permit stitching which, when clipped and fluffed after laundering, takes on the appearance of chenille.

Legal regulation of home work in the candlewick-bedspread industry

During the time the field work for this industry was carried on, the statutory wage and hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938—that is, the 25-cent minimum hourly wage and the 44-hour maximum workweek with payment of time and one-half for overtime—were applicable to this industry as well as the 16-year minimum-age standard. No State legislation regulating industrial home work or minimum wages was in effect in Georgia.[14]

HOME-WORK CONDITIONS IN THE INDUSTRY

The findings of the study relative to conditions of home work, the home workers in the families, child labor, hours, and earnings are based on information obtained in interviews with the 78 families visited that had done home work on bedspreads in September or October, 1939.

The families and their home workers

In almost all of these 78 home-work families poor homes and other evidences of poverty were found. A comfortable home was a rarity. Most of the families outside the villages and towns were sharecroppers, tenant farmers, or farm laborers. Barren, hard dirt usually surrounded the family's dwelling. Boards were missing from steps and porches. Doors and windows were loosely fitted, and windowpanes were broken or missing. An open fireplace in the front room and the kitchen stove in the rear provided little warmth when cold mountain breezes blew through the house. Floors were splintered and furniture was scant. Frequently the family owned a hog, a cow, and some chickens. Often they raised corn for the hog, vegetables to can or store away for winter use, and cotton to sell. The people often complained because their cash return from cotton planting was low.

In many of the home-work families there was, however, some cash income from sources other than farm work or hand tufting. One-third of the families had one or more members who worked in chenille or other textile factories. Another third, without such factory employment, had members in other nonagricultural occupations—helpers in blacksmith shops, casual laborers, or workers in sawmills. In general, the families welcomed bedspread home work as a means of adding a small amount of cash to their low incomes. Many home workers commented that home-work earnings had helped to send children to school, to pay for clothes, and to buy extras. Seldom, however, was it the chief source of income.

The need in many of the families interviewed and the meagerness of their home-work earnings is suggested by the fact that slightly more than one-fifth of the total number of families interviewed were receiving some assistance from public funds, including employment under the W. P. A. or in the C. C. C., aid to dependent children, old-age pensions, or direct relief.

Of the 78 home-work families visited that were currently engaged in home work for the bedspread industry (i. e. in September or October 1939), 59 received bedspreads for hand tufting, 16 for fringing, and 3 for chenilling by machine.

Many of the workers called for and returned the home work to the employer's "spread house" or factory. Some employers, however, delivered the work to certain families, particularly those living at some distance from the employer's place of business.

These families interviewed received their home work from 22 different employers, seven of whom handled hand-tufted bedspreads exclusively. Eight others operated chenille factories and distributed machine-made bedspreads to be fringed, but at least two of these chenille factories distributed bedspreads for hand-tufting. The remaining 7 employers operated highway "spread lines"; their home workers did hand tufting, and in the case of one worker, chenilling.

In the home-working families it was not uncommon for members of the family to help the person in the family, usually the mother, who obtained the work from the employer and took responsibility for the work, completing and returning it, and who, in this report, is called the chief home worker of the family. In one-third of the families 2 or more persons were engaged in work on the bedspreads, even though during the period of this study home-work distribution was slack and many of the family workers were engaged in farm labor. There were 114 home workers in the 78 families in the pay period selected for study. The assistants to the chief home worker were often the daughter, who helped with the hand-tufting process, or younger children, old people, and men of the family, who were used to clip stitches.

Of the 78 chief home workers more than half were under 40 years of age; about a fourth were 50 years of age or older, of which only 4 were 60 or older. All except 3 were women (each of the men was a fringer).

Most chief home workers were mothers of families with home responsibilities. Even so, nearly two-fifths of the chief home workers interviewed stated that they would be able to accept factory employment if it were available. In about one-eighth of the families the chief home worker was considered too old to work outside the home or was unable to do so because of some physical handicap. Many families, including several whose chief home worker could not accept factory employment, had older children or adults who were eager for opportunities for mill or factory employment.

[14] In Tennessee, where one home-work family included in the study resided, there was no State legislation regulating industrial home work on candlewick bedspreads and no State minimum-wage law.

Child labor

Of the 59 children 10 and under 16 years of age in the 78 working families doing home work, 12, or one-fifth, according to admission of the parents, had helped with the home work during the pay period for which home-work employment information was obtained for the family. The 2 youngest children reported to be working on bedspreads were 10 years of age; 3 were 12 or 13 years of age; and 7 were 14 or 15. Ten of these children were in families doing hand-tufting work; the other 2 were in families doing fringing. Since hand tufting is an arduous task, requiring strong fingers to pull the heavy yarn through the muslin sheeting, the younger children do not tuft, as a rule, except on the lighter spreads. However, they do assist in clipping stitches, which must be carefully done so as not to cut the cloth in the clipping process. Families stated that during the school term children often helped to clip spreads after school.

Since fringing is a somewhat more skilled occupation few children were found engaged in this process. The two child fringers were a girl of 14 and a boy of 15, who was a newspaper carrier also.

The extent of child labor on bedspread home work found in October 1939 was probably less than occurs at other times of the year. In most of the regions visited, schools were closed for a 5-week period in order that the children might assist in picking the cotton crop. About two-fifths of the 97 children 6 and under 16 years of age in the families visited were in the fields picking cotton.[15]

Some children who helped on the bedspreads worked in the fields also. About two-fifths of the children between 6 and 16 years of age were working at bedspread home work, at cotton picking, at other farm work, or at more than one of these occupations. Some of the children picking cotton when the family was visited in October might have been found helping with the home work at other seasons of the year if the work was pressing enough to require their help.

The use of home-work handbooks

At the time of the study the regional office of the Wage and Hour Division at Atlanta had issued 430 home-work handbooks on application from 10 employers in the candlewick-bedspread industry. It was understood that applications for handbooks from this industry had been due to the influence of the labor-standards committee of the Tufted Bedspread Manufacturers Association, organized to cooperate with the Wage and Hour Administration in regulating the industry. The 22 employers for whom the 78 home-work families interviewed worked included 7 employers who had applied for handbooks. The home workers visited, who worked for 2 of these employers, were not using the handbooks. None of the handbooks found had entries prior to July 1, 1939.

Of the 78 home-work families visited less than two-fifths were found to have handbooks. Greater disregard for the handbook record-keeping requirement was found among the workers doing hand tufting than among those doing fringing. Only 16, or about one-fourth of the families doing the hand tufting, had been given handbooks by their employers; while 14 of the 16 families doing fringing used handbooks. No handbooks were found in the three families engaged in operating chenilling machines at home.

In the families of hand tufters it was found that handbooks were in use in 16 of the 59 families interviewed. No family had more than 1 handbook and none worked for more than 1 employer. Even though a third of these families had 2 or more members working on bedspreads, in no case did the family have separate handbooks for each worker. In these families the handbooks did not show actual hours worked, hourly earnings, and total earnings for individual members of the family. In almost all the handbooks used by hand tufters, that were seen by the Children's Bureau representatives, the entries of hours worked indicated hourly earnings equivalent to the legal minimum. Only 2 handbooks showed an hourly rate less than 25 cents. The entries on total earnings and the piece rates paid appeared generally to be accurately reported.

In the 16 families fringe workers it was found that handbooks were in use in 14 families (in each of 4 of these homes there were 2 handbooks). Two the 14 families with handbooks, however, received work from 2 employers but had handbooks for only 1.

For seven fringers the handbook entries represented the work of two or more members of the family.

More care in filling out the record of hours in the handbooks was noted among the fringers than among the hand tufters. Fringers employed by one firm were keeping daily time sheets on which they entered clock hours for time worked each day. The employer computed from these sheets the total weekly hours for entry into the handbook.

On the whole, however, little significance appeared to be attached to the use of handbooks. One employer stated frankly that she did not have the time to "bother" with the extra clerical work and bookkeeping involved. Frequently handbook entries on various items were incomplete or missing for several pay periods. Most workers were found to be poorly informed regarding the purpose of the handbook and the proper method of making entries. Usually the worker herself had entered the hours worked even though the regulations specify that all entries be made by the employer or [15] Three-fourths of the children picking cotton were under 14 years of age. The youngest child was 4 years of age and 3 children were less than 6 years old. Children of 11 and 12 were reported to have picked as much as 100 pounds of cotton a day, working long hours.

his representative. In all cases the worker knew the proper number of hours to report in order that the piece rate paid on the bedspread would indicate the legal hourly minimum wage.

In numerous instances workers were unwilling to give a detailed and complete statement of the exact time they had worked on the job for which hour entries were made in the handbook. One of the workers reported that an employer had threatened home workers doing hand tufting that "the law" would get them if they revealed that they were receiving less than the legal minimum. One employer stated to Bureau representatives that he did not use handbooks for his workers in one area because the workers were religious and would not accept handbooks because of the "lying" involved in their use.

Some notes from the field investigator's reports suggest the difficulty of getting accurate information on hours, whether for the handbook or for purposes of study.

"On one occasion the home worker's husband was listening attentively to his wife upholding the accuracy of her handbook record. Finally he interrupted, addressing his wife: 'The Government is working for the people. They want to help you. They can't help you unless you help the law. Don't tell this Government lady you can make that spread in 4 hours because you can't. You can't even make it in 8.' The wife tried to quiet him by saying, 'I'm taking care of this. I'm taking care of this.' Even after her husband's accusations, she would not admit the handbook record was wrong, but did say reluctantly that she was a 'mighty slow' worker.

"A former home worker said that she was prepared to tell the 'Government lady' her story. She prefaced her story by saying that she was a Christian and had been brought up to tell the truth and that people who did not tell the truth were punished both in this world and the next. She referred to her neighbor, a home worker whom the representative had just interviewed, saying that this friend had been lying about her handbook and as a result was punished. The punishment was a broken leg. Then she went on to relate that she herself had taken a spread to make for a certain distributor, at the time when this employer was asking workers to time themselves to see if they could 'make production.' She had been told that she must make one-eighth of this spread in 2 hours and only if she completed the work in the required time could she expect future spread work. She timed herself and it took 3 hours and 40 minutes to do the work. Indignant, she assured the Bureau representative that she was considered to be a fast worker and didn't know anyone who could 'make production' for this employer."

Because of the scarcity of hand-tufting work, most of the hand tufters in general were making no more than 1 or 2 spreads a week and were working less than 20 hours a week.

In most cases where the home-work handbooks were in use, the home workers reported to the Children's Bureau representative that the hours given in the handbooks (generally showing exactly the hours which, at the piece rates paid, would yield the minimum hourly rate under the Fair Labor Standards Act) were correct. Also, because hand tufting is done at irregular intervals along with house and farm work, Bureau representatives had great difficulty in obtaining details as to the actual periods spent in completing the work represented in the reported pay period. In the case of the 10 families that were not using handbooks, and for whom the number of hours worked in their last weekly pay period could be approximately determined, the weekly hours worked by the chief home workers were 20 or more in only 4 families, although cases were found of work in excess of 44 hours a week by workers who said they were slow.

The fringers interviewed had more regular work and generally reported longer hours in the workweek than the hand tufters. Half of the 15 individual fringers reporting hours had worked more than 35 hours in their last weekly pay period.

Hourly earnings

At the time of this study producers in the candlewick-bedspread industry subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 were supposed to pay workers the prevailing Federal minimum of 25 cents an hour, with time and a half for hours worked in excess of 44. For the workers for whom it was possible to get adequate information on hours worked, it was found that actual earnings were frequently less than 25 cents an hour and that hourly earnings for hand tufters tended to be lower than for fringers.

Among hand tufters using handbooks it was impossible to get information on hours worked that could be used for computing hourly earnings because of the workers' reluctance to disclose working hours in excess of those entered in the handbook (all except 2 showed hours of work yielding 25 cents an hour). Information on hourly earnings for hand tufters is therefore given for only 24 who were not using the handbooks and for whom information on hours worked during the pay period studied was obtained through careful interviewing. It was found that the hourly earnings of these 24 ranged from 3 to 22 cents an hour and that half were receiving less than 10 cents an hour.

Among fringe workers hourly earnings appeared to be nearer the 25-cent minimum than for hand tufters, although some made less than 20 cents an hour. Fringe workers were generally found to be working at a fast rate of speed and at least in some instances to be completing the assigned work in the time allowed by the employer for making the 25-cent minimum.

The three home workers operating chenilling machines reported hourly earnings of 25 or 30 cents.

Weekly earnings

Total earnings on a weekly basis were not available for many families, since the data on hours and earnings were obtained on the basis of pay periods shown in their home-work handbooks and often these were not weekly periods. However, in the 11 families doing hand tufting and reporting earnings on a weekly basis the amount received for the home work was found to range from $1.25 to $3.50 a week.

In the 14 families of fringe workers that reported weekly earnings the amount received ranged from $3 to $26, half of them receiving $12 or more a week. The family earning $26 had two full-time workers.

BASIS OF WAGE RATES AND ATTITUDES OF EMPLOYERS TOWARD WAGE REGULATION

Through interviews with some employers of home workers in the industry as well as from the information obtained from home workers it was found that much of the problem of controlling home-work conditions in this industry centers around the piece-rate basis of making wage payments and the low level of rates paid.

The candlewick-bedspread industry never has paid and does not now pay its home workers on an hourly basis. Both hand tufting and fringing are paid entirely on a piece-rate basis. The rates vary for different patterns and employers pay different rates for the same pattern. With the exception of one fringer who was paid for reported overtime, it was found that workers were not paid the difference where piece-rate earnings for recorded time worked were less than the amount they should have received under the legal hourly minimum.

Many workers reported that prices on the common patterns had increased since the fall of 1938, undoubtedly as a result of the influence of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. For example, the rate for the single hobnail pattern, a relatively simple one, was reported in one case to have increased from 60 cents in November 1938 to 90 cents in 1939. Certain heavy spreads, which paid $1 and $2 in 1938, were reported to have doubled in price since; and others, which formerly paid $4, were found to pay $5. However, it was also reported that piece-rate prices paid to a few workers employed by line operators in one area had declined since the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 went into effect. Moreover in one instance it was found that an employer who distributed work to an isolated rural area paid only 25 cents for hand tufting on a pattern for which other employers, whose workers lived in less remote areas, paid $1.

At the time of the study the unstandardized piece rates of the past few years were in some cases being replaced by rates arrived at on a time basis, in order to approximate more nearly the hourly rates of pay required under the Fair Labor Standards Act. A few employers had timed workers doing the home-work processes while working on the employer's premises. They arrived at an estimate of the number of hours necessary to work certain patterns by determining the time it took a selected worker to complete a portion of the spread. Piece rates on the different patterns were then set accordingly. Some workers reported that fast rather than average workers were used in such time studies conducted by several employers.

It was found that a few of the employers of hand tufters as well as of fringers who used this method of testing the speed of workers tried to select their home workers on this basis. Also, in order to know what the piece rates would yield the particular workers in hourly earnings, a large Dalton factory employing fringers chose only those workers who demonstrated at the factory that they could fringe a spread in the time considered to be standard. In the case of hand tufting, it was explained by several workers that employers had told them that their hourly earnings on the piece rates set would equal the legal minimum if they completed the spread in a determined number of hours. The workers were then told that if they could not make the spread in the prescribed time they need not expect further employment. As a result, most workers would say that they could complete work in the prescribed time, even if it took them twice as long. Interviews with workers and employers revealed that these employers probably were aware that under this system most of their workers could not earn the legal hourly minimum under the piece rates paid.

Two of the employers of hand tufters interviewed stated that they set their piece rates by a combination of the time-study method discussed above and the "ounce" method; that is, they ascertained the time taken to tuft certain number of ounces of yarn in making a spread of a specific pattern and set the piece rate on the spread according to the number of ounces of yarn that the spread requires.

The ounce method was the basis of the piece rates prescribed by the bedspread code under the N. R. A., but was not wholly satisfactory because the rates set did not take sufficient account of such factors as complexity of the pattern and the weight of the sheeting. This is illustrated by the statement of one employer who said that haulers had had to bargain with workers to get them to make certain complicated patterns involving such stitches as French knots. French knots require a long time to make, although the amount of yarn required is no greater than for other patterns taking less time.

Interviews with several employers of hand tufters indicated clearly that these employers opposed the hourly wage as the basis for minimum-wage requirements and the present handbook system, preferring a piece-rate basis of wage standards such as the ounce method used under the N. R. A. if wages are to be regulated for home work in the industry. Opinions differed among employers regarding the adequacy of the price per ounce set in the N. R. A. code. Some advocated that the same rate be paid, others that it be reduced, still others that it be raised. In advocating a return to an ounce basis the employers interviewed held that standard piece rates set according to the amount of yarn used in the common patterns and with some account taken of the time required to work such patterns would yield all workers a "fair" wage.

The employers interviewed, in addition to preferring piece-rate wage standards to a minimum wage on an hourly basis, were unanimous in the opinion that the handbook system of record keeping was too involved to be practicable, and further indicated that accurate entries of the working time of hand tufters could not be expected because of the irregular way in which the work necessarily was done. With regard to the hourly basis for wage payment to home workers, they asserted that the legal minimum was in general too high and that a time basis is impractical because it penalizes faster workers and does not permit the predetermination of labor costs considered necessary for quoting prices on orders.

FAMILIES FORMERLY DOING HOME WORK

Home-work production in the candlewick-bedspread industry had dwindled to a small portion of its former volume prior to October 24, 1938, the date on which the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 went into effect. Families having home-work employment at the time of this study represented only a small portion of the total families which had at one time drawn part of their income from home work. Children's Bureau representatives visited some of the families which had formerly done home work in order to determine the consequences to such families of the loss of home-work employment.

Among 122 families visited whose most recent bedspread home work had been done prior to September 1, 1939, many had discontinued home work a considerable time before October 1938. That the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 was not directly the cause of the discontinuance of home work in this industry is indicated by the fact that almost all the workers interviewed had been receiving only small quantities of work at very irregular periods if at all during the year or two preceding the effective date of the act.

The statement by 62 percent of the 114 families reporting the reason for stopping home work was that haulers had discontinued their routes or that spread producers no longer had work for them. Workers frequently dated the time home work stopped from the time when the machines got the work. Sixteen percent said they had stopped work because piece rates had fallen so low that they "couldn't make anything." "Spreads would be a heap of help," one woman said, "but not at those prices." In 4 cases, the family's discontent with low earnings had been aggravated by their feeling that the hauler had cheated them out of some of their wages. Ten percent of the families gave up home work because some member of the family obtained factory employment.

It was difficult to determine the extent to which these families had relied on home-work earnings. In few instances did workers indicate that "spread money" had been their main source of income. Workers who had made bedspreads solely as a pastime, and for whom the earnings had been merely a convenient "extra" were equally few in number. Home-work earnings commonly had been supplemental to other sources of income and had been utilized for the purchase of clothing, things for the table, and school supplies for the children. Usually the family was poor, and cash earnings, from whatever source, were a welcome addition to the family's income.

The families of former home workers were found to be in the same occupational and low-income groups as families currently employed in home work. Many were sharecroppers or tenant farmers, growing much of their own food and producing cotton as a cash crop. Very few owned their own farms. During the cotton- and pea-picking seasons, men, women, and children hired out as wage hands. More than half of them had no member in nonagricultural employment.

One or more members of about one-fourth of the families were working in a chenille-bedspread factory or a textile mill, at the time of the study. In an equal number of families at least one member had some type of nonfarm employment other than factory work, working as mechanics, filling-station attendants, carpenters, painters, store clerks, and housekeepers.

Of the 122 families visited 20 reported that they had been receiving public assistance, work relief, or direct relief at the time they last worked at bedspreads; 24 were receiving such assistance when interviewed for this study. Sources of assistance included the W. P. A., the C. C. C., the N. Y. A., aid to dependent children, and old-age assistance.

Almost all the families visited that had formerly done home work stated that they are now getting along somehow without it. This was true of most of the families that had once considered "spread money" a necessary part of their income. There was a general feeling among these families that the loss of home work had not greatly altered their circumstances. One worker said, "We was just as poor when we was turfin' (hand tufting) as since."

It was generally necessary for workers to make some adjustments to their loss of home work. Many families said they "didn't miss the spreads but did miss spread money," and "sure did want the work back." This was especially true in the remote mountain areas where other opportunities for earning cash income were very scarce. Some of these families were willing to take bedspread home work even at the very low rates of 1937–38, although others declared they would not take them unless rates were higher than when they did their last home work. Several families declared they were making a better living without spread work because they now devoted their time to their farm and homes.

In a number of families in which the wife wanted the home work, husbands and grown children strongly opposed it. Stories were told of women who received $1 or less a week for their labor, working steadily from early morning until late at night. The husband in one family, which now obtained its entire income from farm produce, said: "I seen young girls bowed over like a rainbow, workin' spreads day and night for just about nuthin'. It was not good for their health." When an older worker said she would like spread work again, her young daughter, who managed the family's farm, remarked to the Bureau representative, "Humped over those things day and night? I'm glad they took 'em away."

Persons in many of these families had signed a petition which was filed by the industry with the Wage and Hour Division of the United States Department of Labor in February 1939, in which it was requested that home work in the industry be exempted under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. This petition stated that practically "all * * * cash income" for "the bare necessities of life" of the home workers signing the petition had been derived from hand tufting and that all such employment had ceased since enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Act. Usually the petition had been brought to the family by a hauler or former hauler. A few workers whose names were on the petition list stated that they had not seen or signed the petition. Some of the signatures were reported to Bureau representatives to be those of children or of persons who never did home work. It appeared, however, that for the most part the signatures on the petition were the genuine signatures of persons who had done home work at some time. The usual reason which the persons interviewed gave for signing was that they "wanted to sign up for more work" or to "bring back the work." Persons who had signed, although they themselves had never done home work, said they wanted to "help the others." Few of the signers had read the petition or knew its contents in detail.

Despite the fact that many former home workers signed the petition, it was found that these families have in general reconciled themselves to the loss of spread work and believe it will not revive. As one worker expressed it, "I reckon as how the machines has took possession of candlewick and I guess they don't wants to fool with tufting no more."

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS FOR THE CANDLEWICK-BEDSPREAD INDUSTRY

Home-work production in the industry: In October 1938, when the Fair Labor Standards Act went into effect, handicraft production no longer predominated in the candlewick-bedspread industry, and production was chiefly by machine methods carried on in factories. Even before the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 had gone into effect, industrial home work had ceased to afford more than intermittent employment to a small number of families.

Child labor: The basic 16-year minimum-age standard for the employment of minors under the Fair Labor Standards Act was found frequently to be ignored. Of the 59 children between 10 and 16 years of age in the 78 home-work families visited, 12, or one-fifth, were reported to have been engaged in industrial home work on bedspreads during the particular pay period studied. Five of these children were 10 to 13 years of age, and 7 were 14 or 15 years of age.

Hours of work: Families doing hand tufting on bedspreads received only small amounts of work and seldom did persons work more than 20 hours a week on home work. Hours of work for those engaged in fringing bedspreads tended to be longer, 35 or more hours for the majority of the persons reporting.

Hourly earnings: For the workers for whom it was possible to get adequate information on hours worked, earnings, which were based on piece rates, failed in general to yield the minimum hourly earnings of 25 cents required by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 at the time of this survey. For the chief home workers in the 24 families engaged in hand tufting for whom reliable information on this point could be obtained, the earnings ranged from 3 to 22 cents an hour; a number were receiving less than 10 cents an hour. Hourly earnings, in cases where reliable information could be obtained, tended to be higher for the fringe workers than for hand tufters; although for some they were less than 20 cents, for others they were as much as 25 cents.

Weekly earnings: In the families doing hand tufting that reported earnings covering a weekly period the total income from home work commonly was found to be less than $3. On the other hand, the earnings from home work of half the families of fringe workers who reported earnings on a weekly basis were often more than $10 a week. In both groups earnings often represented the work of more than one person.

Use of home-worker handbooks: Attempts under the Fair Labor Standards Act to control wages and hours of home workers through the use of home-work handbooks have failed in this industry because of the frequent falsification of the handbook records on hours and hourly earnings. The following obstacles to accurate determination and recording of hours worked were found:

(a) Home workers did not know exactly how much time they spent on the work, particularly for that which was done at irregular intervals during the day.

(b) Assistance of members of the family other than the one to whom the handbook was issued was not counted.

(c) Home workers were reluctant to report total time worked for fear of incurring their employer's disfavor and losing their work.

In addition, it was found that many employers were not bothering to use handbooks. Only one-fourth of the families of hand tufters visited had handbooks, but most of the small number of fringers visited were using them.

Economic position of families in the area doing home work and formerly doing home work: Many of the families currently doing home work, as well as those that previously were home workers, lived on farms and earned a meager living as tenant farmers or sharecroppers, or live in small rural villages and engage in farm work or in other occupations. Earnings from home work, therefore, have been welcome as contributing needed additional income. However, the problem of income and standards of living for the people in this area is not one that can be solved by wage exemptions under the Fair Labor Standards Act designed to foster industrial home work in the candlewick-bedspread industry. (Machine production was too well established before the enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to yield to a revival of hand production on a large scale.) The economic handicaps of the people of this locality, as well as of other sections of the southern Appalachian area, involve agricultural problems of land use and population distribution, and must be dealt with on this basis if they are to be solved in a satisfactory manner.

LETTER FROM REPRESENTATIVE TARVER TO COLONEL FLEMING

APRIL 15, 1940.

Col. PHILIP B. FLEMING,
Administrator, Wage-Hour Division, Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLONEL FLEMING: I am in receipt of your letter of April 12, 1940, with enclosure, relating to the investigation which has been made in work in the rural bedspread industry in my district in Georgia.

I regret that after careful examination of these documents I am unable to feel the investigation in question has either been fairly conducted or the conclusions indicated have been honestly reached. I realize this is a very drastic statement to make, and I have not made it except after a very thorough consideration of the facts, which, in my judgment, amply warrant it.

Your attention is called to the statements I made in your presence upon your appearance before the subcommittee on Labor-Federal Security appropriations on February 14 of the present year. These statements are set out on pages 393–395 of the hearings. Apparently the statements made by me at that time, and in a number of prior communications to your office, have received no consideration whatever, but the report of findings and the conclusions reached thereon have been based upon the alleged statements of certain unnamed persons whom the investigators of the Children's Bureau and your own investigators are supposed to have contacted in my district in Georgia.

At the same time, while the Children's Bureau investigators are supposed to have contacted 200 families who had worked in this industry, no attention has been paid to the petitions which I submitted last year from approximately 3,500 home-made bedspread workers, except that some incidental reference is made to the manner in which the petitions were procured in a way intended to reflect discredit upon the statements made therein.

It is also noted that in the second paragraph of your letter you make reference to the fact that a representative of your Division was in Dalton after the completion of the Children's Bureau work "to study other aspects of the problem." As an evidence of the bad faith of your report, I beg to say this gentleman heartily accorded with every statement I made regarding the local situation and the necessity for some amendment to the law to take care of these workers, notwithstanding which he has apparently submitted to you a report directly contrary to his expressed views.

No explanation is, of course, offered of the fact complained of by me on page 395 of the hearings that, although I was responsible for this investigation and for the provision of the funds necessary in order to make it, I was not contacted by the persons making it for the Children's Bureau nor given any opportunity to put them in touch with people from whom they might have received information. I may say further at this point that this procedure was in direct conflict with a promise made to me by Mr. VINCENT, who came to the House of Representatives during the latter days of last year's session and assured me that the investigators, when they visited Georgia, would contact me and give me an opportunity to cooperate with them in the full investigation of existing conditions.

I also call attention to the information I gave upon the hearing relating to the treatment and refusal of offered cooperation of those who furnished material for workers to use in making bedspreads when the Children's Bureau investigators visited my section.

It is quite apparent that the statements made and conclusions reached in the so-called report are merely a rehash of conclusions which had already been reached before the investigation was begun. I am forced, therefore, to the conclusion that the real purpose of the investigation and report was not to discover conditions among rural workers and try to devise some way to remedy them, but merely to endeavor to furnish additional justification for refusing to accord relief and for persistent opposition to necessary amendments to the Wage-Hour Act which would remedy this situation.

As an indication of this purpose, it is noted that copy of this report has been sent to the Labor Committee of the House, whereas the report you send me is sent to me individually and not to the Subcommittee on Labor-Federal Security Appropriations, of which I am chairman, although that committee made provision for the funds under which the investigation was had.

The pitiful conclusion stated in your letter as coming from Dr. Alexander, of the Farm Security Administration, "That the primary remedy for poverty among the mountain families lay in their resettlement on better soil," demonstrates the paucity of ideas on the part of you or any other official dealing with the happiness of these people as to how their condition may be remedied. Of course, there is no effort being made by Dr. Alexander's organization, or anyone else, to relocate them on better soil, and the suggestion of a remedy which is unobtainable is merely intended to palliate the denial of relief.

Referring more specifically to the report of the Children's Bureau, I wish to point out that even that report, tainted as it is by the purposes which I have described in the beginning of this letter, recognizes the desperate condition of these workers. Its most vulnerable point is its strained endeavor to show that that condition is not the result of the enforcement of the Wage-Hour Act and that the workers themselves are reconciled to the loss of their work. The alleged quotation from the statement of a worker, contained on page 29 of the report, "I reckon as how the machines has took possession of candlewick, and I guess they don't wants to fool with tufting no more," contains language of a type frequently attributed to the people of north Georgia, but which, while I was reared among them, I have never in all of my life heard any of them use in the grossly illiterate way stated, and, of course, is intended as an additional reflection upon the type of people engaged in this work.

The statement on page 32 of the report, "Machine production was too well established before the enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to yield to a revival of hand production on a large scale," gives a thoroughly inadequate picture of the situation. Machine production did not destroy the home-made bedspread work, although it reduced it considerably in volume, mainly because so-called bedspread manufacturers who had been furnishing materials for the use of these rural workers found greater profits in the machine-made bedspreads and reduced the amount of their investment in the rural home-made bedspread work. Notwithstanding this, there still continues a large market for the home-made bedspread, as any buyer for one of the large department stores in Washington could have, and would have, told your investigators if they had seen proper to contact them. Only within the last 2 or 3 weeks an employee of Woodward & Lothrop, in Washington, informed my wife that they had a very great demand for the home-made bedspreads but were unable to obtain them. Numerous ladies of the congressional set in Washington have recently bought considerable quantities of these home-made bedspreads and apparently much prefer them to the chenille spreads. At least 3,500 people were employed in the rural handicraft bedspread work when the wage-hour law went into effect, but very few are now employed.

The investigators evidently secured only the kind of information desired and only from people who were willing to furnish the kind of information they desired. As an evidence of their unfairness, I quote the following statement made on page 4 of their report: "This study revealed that the usual weekly earnings in the period 1933–34 were less than $1 for 26 percent of the home workers and as much as $4 for only 10 percent. These earnings often represent a long workweek and daily hours from 'sunup to sundown.'" In contradiction of this statement appears the following language in the report on page 18: "Because of the scarcity of hand-tufting work, most of the hand tufters in general were making no more than one or two spreads a week and were working less than 20 hours a week."

In the first-quoted language the investigator tries to make it appear that earnings were less than $1 for 26 percent of the home workers and as much as $4 for as much as 10 percent, and that these earnings represent a long workweek and daily hours from sunup to sundown. In the second-quoted statement it appears that hours were less than 20 per week and that most of the hand tufters were making no more than 1 or 2 spreads a week. As a matter of fact, the earnings in the industry have been low, although not so low as the investigators have sought to make it appear. Low as they were, they represented the difference between having something and having nothing. The amendments to the act which have been proposed do not contemplate the continuance of any lower wages or income for these workers than it may be possible for them to be paid and still be able to continue their work. It is proposed to vest discretion in the whole matter in yourself as Administrator. You could provide under such an amendment for some sort of payment plan such as was provided under N. R. A. under which the pay of the workers could be substantially increased and they still be permitted to earn something. Opposition to your being vested with such discretion is not understandable except upon the basis of the views of those who would use the Wage-Hour Act as a vehicle of oppression rather than as a means of bringing about better conditions of the laboring people of our country.

Since you have sent a copy of your report to the chairman of the Labor Committee of the House, I am sending her a copy of this letter in the hope she will not make use of the report without at the same time making use of this criticism thereof which, however severe it may seem in some of its strictures, is in every respect amply justified by the facts.

I am also transmitting copies of this letter to Hon. ROBERT RAMSPECK, ranking democratic member of the Committee on Labor in the House, and to Hon. GRAHAM A. BARDEN, who is the author of certain legislation which would tend to correct this condition.

It should also be pointed out that the identical provision relating to rural handiwork contained in the Barden bill is also included in the committee bill, and under the administration of your predecessor I was assured that that provision had his support.

Yours truly,

M. C. TARVER.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article entitled "Communism in America" by Mr. Soterios Nicholson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make an addition to a minority report I filed the other day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by my colleague the gentleman from Indiana, Hon. RAYMOND SPRINGER, which appears in the April issue of the National Republican.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Col. O. R. McGuire, general counsel of the American Good Government Society of Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of the business on the Speaker's desk, and following the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND ITS SOLUTION

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the press of last Friday carried the news that representatives of three great religious organizations of this country—the National Catholic Welfare Conference, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, and the Central Conference of American Rabbis—have joined together to call a meeting of outstanding leaders on unemployment and its solution, to be held in the city of Washington on June 4, 5, and 6. In their description of this conference they say they will seek "to define impartially the issue and to lay upon the conscience of the Nation the paramount necessity of its solution."

There is an article appearing on the front page of the last issue of the newspaper Labor that describes plans for this conference.

I have asked this time to say that I feel there is no problem in which moral and spiritual values are so clearly at stake as in unemployment, and therefore, no agency is quite so well equipped to attack it as the forces of religion. I welcome this move and hope that the Members of Congress will do what they can to forward it. I am sure that those of us who have worked together in our House conference on unemployment will be eager to give to these religious leaders the benefit of all the work and study which we are now giving to the problem. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a letter I have received from Hon. Josephus Daniels, American Ambassador to Mexico.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an argument I made before the Committee on Agriculture of the House in support of the bill (H. R. 8748).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an argument I made before the Committee on Agriculture of the House in support of sugar legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS TO CERTAIN WIDOWS OF VETERANS OF THE CIVIL WAR

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6901) granting increase of pensions to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

"The name of Margaret D. Cole, widow of Bennett Cole, late of Company M, Fifteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

"The name of Sarah K. Carter, widow of Samuel A. Carter, late of Company K, Twenty-seventh Regiment Iowa Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us about the Senate amendments?

Mr. LESINSKI. The bill H. R. 6901 is a Civil War pension bill which was passed by the House July 5, 1939. The bill passed the Senate on April 10, 1940, with amendments. Six widows have died since the passage of the bill in the House, and they have been eliminated, and the Senate has added 31 of their own private pension bills.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this an increase in the pension?

Mr. LESINSKI. Ten dollars per month for each widow.

Mr. RANKIN. A $10 increase?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. What does that make the pension?

Mr. LESINSKI. The total cost last year of the bill we passed——

Mr. RANKIN. I am talking about the individual pension.

Mr. LESINSKI. From $40 to $50.

Mr. RANKIN. You raised them from $40 to $50?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes; on account of age and physical disabilities.

Mr. RANKIN. What is the marriage date?

Mr. LESINSKI. They were all married prior to 1905.

Mr. RANKIN. But they could have married as late as 1905, which was 40 years after the war, and they would be raised to $50 a month?

Mr. LESINSKI. The rate they now receive is in accordance with existing laws.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, did the committee report out this bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes; and the bill was passed by the House last year, and the Senate passed it a few days ago and added 31 of their bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS FOR DISABILITIES INCURRED PRIOR TO APRIL 21, 1898

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7733) to provide increased pensions for veterans of the Regular Establishment with service-connected disability incurred in or aggravated by service prior to April 21, 1898.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That effective on the first day of the month following the month in which this act is enacted, the rates of pension prescribed by paragraph II of part II of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended, shall be payable to veterans of the Regular Establishment entitled to pensions under the general pension law on account of service-connected disabilities incurred in or aggravated by service prior to April 21, 1898: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to reduce any pension under any act, public or private.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain to us what this bill does?

Mr. LESINSKI. Last year we passed the bill (S. 522) which gave a veteran of the Regular Establishment an increase in pension up to 75 percent of the World War veteran's pension for service-connected disabilities.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman means that these are veterans who were not in the World War but in the service during this time?

Mr. LESINSKI. Peacetime service prior to April 21, 1898.

Mr. RANKIN. What does this bill give them?

Mr. LESINSKI. We had provided in Senate 522 pensions after April 21, 1898, but we did not raise the pensions of veterans who served prior to April 21, 1898, and this is to equalize the pensions and place the peacetime veterans who served prior to 1898 on the same basis as those who served after 1898.

Mr. RANKIN. To what did you raise it?

Mr. LESINSKI. Seventy-five percent of the World War veterans' rates.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, the Department is in favor of the bill, as I understand it?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes; it has a green light.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman mean that the Veterans' Administration is in favor of it?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN UNREMARRIED DEPENDENT WIDOWS OF CIVIL WAR VETERANS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7981) to grant pensions to certain unremarried dependent widows of Civil War veterans who were married to the veteran subsequent to June 26, 1905.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the dependent unremarried widow of a Civil War veteran who is barred from the receipt of pension because her marriage to the veteran occurred subsequent to June 26, 1905, but who is otherwise entitled to such pension either under the act of May 1, 1920 (41 Stat. 585), or under the act of June 9, 1930 (46 Stat. 528), shall be entitled to pension in her own right under said acts at the rates and under the conditions specified therein and to the additional pension provided for minor and helpless children in the act of May 1, 1920, provided she married the veteran 10 years prior to his death and lived with him continuously from the date of marriage to the date of his death except where there was a separation which was due to misconduct of or procured by the veteran without the fault of the widow: Provided, That if pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless child of the veteran or to a child or children of the veteran under 16 years of age, the widow shall not be entitled to the pension authorized in this act until the pension to the child or children terminates, unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her; and when these conditions are fulfilled and the pension is granted to the widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease; except that in the event the amount being paid to such child or children is less than the amount authorized to the widow by this act, then the difference between said amounts will be paid to the widow: Provided further, That no pension shall be payable under this act to a widow under 60 years of age.

SEC. 2. Payment of pension as provided by this act shall be effective from the date of receipt of application in the Veterans' Administration, in the form prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, but not prior to the date of enactment of this act. Pension under this act shall not be paid to the widow of a veteran of the Civil War who has remarried either once or more than once, and upon the remarriage of such a widow her pension shall be terminated. The penal and forfeiture provisions of the pension laws providing pensions for veterans of the Civil War and their widows and dependents shall be applicable to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. No agent, attorney, or other person shall, directly or indirectly, solicit, contract for, charge, or receive any fee or compensation for preparing or assisting in the preparation of the necessary papers in the application to the Veterans' Administration for benefits under this act. Any person who shall, directly or indirectly, solicit, contract for, charge, or receive any fee or compensation for such preparation or assistance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and each and every offense shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment at hard labor for not more than 2 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this any new departure?

Mr. LESINSKI. This is a new departure and I would like to make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I wish the gentleman would do that.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, if this bill passes, it will eliminate a great number of the Civil War private pension bills for widows who were married after June 26, 1905. We held hearings on this subject, and the bill comes to the House with the unanimous report of the committee. There were many general bills in the committee which were discussed and studied, and this is the bill the committee directed me to introduce. The other bills would have cost anywhere from $4,800,000 to $20,000,000. This bill will cost approximately an additional $1,000,000 a year, and this is what it does. According to the service-pension laws today, no widow receives a pension who was married after June 26, 1905, to a Civil War veteran. Under this bill no pension is payable to a widow unless she is 60 years of age and married to the veteran at least 10 years prior to his death. The widow must have lived with the veteran continuously from the date of marriage to the date of the veteran's death, except in those instances where a separation is clearly the fault of the veteran. The widow must have remained the lawful widow of the veteran. If she is remarried subsequent to his death, she is barred from receiving the pension. In other words, a remarried widow will be barred from any pension under this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How does that compare with the present law?

Mr. LESINSKI. Under the present law, when a widow has remarried, her name is dropped from the pension rolls, and when her second husband dies, she can reapply for a pension, and if she meets the requirements of the law and regulations her name is restored as a remarried widow of the veteran.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this bars all widows of Civil War veterans?

Mr. LESINSKI. No; but it will bar all those young widows who married after June 26, 1905, unless they come within the provisions of the bill. They must have lived with the veteran for at least 10 years and attained the age of 60 years.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And how many will it take off the rolls who are now receiving pensions?

Mr. LESINSKI. It will take none off the rolls.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. And if a widow married subsequent to 1905 and lived with a veteran 10 years thereafter, she will be eligible under this bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes; if she is 60 years of age and meets the other requirements of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. For how much?

Mr. LESINSKI. The regular rate, starting with $30.

Mr. RANKIN. And going up to how much?

Mr. LESINSKI. Forty dollars per month when she attains the age of 70 years.

Mr. RANKIN. Then a woman who married a Civil War veteran in 1930, 65 years after the war closed, would be taken care of provided she lived with the veteran 10 years, and if she has reached the age of 70 years she gets $40 a month or twice what we are asking for widows of World War veterans who were married to the veteran during or before the war—not 65 years later.

Mr. LESINSKI. Provided she is over 60 years of age, lived with the veteran for 10 years, and is dependent. In other words, her income must be less than $1,000 per year, which is the provision now in force in regard to dependent mothers and fathers who are claimants for pension or compensation.

Mr. RANKIN. Has the gentleman from Michigan consulted the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] about this bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. I have not.

Mr. RANKIN. I notice that he is present, and I wondered why this bill has been brought up ahead of the Consent Calendar, which is to be taken up in a few minutes, and also I ask the gentleman whether he has consulted with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. WOLCOTT, the objector on the other side, whom I see present.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have received in the last 48 hours about 75 telegrams about H. R. 9000 which is on the calendar today, and the telegrams have come as a result of some erroneous information which has gone out of Washington to Michigan. The telegrams are in respect to my attitude on the bill. I do not think that the gentleman who sent the word back spoke to me, and I have said nothing and have given no indication whatsoever that I am opposed to it. As a matter of fact I am very much in favor of it.

Mr. RANKIN. How about this bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am very much in favor of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TAX ON OIL TO BE PAID BY OSAGE INDIANS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk House Joint Resolution 289, to amend section 5 of Public Law No. 360, Sixty-sixth Congress, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, strike out all after "be", down to and including "State", in line 12, and insert: "at the rate levied by said State but in no event to exceed 5 percent and said tax shall be paid by Secretary of the Interior, through the proper officers of the Osage Agency, to the State of Oklahoma from the amount received by the Osage Indians from the production of oil and gas to be distributed in like manner as gross-production tax under the laws of said State and the Secretary shall pay the tax herein authorized upon the condition and not otherwise that an additional one-fifth of said sum or sums paid by the Secretary in pursuance of this act shall be delivered over to Osage County, Okla., at the same time or times as the other payment or payments herein provided for are made to said county, one-half thereof to be apportioned to a fund to be used by said county only for the construction and maintenance of roads and bridges therein, the other one-half thereof to be used for the maintenance of common schools of said county as provided by law."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman please explain this amendment?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. This bill attempts to set the gross-production tax on oil produced on Osage Indian lands at 5 percent. At present it is 6 percent, because when the law was passed it provided that the State of Oklahoma should have the power to levy a gross-production tax, and then it provided in addition the power to levy an additional 1 percent. At that time the law of Oklahoma provided for a 3-percent tax. Since that time the law has been changed to provide for a 5-percent tax, which makes the present total tax 6 percent, which was not the intent at the time the law was passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This legislation, then, is harmful to the Indians?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. No. It reduces their tax from a 6-percent total to 5 percent.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. They will pay 5-percent tax?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. If this is agreed to, they will pay 5 percent. This amendment has the support of the Osage Council, all the county officials of Osage County, and State officials and the Indian Department. Everybody is in agreement.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the Bureau of Indian Affairs has recommended that this bill be passed?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That is correct. Everybody is in agreement. We have worked it out in a series of conferences until it is agreeable to everyone.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to state my objection. You state that you have had a series of conferences with the Department. Now you come here with a conference report. Can you tell us that the substance of the things you want us to adopt now has ever been legislated upon or passed upon by the committee? Have you ever considered them in committee, or is this an amendment that has come back from the Senate and you have taken it down to the Department and got their sanction? In other words, they are legislating, and you are coming in under the guise of a conference report and asking us to adopt the conference report which in effect is new legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not a conference report.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. This is not a conference report. This is an amendment placed on the House joint resolution by the Senate. The chairman of the committee has talked to various members of the committee. I have talked to the Member on the minority side, and it is agreeable.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker. I thought this was a conference report. I wondered what we were trying to do if it was a conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. DISNEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this should be called to the attention of the House—this affects only Osage County.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much money is involved?

Mr. DISNEY. Probably thirty or forty thousand dollars a year. As it now stands, under the change by the legislature, the Osage Indians are paying 6 percent gross production tax on their royalties, and the oil company is only paying 5 percent on their gross production. This is merely an effort to correct that situation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It brings it down to a parity with the independent oil producers?

Mr. DISNEY. That is right.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, the Bureau of Indian Affairs has recommended that this legislation pass?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. No. I will state it this way: The Bureau of Indian Affairs would like to see the tax lowered to 3 percent, but they have agreed, if we can do this, that this would be satisfactory. They would like to see it lower than this, but they thought this was the best we could do. They recommended 3 percent instead of 5 percent.

Mr. RICH. I just wanted to know whether the Bureau of Indian Affairs made the recommendation.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. No; they did not, but they agreed to it.

Mr. RICH. Well, if they agreed to it, who made the recommendation?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The Indian council, the county officials of Osage County, and the State officials all got together and worked out the matter so that we could make the tax the same as the independent oil companies pay. That was the effort, and that will be the effect of this legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object in order to clear up one point, how does the Senate amendment change the bill as it was approved by the House committee?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Substantially this: As it passed the House, Osage County proper would receive only 1 percent of the tax, and one-half percent of that would go to schools and one-half to roads and bridges. As it comes back now, Osage County will receive 2 percent, and 1 percent will go for roads and bridges, and 1 percent for common schools. That is substantially the change as it comes back from the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROMOTION AND RETIREMENT IN THE ARMY

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Military Affairs Committee of the House, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 6632) to promote the efficiency of the national defense, Union Calendar No. 337, be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill?

Mr. MAY. It is to promote the efficiency of the national defense. It is commonly known as the promotion and retirement bill, which we reported at the last session of the Congress, on which there was an expression of minority views by some seven or eight members of the commitee. Since then the gentleman who represented the minority views and a special committee which I appointed from the Military Affairs Committee have worked out a new promotion-list bill. We have applied to the Rules Committee for a rule, and it takes the place of this bill. We simply want to clean the calendar of it and return it to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short statement by one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by the President of the United States, and speeches made by others at the fiftieth anniversary of the Pan American Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

UNEMPLOYABLE DISABLED VETERANS BENEFITED BY NEW REGULATION

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I cannot refrain from calling to the attention of the House the recent regulation made by the Veterans' Administration which is of such vital importance to the veterans who are disabled and unemployable. Under this regulation issued by Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, the veteran need not have a service-connected disability in order to be eligible for a pension. This ruling will help thousands of unemployable and disabled veterans to obtain benefits which they justly deserve without having to appeal to relief agencies.

The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, of which I am a member, had been holding hearings on a bill which would provide pensions for the disabled unemployable veterans and the announcement made by the Veterans' Administration bespeaks the interest shown by the committee to alleviate these injustices.

I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a copy of the regulation referred to and also a letter received by me from Mr. John Thomas Taylor, director, national legislative committee of the American Legion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION SERVICE LETTER
ADMINISTRATOR'S OFFICE,
April 2, 1940.

Subject: Total-disability ratings under Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, and the 1933 rating schedule.

1. The attention of all rating agencies is directed to the following statement of policy approved this date which is quoted herewith for the guidance of all concerned:

"Total-disability ratings under Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, and the 1933 rating schedule may be assigned without regard to the specific provisions of the rating schedule, except as outlined herein, when the disabled person is, in the judgment of the rating agency, unable to secure or follow a substantially gainful occupation as a result of his disabilities: Provided, That if there is only one disability, this disability shall be ratable at 60 percent or more, and that, if there are two or more disabilities, there shall be at least one disability ratable at 40 percent or more, and sufficient additional disability to bring the combined rating to 70 percent or more. Total-disability ratings, when the above conditions are met, may be granted for deafness, the organic loss of speech, for the amputation or loss of use of either hand or of either lower extremity above the knee (as to these amputations and losses of use, when followed by continuous unemployability after incurrence), as single disabilities or for other organic disabilities or combinations including organic disabilities. For the purpose of Veterans Regulations 1 (a), part III, only, the above specified 60 percent, 40 percent, and 70 percent percentage requirements may be reduced by 10 percent on the attainment of age 60; and by an additional 10 percent on the attainment of age 65; and there shall be no percentage requirements for total-disability ratings in the cases of unemployable veterans who have attained the age of 70. The attainment of age 70 will not of itself warrant rating as permanently and totally disabled; in addition thereto disability sufficient to produce unemployability will be required. Nothing contained in this paragraph will prevent a total-disability rating for such disabilities and combinations of disabilities, including loss of use of two extremities, or loss of sight of both eyes, or being helpless or bedridden, and other disabilities, as are assigned specific ratings of 100 percent for the severity in question, but if the disabled person is employable, compliance with the terms of the schedule for such ratings will be required. When total disability under this paragraph is under consideration the veteran will be required to submit a statement in affidavit form covering his employment, or unemployment, over a period of at least 1 year."

2. A disabled person meeting the regulatory or schedular requirements for 100-percent ratings is entitled to a total-disability rating regardless of employment. Similarly, cases which do not meet the regulatory or schedular requirements, but which, in the opinion of the rating agency represent total disability on the average basis i. e., whose employment represents highly exceptional effort or ability to overcome the handicap of disability—are entitled to central office consideration under R. & P. R–1142, and should be so submitted.

3. The unemployability of the individual may be established, with age, constitutional defects, limitation of occupational experience, and ability, particularly limitation to manual labor, as important contributing factors. In such cases, it is important to ascertain the exact relationship between the particular manifestations of disability and resumption of work in the field of previous employment, or of other types of employment. As a requirement for total-disability rating. it must be established to the satisfaction of the rating agency that the disabilities are the principal cause of the continued unemployability.

4. Such inferiorities as mental deficiency, psychopathic inferiority, etc., do not of themselves indicate disability, either partial or total. When the medical-industrial history and other evidence points to mental deficiency or psychopathic personality as important factors, it is essential to insure complete psychiatric examination, and, if indicated, social-service report. When neuropsychiatric disease, mental deterioration, failing memory, and concentration (as with cerebral arteriosclerosis) are superimposed upon such conditions, the whole extent of social and industrial inadaptability, partial or total, in accordance with the rating schedule, and paragraph 1 of this service letter, will be ascribed to the disease factor. Similarly, when injury or disease, as fracture or arthritis, is superimposed upon physical defect, the whole subsequent limitation of occupational activity resulting from the defect and the superimposed disease or injury will be ascribed to the disease or traumatism.

5. It is the policy of the Veterans' Administration to resolve the benefit of all reasonable doubt in favor of claimants, to the end that every veteran who is unable to secure and follow substantially gainful employment, with disability as the cause of such inability, will be given full consideration. Rating agencies will exercise great care in the determination of total disability and permanent and total disability to make sure that all claims are properly rated, based on the facts found. Any case in which unemployability is established, but in which the above-prescribed requirements for total-disability ratings, in service-connected cases, or for permanent total-disability ratings in non-service-connected cases, are not met, will be referred to the central office, after proper development, under R. & P. R. 1142.

6. Pending promulgation of the first paragraph above as a regulation, this service letter, dated April 2, 1940, will be cited as authority for ratings under its terms.

FRANK T. HINES,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
Washington, D. C., April 13, 1940.

Hon. E. C. GATHINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN GATHINGS: Thanks ever so much for your letter of April 11 attaching a copy of the new regulations relative to non-service-connected permanent and total disability ratings.

The widows and orphans bill (H. R. 9000), favorably reported by your committee, will go a long way toward relieving the distress of thousands of widows and orphans. You are to be congratulated on this fine piece of legislation. We are hoping to get it through the House on Monday, and, if successful, I am sure the Senate will give it the same kind of favorable consideration.

I want to take this opportunity to thank you for the fine interest you have always taken in the legislation before the World War Veterans' Committee, for the benefit of the disabled and all World War veterans. Your committee has done a splendid job during these past years, and the Legionnaires of Arkansas and throughout the country appreciate your splendid cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN THOMAS TAYLOR,
Director, National Legislative Committee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on two subjects: One, having to do with the giving of testimony by Henry H. Collins before the Judiciary Subcommittee; and, two, to have printed in the RECORD a press release from my own office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by Hon. James B. Fitzgerald, commander of the American Legion of Maryland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is Consent Calendar Day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

WAPATO SCHOOL DISTRICT 64, YAKIMA COUNTY, WASH.

The Clerk called the first bill, H. R. 3824, to provide funds for cooperation with Wapato School District No. 54, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ARREST POWER OF CERTAIN OFFICERS OF UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5409, to authorize certain officers of the United States Indian Service to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN, Mr. RICH, and Mr. BURDICK objected.

PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT

The Clerk called the next business, Senate Joint Resolution 57, authorizing the Secretary of War to cause a completion of surveys, test borings, and foundation investigations to be made to determine the advisability and cost of putting in a small experimental plant for development of tidal power in the waters in and about Passamaquoddy Bay, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such examinations.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6972, to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that a rule has been granted on this bill and that it is expected to call up the rule for consideration the latter part of the week. For this reason I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

OSAGE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6314, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of their lands sold by the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL MISSISSIPPI RIVER PARKWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3759, to authorize a National Mississippi River Parkway and matters relating thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NATIONAL LAND POLICY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1675, to establish a national land policy, and to provide homesteads free of debt for actual farm families.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE TRIBES

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 290, referring the claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma to the Court of Claims for finding of fact and report to Congress.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER NEAR CITY OF OMAHA, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7069, authorizing Douglas County, Nebr., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Florence Station, in the city of Omaha, Nebr.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH]?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO CROP-LOAN LAW RELATING TO LIEN IMPOSED THEREUNDER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7878, to amend the crop-loan law relating to the lien imposed thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

DELAWARE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6535, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Delaware Tribe of Indians on account of permanent annuities under treaty provision.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

PRICES AND GRADES OF COTTONSEED AND COTTONSEED PRODUCTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8642, to establish and promote the use of standard methods of grading cottonseed, to provide for the collection and dissemination of information on prices and grades of cottonseed and cottonseed products, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a very complicated bill. There is an indeterminate authorization in the bill and it establishes a new policy. I dare say very few Members outside the committee know very much about the bill. In order that we may have an opportunity to consider it further, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

ADMISSION TO CITIZENSHIP OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6381, for the admission to citizenship of aliens who came into this country prior to February 5, 1917.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO MOUNT RUSHMORE MEMORIAL ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8357, to amend the Mount Rushmore Memorial Act of 1938.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 445, to establish a Commission for the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

MORE PERMANENT TENURE FOR PERSONS CARRYING THE MAIL ON STAR ROUTES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1214, to provide for a more permanent tenure for persons carrying the mail on star routes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

COMPENSATION OF SPECIAL COUNSEL FOR THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4366, to authorize additional compensation to the special assistants to the Attorney General in the case of United States against Doheny executors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, 2 weeks ago I commented upon the fact that there are minority views filed in connection with this bill, and it is highly unlikely that it can be passed by unanimous consent. I wonder if the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary would not request that this bill be stricken from the calendar. I do not like to make such request without the knowledge of the chairman of that committee, but it is very unlikely that this or any other bill on the Consent Calendar, on which minority views have been filed, can be passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the bill remain on the calendar. These people earned the money. There are two or three million dollars in the Treasury we never would have gotten without their services. If we are going to hire outside attorneys to handle these cases, some arrangement ought to be made to pay them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that I am not discussing the merits of the bill, but six members of the Committee on the Judiciary signed the minority report, indicating, of course, that they are opposed to the bill. For that reason it is apparent that the bill cannot be passed on the unanimous-consent calendar.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I am merely making the statement that if we are going to hire attorneys from the outside there ought to be some way of paying them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the gentleman want the bill to stay on the Consent Calendar?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8930, to amend section 202 (3), World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, to provide more adequate and uniform administrative provisions in veterans' laws, and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I will have to object to the present consideration of the bill.

ANTIETAM BATTLEFIELD SITE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1780, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire property for the Antietam Battlefield site in the State of Maryland, and for other purposes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BYRON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. I object to the consideration of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8753, to amend subsection (d) of section 4 of the act of Congress approved May 26, 1924, entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. VAN ZANDT, Mr. TABER, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, and Mr. CLEVENGER objected.

COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN DEPENDENTS OF WORLD WAR VETERANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9000, to provide more adequate compensation for certain dependents of World War veterans, and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Three objections are required.

Mr. COSTELLO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is the same bill that was brought before the House 2 weeks ago. At that time there was some discussion of the bill on the floor.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman discussed this bill the other day. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It requires three objections.

Mr. MILLER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KEAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill changes the entire policy of the Veterans' Bureau in taking care of veterans. I believe it is too important for the Consent Calendar, and I will have to object.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections have been heard. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, on the question of rising under reservation of objection, the chairman of the committee before prevented us from making any remarks giving our reasons for objecting, and I therefore object to having his remarks placed in the RECORD at this point.

HOSPITALIZATION AND DOMICILIARY CARE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1008, to confer to certain persons who served in the Quartermaster Corps or under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster General during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition the benefits of hospitalization and the privileges of the soldiers' homes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. Evidently a quorum is not present.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 69]

Arends	Darden	Jarman	Sabath
Arnold	Darrow	Jennings	Sacks
Barton	Delaney	Kee	Scrugham
Bates, Ky.	Dickstein	Keller	Seccombe
Bates, Mass.	Dingell	Kelly	Secrest

Culkin	Houston	Romjue

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). On this call 328 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. TABER. A question of the privileges of the House and of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a little while ago the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] made a point of order that no quorum was present, and thereafter he said:

> You are not going to raid the veterans of the World War and pass these other pension bills and run over the House that way. I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Now, the gentleman was not recognized for that purpose; and then thereafter the gentleman from Mississippi further stated:

> And there will be a quorum and a vote on every other bill from now on today.

The gentleman was not recognized for that purpose, and that should not be in the RECORD. I make the point of order that that language should not be contained in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that certain remarks made in the House should not be included in the RECORD. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Under the rules of the House, remarks should only be included in the RECORD that are made in order. After a point of order is made, which is not debatable, any further remarks should not be included in the RECORD. Therefore the Chair rules that any remarks that may have been made after the point of order that a quorum was not present was made should not be included in the RECORD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short article on What Good is Gold?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein letters received from tenant farmers asking that appropriations be made to continue the Bankhead-Jones Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement I made before the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 1008, to confer to certain persons who served in the Quartermaster Corps or under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster General during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China relief expedition the benefits of hospitalization and the privileges of the soldiers' homes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who served in the Quartermaster Corps or under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster General during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China relief expedition on vessels owned by the United States and engaged in the transportation of troops, supplies, ammunition, or materials of war, and who were discharged for disability incurred in such governmental service in line of duty, shall—

(1) Be entitled to the benefits provided for by paragraph 10 of section 202 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended; and

(2) For the purpose of receiving the benefits of the Soldiers' Home, the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and the Naval Home, be held to have been honorably discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 3, after the word "served", strike out "in the Quartermaster Corps or" and substitute in lieu thereof "in a civilian capacity."

On page 1, line 10, after the word "duty", strike out the remainder of line 10 and lines 1 to 8, inclusive, page 2, and substitute in lieu thereof the following: "are hereby granted entitlement (1) to medical and hospital treatment and domiciliary care in Veterans' Administration facilities in the same manner and to the same extent as now or hereafter provided for veterans of any war, and (2) to care in the United States Soldiers' Home, Washington, D. C., and the United States Naval Home, Philadelphia, Pa., in the same manner and to the same extent as now or hereafter provided for discharged members of the active military or naval forces of the Regular Establishment."

Amend the title.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 19, after the words "any war", strike out the semicolon and the word "and."

Strike out all of lines 20 to 23, and on page 3, strike out lines 1 and 2 and insert a period.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of offering this amendment is merely to eliminate the Soldiers' Home in the District of Columbia and the Naval Home in Philadelphia from the provisions of this bill.

The bill would allow certain civilians who served in the War with Spain to receive domiciliary care in the Veterans' Administration facilities as well as at these two homes. In view of the fact that the Soldiers' Home is maintained by the soldiers of the Army, 25 cents a month being deducted from their pay, and since there are no civilians of any kind given domicile at this home, it is not proper that they should be authorized to have such treatment. The War Department opposes that particular provision in the bill and for that reason I offer this amendment to the committee amendment, so that the Soldiers' Home and the Naval Home will be eliminated.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to confer to certain persons who served in a civilian capacity under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster General during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China relief expedition the benefits of hospitalization and the privileges of the soldiers' homes."

SAN CARLOS APACHE TRIBE, ARIZONA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6796) to authorize the purchase of certain lands for the San Carlos Apache Tribe, Arizona.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to purchase with any available funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated pursuant to authority contained in section 5 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), the south half of lot 2, south half north half of lot 2, lots 3 and 4, east half southwest quarter, south half southeast quarter northwest quarter, south half north half southeast quarter northwest quarter of section 17, lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, east half northwest quarter, east half southwest quarter of section 20, lot 1, north half north half of lot 2, northeast quarter northwest quarter, north half north half southeast quarter northwest quarter of section 29, township 1 south, range 28 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, Greenlee County, Ariz. Title to the lands shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the San Carlos Apache Tribe.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL TECHNICAL COMMITTEE OF AERIAL LEGAL EXPERTS

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 490, providing for an annual appropriation to meet the share of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts, and for participation in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and the commissions established by that Committee.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of Public Resolution No. 254, approved August 7, 1935 (49 Stat. 540), which terminates the provisions of the resolution as of June 30, 1941, is hereby repealed.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TELEPHONES IN DIPLOMATIC RESIDENCES OF UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8772) to amend the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. 414; U. S. C., title 31, sec. 679).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Can we get a statement from the author of the bill as to what it does?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, this amends the present act, which would expire next year.

Mr. SWEENEY. What is the subject matter?

Mr. BLOOM. It provides for telephones in the residences owned by the Government of the United States for the Diplomatic Corps throughout the world.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I observe the right to object. I do this to announce to the House that I have just filed a petition and placed it on the Clerk's desk to bring the widows' and orphans' bill out of the Rules Committee.

I do not see how the Congress can justify itself in putting Civil War widows on the pension roll 65 years after the Civil War has ended, as was done in a bill passed here today, and then refusing this small pittance to widows and orphans of World War veterans, many of whom probably died of disability growing out of their services in the World War. I hope all Members will sign the petition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to remind the gentleman also that I think the House membership is not conscious of the fact that there is a dependency clause in this widows' and orphans' bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. So that it will not cost the taxpayer any more than if they were on relief.

Mr. RANKIN. We are not doing any more for them than was done for the widows and orphans of the Spanish-American War veterans.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Not doing as much, because there was no dependency clause in the Spanish-American War veterans' widows' and orphans' bill. There are other limitations also which are not in the Spanish War veterans' widows' and orphans' bill.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to call to the attention of the House some remarks found on page 3786 of the RECORD of April 1, 1940:

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say, in reply to the gentleman from California, that those old people who would have been benefited by the passage of the last bill, as has just been explained in the Well of this House, are being thrown off of relief; they are being thrown off of W. P. A.; they are being thrown off without anything.

They are not on relief, they are off relief.

Mr. RANKIN. We may not be leaving them on relief, but you are increasing the suffering of those old people who sent their sons to the World War and who are now unable to care for themselves. You are increasing the suffering of the helpless widows and orphans of those veterans.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And many of them are drawing social-security benefits, so that at present it costs the taxpayer more as the Social Security pays higher rates for older people in need.

Mr. RANKIN. And the ones who are not on Social Security get no support at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. 414; U. S. C., title 31, sec. 679), be, and the same is hereby, amended by the addition of the following words: "Provided, That the cost of installation and use of telephones in residences leased or owned by the Government of the United States in foreign countries for the use of the Foreign Service may be allowed from Government funds, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, except that the restrictions herein relating to long-distance tolls shall also apply to telephones installed in such official residences."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENDING CITIZENSHIP WITHOUT FORMALITY OF DECLARATION OF INTENTION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2176) to amend subsection 10 of section 4 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. 596; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 377).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I take this time to see if we can get this matter clear. I think this as a very important matter and I have been led to believe that it applies only to women. I think, from reading it, it applies to women and men, and I also think it is in effect the same as a bill that has been objected to here for years. With all due respect to the author, Mr. WOLCOTT, and to Mr. MASON, a proponent of the bill, if it is not asking too much, I should like to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I do not know too much about immigration and naturalization matters and I realize that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has given a great deal of study to it, but to my knowledge no similar bill has been on the calendar for at least 10 or 12 years. This merely extends the date from July 1, 1920, to July 1, 1925, as the time in which men and women—it includes men as well as women—may make application for citizenship without filing a declaration of intention. This may be done if they are otherwise qualified to be citizens of the United States, and if, during or prior to that time, because of misinformation, regarding their citizenship status, they regularly exercised the rights and performed the duties of citizens of the United States, in good faith.

Now, this is to meet a very, very small class of people who are honestly of the belief that they were citizens. Many of them exercised the rights and prerogatives of citizenship by voting, until a new registration of voters was required, in which they were unable to show their qualifications. I am given to understand that it affects only a very small number of people. It so happens that it affects more women than it does men, but the number of people affected is very, very small.

I have in mind a case in which a man came to this country from Canada when he was a baby. Under the Michigan law, previous to a certain date, if a man had filed his first papers he could vote, until the law was changed in 1905, I believe. Because this man's father had voted for years he presumed he was a citizen, but the father never took out his second papers. This man grew to manhood and voted and became the mayor of his city. He was a notary public and justice of the peace for years. When he had to prove his citizenship to qualify as a witness in a naturalization proceeding he could not do it. It appeared then that his father had never taken out his second papers.

It is that kind of a case that this bill is designed to help.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. My impression was that it only applied in cases where a person had been voting and wanted the right to continue to vote. There is a lot of difference between the right to vote and the right to become a citizen. I have the language of the statute before me. This is the statute that is sought to be amended. It is the basis of the objections formerly made to the granting to people who have been here for years and neglected to get citizenship. The claim is made that this matter is encouraged now that the old-age pensions have come along and W. P. A. and other reasons. I have no personal objection to it, but I am sure the author of the bill and the gentleman from Illinois both believe that this bill is expected to apply only to a restricted few, and operates in a narrow scope, but it has a wide scope.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I call attention to the wording of the present law, which is continued:

And was on that date otherwise qualified to become a citizen of the United States.

Now, he has to meet all of the other qualifications in respect to good moral character, and I presume the literacy test, and everything of that nature. He must have all of the other qualifications of citizenship. The only thing that this act does, as I understand it, is to expedite his getting his final papers because he does not have to file his first papers.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; this moves up the date so that more people may file first papers and become citizens. It gives them rights that they did not have before. There has been a very significant date there. I remember we had many a battle about this date being moved up to 1925. I am afraid we will do something, under the guise that we are just helping out a few women, which we have refused to do many times.

Mr. WOLCOTT. One of the reasons why it is advisable to extend the date is because of the suffrage amendment to the Constitution. Perhaps that is where the gentleman got his information. It affected women only. It does affect those women.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I will agree with the gentleman, that if he will permit this to pass over without prejudice, so that I may have an opportunity to look into it, and if I find it is as he says it is, I will let it go through the next time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I hope the gentleman will let it go through today, but I know the gentleman has given a great deal of study to immigration matters, and I would accord him every opportunity to study the matter. I have expressed what our intent and purpose is, and if the gentleman finds any other purpose in there, I will be very, very glad to accept an amendment to accomplish solely the purpose intended.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MASON. The fact of the matter is it does not change the present law at all. Only the date is extended.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But we were under the impression that you wanted to allow these people the right to vote, and the gentleman knows there is a great deal of difference between the right to vote and the right of citizenship. The right to vote is controlled by State laws. When one becomes a citizen of the United States, it is by virtue of Federal laws which are universal in their application throughout the whole country.

Mr. MASON. But it does not change the law about becoming a citizen at all. It changes the date to which the law is applicable.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But it might give hundreds of people who have heretofore refused and rejected this privilege, who now want to become naturalized.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, no; it is only in those cases where they honestly believed they were citizens and have exercised the duties of citizenship.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

APPROPRIATION FOR RELIEF OF NEEDY INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8937, to authorize an appropriation for the relief of ill-clothed, ill-fed, and ill-housed needy American Indians through the utilization of surplus American agricultural and other commodities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF PRESIDENTIAL AND CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION DATE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8700, to change the time of the appointment of Presidential electors and the election of Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the bill that it does not comply with paragraph 2–A of rule XIII, the so-called Ramseyer rule.

The Chair may perhaps hold that the Ramseyer rule has been substantially complied with by the striking through of existing law and the printing in italics of the proposed law, but my memory of the Ramseyer rule is that that part of existing law to be stricken must be set out in brackets; and I make the point of order that in the report that part of existing law which is to be stricken out is not set out in brackets.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Michigan makes a point of order against the consideration of the bill on the ground that the rule mentioned by him, the so-called Ramseyer rule, has not been complied with. The Chair has rather hurriedly, but, the Chair believes, sufficiently, examined the report, and the Chair is of the opinion that the committee has made an effort to comply with the provisions of the Ramseyer rule.

It is the opinion of the Chair that the duty does not devolve upon the Chair to analyze every word of existing law or to pass upon the sufficiency of the compliance with the provision of the so-called Ramseyer rule. The Chair being of opinion that the committee reporting the bill has made an effort to comply with the provisions of the Ramseyer rule, feels, therefore, constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in order to stress the fact that the Ramseyer rule requires that existing law be set out in brackets and the proposed law be printed in italics, may I propound a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In order that the ruling of the Chair may be used as a precedent, is the striking through of language, instead of its being included within brackets, a substantial compliance with the Ramseyer rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In answer to the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry, the Chair feels that the Chair can best set forth the requirement by inviting attention to the provisions of the so-called Ramseyer rule itself. Clause 2–A of rule XIII reads as follows:

> A comparative print of that part of the bill or joint resolution making the amendment and of the statute or part thereof proposed to be amended, showing by stricken through type and italics, parallel columns, or other appropriate typographical devices, the omission and insertion proposed to be made.

The Chair especially invites attention to the phrase, "or other appropriate typographical devices."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Am I to understand that there has been a substantial compliance with the Ramseyer rule in the present instance?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the committee has made an effort to comply and has substantially complied with the provisions of the so-called Ramseyer rule and, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill would amend existing law which provides that the electors for President and Vice President shall be appointed in each State on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November in every fourth year succeeding every election of the President and Vice President. This bill would change that date so that elections will be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in October. The bill further provides for the election in the States and Territories of Representatives and Delegates and amends that section likewise by advancing the date.

As I have so often said, this Consent Calendar is supposed to have referred to it only bills of minor importance to expedite the consideration of the mass of relatively unimportant bills which come out of committees. It seems to me that this is one of the most important bills which we have had before us in a decade. It will change the date on which all of the State officers, the county officers, and, in many instances, the city and township officers, are elected in the several States, as well as changing the date on which the Presidential and Vice Presidential electors, the Representatives, Senators, and Delegates are chosen.

Before we compel the State legislatures to amend the acts providing the machinery whereby elections are held we should give a great deal of consideration to the effect of our action. I feel that the bill should be brought out on the floor by a rule which should provide for fully 5 or 6 hours of debate in order that the Representatives from each State might have an opportunity to consider it in the light of the State laws in respect to elections. For this reason, and to give the Judiciary Committee an opportunity to present the matter to the Rules Committee, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS SARASOTA PASS, MANATEE COUNTY, FLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7615, authorizing the Bradenton Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Sarasota Pass where Manatee Avenue, Bradenton, if extended, would cross Sarasota Pass, county of Manatee, State of Florida.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Bradenton Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Sarasota Pass, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near where Manatee Avenue, Bradenton, if extended, would cross Sarasota Pass, county of Manatee, State of Florida, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Bradenton Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Bradenton Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of tolls so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of said bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Florida, any public agency, or political subdivision thereof, within or adjoining which any part of the bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 percent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interest in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall be taken over or acquired by the State or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, or to amortize the bonds or other securities issued for that purpose with reasonable financing costs, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of tolls shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The Bradenton Co., its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway department of such State a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of such State shall, at any time within 3 years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the cost alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Bradentown Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Bradenton Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, after "improve", insert "the."

Pages 1 and 2, line 8, on page 1, after "navigation", strike out the comma and "at or near where Manatee Avenue, Bradenton, if extended, would cross Sarasota Pass."

Page 2, line 11, after "approaches", insert a period and strike out the balance of the section down to and including all of line 18.

Page 4, lines 12 to 16, after "free of", strike out "tolls, or the rates of tolls shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management", and insert "tolls."

"SEC. 6. At any time after 25 years from the date such bridge shall have been completed, if the tolls from such bridge have produced sufficient revenue to amortize the bonds and other securities issued in connection with the construction and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches with reasonable interest and financing costs, and if such bridge shall not have been taken over or acquired by the State of Florida or by any political subdivision or public agency thereof under section 4 of this act, then all the right, title, and interest of the said Bradenton Co., its successors and assigns, in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real estate necessary therefor, shall be turned over to the State of Florida, upon proper demand. Such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated by the State of Florida or by any political subdivision or public agency thereof free of tolls."

Page 5, line 19, after "Sec.", change "7" to "8."

Page 5, after line 20, insert the following: "prior to acquirement of such rights, powers, and privileges by the State of Florida or by any political subdivision or public agency thereof pursuant to section 4 or section 6 of this act.

Page 6, after line 2, insert a new section reading as follows:

"SEC. 9. The Bradenton Co. shall furnish the Secretary of War with a certified copy of its charter and any amendments thereto evidencing proof that it is a corporation organized, among other things, for the promotion and organization of toll bridges, tollbride districts, bridge authorities and for harbor authorities, each and any of which shall be municipal in kind and nature, and from any or either of which this company shall receive no promotional profit, and further, shall receive no other profit, other than in direct proportion to such investment or investments as this company may make in any or either of such enterprises."

Page 6, line 3, after "Sec.", change "8" to "10."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Bradenton Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Sarasota Pass, county of Manatee, State of Florida."

DECLARING FRANKFORD CREEK, PA., TO BE A NONNAVIGABLE STREAM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8452, to declare Frankford Creek, Pa., to be a nonnavigable stream.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Frankford Creek, in the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be a nonnavigable stream within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

AMENDMENT TO LOCOMOTIVE INSPECTION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8510, to amend the Locomotive Inspection Act of February 17, 1911, as amended, so as to change the title of the chief inspector and assistant chief inspectors of locomotive boilers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill (S. 3440) to amend the Locomotive Inspection Act of February 17, 1911, as amended, so as to change the title of the chief inspector and assistant chief inspectors of locomotive boilers, may be substituted for the House bill.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto", approved February 17, 1911, as amended, is amended—

(1) By striking out "chief inspector" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "director of locomotive inspection."

(2) By striking out "assistant chief inspector" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "assistant director of locomotive inspection."

(3) By striking out "assistant chief inspectors" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "assistant directors of locomotive inspection."

(4) By striking out "of locomotive boilers" in the first sentence of section 3 and in section 9.

SEC. 2. Section 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto,' approved February 17, 1911", approved March 4, 1915, is amended—

(1) By striking out "chief inspector" and inserting in lieu thereof "director of locomotive inspection."

(2) By striking out "assistant chief inspectors" and inserting in lieu thereof "assistant directors of locomotive inspection."

SEC. 3. Nothing in this act shall be construed to create any new office or to create a vacancy in any office the title of which is changed by this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill, H. R. 8510, was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 73 OF HAWAIIAN ORGANIC ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9185, to amend section 73 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended, is hereby further amended by adding at the end of section 73 thereof the following paragraph:

"Any person or persons holding an unpatented homestead under a special homestead agreement, entered into prior to the effective date of this paragraph, shall be entitled to a reamortization of the indebtedness due the Territory of Hawaii on account of such special homestead agreement upon filing an application for the reamortization of said indebtedness with the Commissioner within 6 months after the effective date of this paragraph. Upon the filing of any such application, the Commissioner shall determine the balance due the Territory in the following manner: The amount of the principal which would have been paid during the full period of payment provided for in the special homestead agreement had the agreement been duly performed according to its terms and the amount of the interest which would have been paid under the special homestead agreement prior to the effective date of this paragraph had the agreement been duly performed according to its terms shall be computed and added together; from the sum of these amounts there shall be deducted all moneys that have been actually paid to the Territory on account of the special homestead agreement, whether as principal or as interest. The balance thus determined shall be the total amount remaining due and payable for the homestead covered by such special homestead agreement, any other terms, conditions, or provisions in any of said agreements, or any provisions of law to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to excuse the payment of taxes and other charges and assessments upon unpatented homestead lands as provided in said agreements, nor to excuse or modify any term, condition, or provision of said agreements other than such as relate to the principal and interest payable to the Territory. The total amount remaining due, determined as hereinabove provided, shall be payable in 15 equal biennial installments. Simple interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum shall be charged upon the unpaid balance of such installments, whether matured or unmatured, said interest to be computed from the effective date of this paragraph and to be payable semiannually. The first payment on account of principal shall be due 2 years subsequent to the effective date of this paragraph, and thereafter the due dates of principal payments shall be at regular 2-year periods; the first payment on account of interest shall be due 6 months subsequent to the effective date of this paragraph, and thereafter the due dates of interest payments shall be at regular 6-month periods. In case of default in payments of principal or interest on the due dates as hereby fixed the Commissioner may, with the approval of the Governor, with or without legal process, notice, demand, or previous entry, take possession of the land covered by any such special homestead agreement and thereby determine the estate created by such agreement as hereby modified. When the aforesaid payments have been made to the Territory of Hawaii, and all taxes, charges, and assessments upon the land have been paid as provided by said agreements, and all other conditions therein stipulated have been complied with, except as herein excused or modified, the said special homestead agreements shall be deemed to have been performed by the holders thereof, and land-patent grants covering the land described in such agreements shall be issued to the parties mentioned therein, or their heirs or assigns, as the case may be.

"Neither the Territory of Hawaii nor any of its officers, agents, or representatives shall be liable to any holder of any special homestead agreement, past or present, whether or not a patent shall have issued thereon, or to any other person, for any refund or reimbursement on account of any payment to the Territory in excess of the amount determined as provided by the preceding paragraph, and the legislature shall not recognize any obligation, legal or moral, on account of such excess payments."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect upon its approval.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROCUREMENT WITHOUT ADVERTISING

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8152, providing for procurement without advertising.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I intend to ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice in order that a full determination may be made with reference to whether this bill if passed in its present form or with certain amendments will in any way interfere with procurements or replacements for the War Department so far as horses and mules are concerned.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. I can personally assure the gentleman that this feature has been looked into and it will in no way affect the purchase of horses and mules. I may add, however, that I have two amendments which I propose to offer in order to clarify this matter. A number of Members have made inquiry in regard to the purchase of horses and mules by the War Department, and I have advised all of them that after a thorough investigation, in my opinion and the opinion of the legislative drafting agent, there is absolutely no doubt but that the bill in its present form will not interfere with the purchase of horses and mules. That assurance should be sufficient.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I hope the gentleman is correct. I have looked at the amendments which the gentleman proposes to offer, but I have not been able to check fully on some questions that are in my mind, and I want to be advised in reference to them.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I only use this procedure to make a statement, it appears that dozens and dozens of limitations have been placed upon appropriation bills disregarding section 3709, Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), which provides for purchases by the Government. Time will not permit me to say just how far they have gone. For instance, you can buy all the medicine you want for the Army and Navy without advertising at all. You can buy gunpowder, ordnance, and so forth without advertising. Just to show you how far the House will go, today there was a bill on the calendar that went over without prejudice which referred to an authorization for the relief of Indians. This bill carried an authorization of $10,000,000, and right at the bottom of the bill was a proviso that the $10,000,000 could be spent to purchase whatever they desired for the Indians without advertising or without competitive bidding, as it was specifically exempted from section 3709. Do you mean to tell me that is sound business? What business corporation would be so foolish?

This bill seeks to prevent the abuses which have taken place in the past. I have talked to a number of the members of the Appropriations Committee and they have told me that we should have some legislation along this line without delay.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD in order to fully explain the purposes of this bill so that when it comes up 2 weeks from now the membership will realize that it is sound legislation for the benefit of the taxpayers of this country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, merely to add a further word. I have no objection to requiring advertising for bids where you can set up standards; but obviously you cannot set up specifications for a good cavalry horse or for a good Army mule and get them in wholesale lots on competitive bids. You must be able to examine and appraise each individual animal. Mr. Speaker, of course I have no objection to the gentleman's request to extend his remarks, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman on the very point of which he speaks that some investigation should be made of the purchase of horses and mules by the Army. When you can set up a private organization in the city of Washington and hire people and pay them money to be here all the year around, there must be considerable money for those who sell horses and mules to the Army.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will read the hearings of the Appropriations Subcommittee for the War Department, he will find some testimony on that subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri that he be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. In order that the bill might be understood I include as part of my remarks the legislation as reported by the committee. The bill follows:

That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3709. All purchases and contracts for supplies or services for the United States, any Government-owned corporation, or the District of Columbia, except for personal services, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same, except that the article or service required may be procured by open purchase or contract in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold, or such services engaged, between individuals when—

"(a) immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency; or

"(b) the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $100."

SEC. 2. Any procurement otherwise authorized by law to be made without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall be made only in pursuance of a specific written advance authorization by the head of the department, independent establishment, corporation, office, or agency, or the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in the case of the District of Columbia, when the amount involved is in excess of $500.

SEC. 3. All provisions of law exempting from the requirements of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes procurements in any sum expressed in terms of money are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect on the 30th day following the date of its enactment, but shall not apply with respect to supplies or services contracted for before such effective date.

I have two amendments which I propose to offer. They follow:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "statutes", insert the following: "or without prior advertising for bids".

The second amendment is a substitute for section 3 and reads as follows:

All provisions of law to the extent that they authorize procurements of supplies and services (other than personal services) without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes or without prior advertising for bids when such authorizations are expressed in terms of money shall be inapplicable.

An explanation of the bill follows:

First. The bill in no single particle changes the part of existing section 3709 under which procurement may be made without advertising in an emergency. This is true regardless of the amount involved, whether it is 10 cents or $10,000,000.

Second. The amendment exempts all procurements from the 3709 requirement of advertising where the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $100. This, together with section 3, increases the existing statutory exemptions of less than $100 to $100, and decreases the exemptions to $100 where the existing statutory exemption exceeds $100. These provisions apply only where the exemption is expressed in terms of money—a figure in dollars. As an example of these statutes the following are typical:

(a) Act of June 28, 1937:

The National Labor Relations Board may procure supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $50 (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 61).

(b) Act of June 28, 1937:

The American Battle Monuments Commission may purchase supplies and materials without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $500 (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 6v).

Each of these statutes is repealed and each of the agencies has a $100 exemption.

These two sections of the bill—1 and 3—have no application whatsoever when there is a general exemption not expressed in terms of dollars, such as—

(a) The act of February 27, 1893, which provides that so much of section 3709—

as requires advertisement before purchase of medicines and medical supplies for the Medical Department of the Army (10 U. S. C. 1203).

Or (b) the act of March 7, 1928, which provides that—

When practicable, horses and mules shall be purchased in the open market, etc. (10 U. S. C. 1206a).

Or (c) Revised Statutes, 3721, as amended, which provides that—

The provisions which require that supplies shall be purchased * * * after advertisement shall not apply to ordnance, gunpowder, or medicines, or the supplies which it may be necessary to purchase out of the United States for vessels on foreign stations * * * (34 U. S. C. 569).

Since neither the amendment to 3709 nor the repeal of specific statutes affects these statutes, they are not changed by section 1 nor section 3.

Third. Section 2 of the bill, as amended, does, however, relate to the statutes enumerated immediately preceding. It has the effect of permitting purchase without advertising where the amount involved does not exceed $500, just as does the present law in such cases.

Where the amount involved does exceed $500, however, the procurement may be made without advertising only if the head of the agency authorizes the procurement by specific written advance authorization.

To take an example of the operation of section 2, assume the question involved is the purchase of medicine for the Navy:

(a) If the amount of the purchase is $500 or less, the purchase may be made without advertising. This is the same as existing law.

(b) If there is an emergency, the purchase may be made without advertising and without authority of the head of the agency by the purchasing officer, even if the amount is in excess of $100, $500, or any sum. This is the same as existing law.

(c) If no emergency exists and the amount involved exceeds $500, the purchase may be made without advertising if the Secretary of the Navy, by specific written authorization made before the purchase, has authorized the purchase. This changes existing law.

Fourth. Some question has arisen with respect to the scope of the repeal provided for in section 3. The argument centers around a statute such as the following act of March 2, 1907:

The purchase of supplies and the procurement of services for all branches of the naval service may be made in open market in the manner common among businessmen without formal contract or bond when the aggregate amount required does not exceed $500, and when, in the opinion of the proper administrative officers, such limitation of amount is not designed to evade purchase under formal contract or bond and equally or more advantageous terms can thereby be secured (34 U. S. C. 571).

The argument is that the entire provision is repealed by section 3 so that other provisions of law requiring formal contract or bond are applicable where the purchases exceed $100 and do not exceed $500, thus changing the present law on a matter not related to advertising. It has been pointed out that to impose such requirements would increase administrative costs without any corresponding advantage.

First, it may be pointed out that the committee had no such intention. Second, it is doubtful if the argument is at all sound as a matter of law. The words do not justify it, and it does not seem reasonable to impute to Congress an intention in a bill dealing with advertising to deal with other matters. The title of the bill and the substantive provisions of sections 1 and 2 demonstrate that. As some feel there is need of clarification of section 3, the following will be substituted for section 3—page 2, lines 24 and 25, and page 3, lines 1 and 2:

SEC. 3. All provisions of law to the extent that they authorize procurements of supplies and services (other than personal services) without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes or without prior advertising for bids when such authorizations are expressed in terms of money shall be inapplicable.

The above proposal not only does not repeal the whole statute, it only makes inapplicable so much of it as relates to the exemption from 3709 or the requirement of advertising. The draft also meets any possibility of a technical evasion where the exemption is not expressed in terms of a direct exemption from 3709 but is phrased in terms such as "in the manner common among businessmen" or "without advertising."

Fifth. In view of the above suggestion, it seems equally desirable to amend section 2 by inserting in line 18 on page 2 after "Statutes" the following: "or without prior advertising for bids."

Mr. Speaker, with these changes it is beyond me to see how there can be any objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri will recall that when the N. L. R. A. was on the floor here——

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, we are back to that again?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I am going back to that.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why bring that up here?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Because it is coming up soon and it is going to bother you before we get through with it unless we amend that law and make it just and fair.

Mr. COCHRAN. It will not bother me, because I will vote against any destructive amendments offered on the floor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. A perfecting amendment, in the gentleman's opinion, seems to be a destructive amendment.

What I am calling attention to is that when that bill was before the House the then chairman of the Committee on Labor, the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] made the statement that the act did not require an employer to enter into a contract. Senator WAGNER said the same thing, and so did Senator WALSH. The report of the Senate committee shows the Senate had the same understanding. Nevertheless, the Board is attempting to force all employers to agree and to sign a written contract and three courts have held since January 28, 1940, that that must be done if the parties reach an agreement.

Mr. COCHRAN. What has that to do with this bill? The gentleman has the National Labor Relations Board on the brain.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And you have it in your political lap where it is burning a hole in your pants. It has to do with the restrictions that you want in this bill. We need the same restrictions in every bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Do not mix up the National Labor Relations Act with this legislation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It runs all through your legislation. There is nothing we do but that some board misconstrues it and extends its provisions and does something that you did not expect the board to do.

The Government agencies rather than Congress are making the law which governs us. It is time we regain our power—assume our responsibility.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

AMENDING THE SUBSISTENCE EXPENSE ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8508, to amend the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended by the act of June 30, 1932 (ch. 314, sec. 209, 47 Stat. 405).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 209 of the act of June 30, 1932 (5 U. S. C. 823a), limiting the transportation of automobiles at Government expense, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided further, That funds available to the Department of State may be expended for the transportation of a personally owned automobile in any case where the Secretary of State shall determine that ocean transportation is necessary for any part of the distance between points of origin and destination, except that this authorization shall not be extended to any ambassador or minister when proceeding to a post of duty where a Government-owned automobile shall have been provided for his use."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NAVAL AIR STATION, LAKEHURST, N. J.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7078, to authorize the acquisition by the United States of lands in Manchester and Jackson Townships of the County of Ocean and State of New Jersey for use in connection with the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, N. J.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase on behalf of the United States for use in connection with the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, N. J., at a total cost not to exceed $1,500, and to accept the title in fee simple and clear of all encumbrances, to certain pieces and parcels of land of approximately 850 acres situated in Manchester and Jackson Townships, Ocean County, N. J., and recorded on page 189 of book 774, in the office of the clerk of Ocean County, at Toms River, N. J.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after "to", in line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "acquire, by purchase, gift, or otherwise, for use in connection with the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, N. J., title in fee simple and clear of all encumbrances at a total cost not to exceed $1,500 to two parcels of land of approximately 928 acres situated in Manchester and Jackson Townships, Ocean County, N. J."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONVEYING CERTAIN LANDS TO THE STATE OF WYOMING

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8403, to convey certain lands to the State of Wyoming.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the State of Wyoming all right, title, and interest of the United States to a portion of the Jackson's Hole, Wyo., elk refuge, consisting of one and four hundred and seventy-eight one-thousandths acres, more or less, described by metes and bounds as follows: Beginning at a point which is north eighty-nine degrees fifty-eight minutes east forty feet from a point on the west line of section 27, township 41 north, range 116 west, of the sixth principal meridian Wyoming, which is north no degrees two minutes west one thousand eight hundred and two feet from the southwest corner of said section 27; thence north no degrees two minutes west three hundred and eight feet along a line parallel with and forty feet distant, when measured at right angles, from the west line of said section 27; thence north eighty-nine degrees fifty-eight minutes east two hundred and nine feet; thence south no degrees two minutes east three hundred and eight feet; thence south eighty-nine degrees fifty-eight minutes west two hundred and nine feet to the point of beginning.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 4, after "directed", insert "upon payment by the State of $36.95."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIELD SERVICE OF THE NAVY DEPARTMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2406, to provide for the adjustment of the status of planners and estimators and progress men of the field service of the Navy Department.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first clause of the first sentence of the act of March 3, 1909 (34 U. S. C. 514), is hereby amended to read as follows: "The rates of pay of the clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger force at navy yards and naval stations and other stations and offices under the Navy Department, with the exception of the rates of pay of planners and estimators and progressmen, shall be paid from lump appropriations and shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy on a per annum or per diem basis as he may elect."

SEC. 2. The proviso in section 2 of the act of July 3, 1930, entitled "An act to amend section 13 of the act of March 4, 1923, entitled 'An act to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services,' as amended by the act of May 28, 1928," be amended to read as follows: "Provided, That the terms of this act shall apply to employees carried under group 4–B, including drafting groups, planners, and estimators and progressmen, in the schedule of wages for civil employees under the Naval Establishment, notwithstanding the fact that the compensation of such employees was not adjusted by the act of December 6, 1924 (43 Stat. 604), or the act of May 28, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. 3, title 5, sec. 673)."

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to adjust the compensation of employees of the Naval Establishment detailed to duties as planners, estimators, or progressmen from a per diem to a per annum basis in conformity with the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall operate to decrease the pay of any planner, estimator, or progressman whose position is classified in accordance with the terms of this act, nor deprive any employee of any advancement authorized by law and for which funds are available.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect at the beginning of the first quarter after its passage.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, strike out all of lines 3 to 9, and on page 2 strike out lines 1 and 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the acts of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. 753), and August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 556), are hereby repealed insofar as they, together or separately, require that specific restrictions, limits, or allowances be placed upon the amounts of the several lump-sum, or other, appropriations made for the Navy Department and the naval service that may be paid for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALLOWANCES TO CERTAIN NAVAL OFFICERS STATIONED IN THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2348, relating to allowances to certain naval officers stationed in the Canal Zone for rental of quarters.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law relating to allowances to officers of the United States for rental of quarters during the fiscal years 1935 and 1936, allowances to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps stationed in the Canal Zone for rental of quarters prior to July 1, 1936, shall be considered as having been subject only to the provisions of section 6 of the act of June 10, 1922 (42 Stat. 628), as amended by section 2 of the act of May 31, 1924 (43 Stat. 250; 37 U. S. C. 10).

SEC. 2. The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money appropriated for the pay or allowances of officers of the Navy or Marine Corps, to any such officer an amount equal to the amount by which his allowances were reduced, or equal to the amount of any charges raised in the accounts of any such officer and subsequently removed by checkage or otherwise, by reason of provisions contained in the act of April 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 614), or in the act of April 9, 1935 (49 Stat. 120).

SEC. 3. Payments under the provisions of this act shall be made from appropriations current at the time such payments are made.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF NAVAL RESERVE ACT OF 1938

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2599, to amend the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (Public, No. 732, 52 Stat. 1175).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 206 of the Naval Reserve Act of June 25, 1938, is hereby amended by striking out the last two provisions and substituting therefor the following: "Provided further, That in the computation of service requisite for transfer of enlisted men of the Fleet Reserve to the retired list of the Regular Navy and for payment of allowances to which enlisted men on the retired list of the Regular Navy are entitled, service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Naval Reserve Force, Fleet Naval Reserve, Fleet Reserve, Marine Corps Reserve Force, and the Marine Corps Reserve, and on the retired list of the Regular Navy shall be included: And provided further, That such service as may heretofore have been authorized by law to be counted as double time shall be credited as double time in this computation.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF REMAINS OF PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS AND CERTAIN CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES OF THE NAVY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3067, authorizing appropriations to be made for the disposition of the remains of personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps and certain civilian employees of the Navy, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That funds to be expended under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe are hereby authorized to be appropriated as may be necessary from time to time for the funeral expenses of the deceased persons hereinafter specified.

SEC. 2. The words "funeral expenses" as used in this act, and in subsequent acts appropriating funds as herein authorized, shall be construed to include the expenses of, and incident to, the recovery of bodies; cremation, but only on request of the relatives of the deceased; preparation for burial; transportation to the home of the deceased or to a national or other cemetery designated by proper authority; and interment.

SEC. 3. Funeral expenses shall be allowed for—

(a) Officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, including those on the retired lists who die while on active duty;

(b) Members of the Nurse Corps (female) of the Navy, including those on the retired list who die while on active duty;

(c) Members of the Naval Reserve or Marine Corps Reserve who die while on active or training duty, or while performing authorized travel to or from such duty;

(d) Accepted applicants for enlistment;

(e) Civilian employees of the Navy Department or the Naval Establishment who have been ordered away from their homes in the United States to duty outside the continental limits of the United States and who die while on such duty or while performing authorized travel to or from such duty;

(f) Former enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps who were discharged while patients in hospitals and who remain as patients in such hospitals to the day of their death; and

(g) Pensioners and destitute patients who die in naval hospitals: Provided, That only the expenses of preparation for burial and interment shall be allowed in disposing of the remains of such pensioners and destitute patients.

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall apply in the case of personnel temporarily absent with or without leave when death occurred.

SEC. 5. In any case where funeral expenses authorized by this act are incurred prior to receipt of official authority, reimbursement may be made in the amount allowed by the Navy Department for such services.

SEC. 6. Funds to be expended under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe are hereby authorized to be appropriated as may be necessary from time to time for the purchase and care of cemetery lots; for the care of graves of deceased personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps outside the continental limits of the United States, with which shall be included those in sites not owned by the United States; and for the removal of remains from abandoned cemeteries to naval or national cemeteries or to the homes of the persons deceased, with which shall be included remains interred in isolated graves in the United States and abroad and remains temporarily interred.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACCEPTANCE OF CERTAIN LAND AT FLOYD BENNETT FIELD, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3174, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept, without cost to the United States, a fee-simple conveyance of 16 4/10 acres, more or less, of land at Floyd Bennett Field in the city and State of New York.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept on behalf of the United States of America, from the city of New York, free of all encumbrances, and without cost to the United States Government, a tract of land containing 16 1/10 acres, more or less, at Floyd Bennett Field in the city and State of New York, for use as a naval seaplane base: Provided, That the title to said land shall be satisfactory to the Attorney General and that the conveyance of said land shall be made to the United States of America and shall include the right of access for wheeled vehicles to the land conveyed from the highway bordering the said Floyd Bennett Field property on the westward, known as Flatbush Avenue; also the right of access over adjoining lands of Floyd Bennett Field for the purpose of transporting dredge material to be taken from the submerged or tidal lands adjacent to lands of Floyd Bennett Field for filling the land to be conveyed to a grade conforming to present grades of the Coast Guard reservation and the said Floyd Bennett Field, and also the right to lay, construct, and maintain through the Floyd Bennett Field property water lines, electric lines, telephone lines, gas lines, and other services as the Navy Department may find necessary for its proper and convenient use of the property acquired pursuant to the provisions hereof.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS AT SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2993, to authorize an exchange of lands between the city of San Diego, Calif., and the United States, and acceptance by gift of certain lands from the city of San Diego, Calif.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer, under such conditions as may be approved by the said Secretary, to the city of San Diego, Calif., without cost to the said city of San Diego, Calif., all right, title, and interest in and to the following parcels, situated in the city of San Diego, Calif., metes and bounds descriptions of which are on file in the Navy Department:

Parcel A. Sixty-one and seventy-two one-hundredths acres, more or less, of Marine Corps base area adjacent to the municipal airport, lying between the southwesterly prolongation of the southeasterly lines of Harasthy Street and Southerland Street to the combined pierhead and bulkhead line;

Parcel B. A triangular piece of land of the naval supply depot on the westerly side of Pacific Highway between E Street and F Street, containing 619 square feet, more or less;

Parcel C. A strip of land 10½ feet wide, of the naval training station, extending along and adjacent to Rosecrans Street, between Lytton Street and Lowell Street, including a curbed corner at the intersection of Lytton Street and Rosecrans Street, containing an area of 1.68 acres, more or less;

Parcel D. That portion of the Marine Corps base lying to the north of the south side of Water Street extending easterly from Wright Street, containing an area of 4.25 acres, more or less;

Parcel E. A triangular piece of land comprising the corner at the intersection of Barnett Avenue and Pacific Highway, being a part of the Marine Corps base, containing an area of 0.25 of an acre, more or less;

Parcel F. Three areas comprising 1.36 acres, more or less, being a part of the destroyer base situated on the north and south sides of Bay Front Street included in the proposed Harbor Drive and a small parcel to the east thereof; in consideration of the transfer and quitclaim to the United States by said city of San Diego, free from all encumbrances, except as hereinafter provided, and without cost to the United States, all right, title, and interest which the said city may claim in and to the following parcels, metes and bounds descriptions of which are on file in the Navy Department:

Parcel 1. A parcel of land between Broadway and E Street and between Pacific Highway and the westerly line of Belt Street in the city of San Diego, Calif., containing an area of 1.93 acres, more or less, excepting and reserving therefrom (a) the area held and occupied by the Sunset Sea Food Co. under a lease that expires on July 20, 1951; and (b) the area held and occupied by the Star & Crescent Oil Co. under a lease that expires April 30, 1942: Provided, That the areas held under said leases, upon expiration of the terms thereof, become the property of the United States in fee simple.

Parcel 2. A parcel of land between E Street and F Street and between Harbor Street and the easterly line of Belt Street in the city of San Diego, Calif., containing an area of 2.07 acres, more or less; excepting and reserving therefrom the area held and occupied by the Union Ice Co. under a lease that expires on September 23, 1941: Provided, That the area held under said lease, upon expiration of the term thereof becomes the property of the United States in fee simple.

Parcel 3. A parcel of land between F Street and Market Street and Harbor Street and Pacific Highway, in the city of San Diego, Calif., containing an area of 4.26 acres, more or less, excepting and reserving therefrom (a) the area held and occupied by the Arrowhead Puritas Distributors, Inc., under a lease that expires on February 28, 1947; and (b) the area held and occupied by the General Petroleum Corporation under a lease that expires on March 31, 1948: Provided, That the areas held under said leases, upon the expiration of the terms thereof, become the property of the United States in fee simple.

Parcel 4. A parcel of land between the United States bulkhead line and the United States pierhead line, lying southerly and adjacent to the present Navy pier in the city of San Diego, Calif., containing an area of 2.77 acres, more or less: Provided, That said parcels 1 to 4, inclusive, shall be used for military purposes, and particularly for the purpose of establishing and maintaining thereon piers, landings, buildings, and structures to be used by the United States and reserving to the said city of San Diego perpetual easements in said parcels for the laying and maintaining of underground public utilities, such as sewers, drains, water mains, gas, electric, and power lines across said parcels wherever necessary or convenient.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, on behalf of the United States, to accept from the city of San Diego, Calif., without cost to the United States, all right, title, and interest of the said city in and to the following-described parcels of land situated in the city of San Diego, Calif.:

Parcel 1. A strip of municipal tidelands 430.5 feet in width and contained 14.51 acres, more or less, in the city of San Diego, Calif., lying northerly of and adjacent to the northerly line of the United States destroyer base for military uses of the United States and particularly to be used by the Navy Department in connection with and as part of the naval destroyer base in the city of San Diego;

Parcel 2. All land lying between the high-water mark and the westerly line of proposed harbor drive adjacent to the easterly boundary of the destroyer base, in the city of San Diego, Calif., excluding that portion of the destroyer base embraced within the proposed Harbor Drive on the northerly and southerly sides of Bay Front Street and to the east of proposed harbor drive, containing an area of 8 acres, more or less;

Parcel 3. All that portion of Balboa Park, in the city of San Diego, Calif., in pueblo lots 1136 and 1143 of the pueblo lands of the city of San Diego, Calif., adjoining the southeasterly, southerly, and southwesterly boundaries of the naval hospital, San Diego, Calif., containing an area of 32.93 acres, more or less;

Parcel 4. A triangular area embracing portions of lots 2 to 11, inclusive, in West Atlantic Street Addition and a triangular area embracing the unnumbered block in Middletown, lots 7 to 12, inclusive, of block 231; and lots 7 to 12, inclusive, of block 236, in the city of San Diego, Calif., adjoining the northerly and easterly portions of the athletic field of the Marine Corps base, San Diego, Calif., containing an area of 2 acres, more or less.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, on behalf of the United States, to accept from the city of San Diego, Calif., without cost to the United States, all right, title, and interest of the said city in and to such other areas abutting the naval properties at San Diego, Calif., as will bring the exterior boundaries thereof to the adjoining boundary of the proposed Harbor Drive as now or hereafter may be located.

SEC. 4. The acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy of the transfer or quitclaim by the city of San Diego of any of the lands herein mentioned shall not be construed as a relinquishment by the United States of its claim of title or interest in said land in any manner arising.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SICK LEAVE FOR SUBSTITUTE POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7663, providing for sick leave for substitute postal employees.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1 and 2 of Public Law No. 194, first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, be amended to read as follows:

"That hereafter substitutes in the Postal Service shall be rated as employees and each substitute postal employee in the classified civil service shall be granted the same rights and benefits with respect to annual and sick leave that accrue to regular employees in proportion to the time actually employed.

"SEC. 2. No substitute shall be entitled to sick leave for an illness or disability incurred at a time when such substitute is on leave of absence other than annual leave."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "absence", insert "granted at his own request", and in line 4, page 2, after the word "leave", strike out the words "granted at his request" and insert in lieu thereof "or when such substitute is not available for duty."

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the committee amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this is merely a corrective measure. The Congress passed a bill at the last session giving the substitute clerks and carriers of the Post Office Department the privilege of enjoying sick and annual leaves, a privilege which they have not heretofore enjoyed. This privilege was extended to them after they had put in a certain number of hours each year. In the administration of the act the Comptroller General ruled that a substitute employee in order to have the privilege of sick leave had to physically report to the post office; in other words, if a man was stricken with acute appendicitis he had to rush to the post office and punch a clock before he would be eligible to obtain this benefit. The Congress, in my opinion, never intended any such procedure. The Post Office Committee met and corrected this situation and the bill which we now submit meets with the approval of the Post Office Department. It involves no additional expense and it is approved by the Bureau of the Budget. I respectfully urge its adoption.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOARDS OF LOCAL INSPECTORS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7169, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to establish additional boards of local inspectors in the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in addition to such boards of local inspectors as are heretofore established by law, the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to establish, whenever in his judgment the needs of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation and the volume of work so require, boards of local inspectors, to be composed of one inspector of boilers and one inspector of hulls, at such ports as he shall deem necessary.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the bill, S. 2661, is pending on the Speaker's table. It seeks to accomplish one of the purposes accomplished by the House bill. I ask unanimous consent to take the bill, S. 2661, from the Speaker's table, strike out all after the enacting clause, and substitute the language of the amendment contained in the House bill as reported, and amend the title of the Senate bill to conform with the amended title of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Florida if the Senate bill and the committee amendment are identical?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. No; the Senate bill provides for the creation of a board of inspectors at Miami, Fla. The House bill provides and allows the transfer of inspectors from place to place. The Department will have the same power under the House bill it would have under the Senate bill, and there would be no need for a special board.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the gentleman, the House amendment authorizes the readjustment of the present board.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And the Senate bill?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. That authorizes one at Miami, and I am sure that under the readjustment we will be able to take care of the situation at Miami without special legislation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And the gentleman's motion is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and substitute the House amendment?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes, and amend the title of the Senate bill to conform to the amended House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a board of inspectors, Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, consisting of a local inspector of hulls and a local inspector of boilers, is hereby created at the port of Miami, Fla. Such inspector of hulls and inspector of boilers shall each be entitled, in addition to his authorized pay and traveling expenses, to his actual and reasonable expenses for transportation of instruments, which shall be certified and sworn to under such instructions as shall be given by the Secretary of Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment to the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PETERSON of Florida to S. 2661: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange from time to time, by consolidation or otherwise, the location of the several boards of local inspectors and to discontinue boards of local inspectors by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of boards of local inspectors shall at no time be made to exceed those established and authorized on the date of the enactment of this act, except as the same may thereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done under the provisions of this act and the reasons therefor."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the Senate bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to provide for rearrangement of the location of the several boards of local inspectors."

A House bill, H. R. 7169, was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF RESTRICTED INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5918) amending Public Law No. 96 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, being an act entitled "An act amending section 2 of Public Law No. 716 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, being an act entitled 'An act to relieve restricted Indians whose lands have been taxed or have been lost by failure to pay taxes and for other purposes.' "

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Public Law No. 96 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, being an act entitled "An act amending section 2 of Public Law No. 716 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, being an act entitled '. n act to relieve restricted Indians whose lands have been taxed or have been lost by failure to pay taxes and for other purposes,' " is hereby amended by adding the following sections:

"SEC. 3. This act (Public Law No. 96 of the 75th Cong.) shall be effective as of June 6, 1936, and shall be declaratory of the intent of Congress and the meaning of section 2 of said Public Law No. 716 of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

"SEC. 4. All lands, other than those provided for in section 2 hereof, the title to which was held by an Indian on June 6, 1936, subject to restrictions against alienation or encumbrance except with the consent or approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and which was purchased before said June 6, 1936, out of trust or restricted funds of said Indian, shall be subject to tax as of June 6, 1936, but not subject to penalties, interest, and costs that may have accrued under the law of any State wherein said land is situate on the principal amount of the taxes levied on said land for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1936, and ending June 30, 1937."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SPECIAL-DELIVERY MESSENGERS, POSTAL SERVICE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8733) to clarify the employment status of special-delivery messengers in the Postal Service.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act to provide for the special delivery and the special handling of mail matter, approved March 2, 1931 (46 Stat., ch. 372, p. 1469; U. S. C., title 39, sec. 169a), be amended as follows:

Change the period at the end of section 3 to a colon and add the following proviso: "Provided, That all special-delivery messengers employed full time in the Postal Service shall be, for all practical purposes, classed as postal employees."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That (a) in each fiscal year, commencing with the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1939, any person employed as a special-delivery messenger in the Postal Service who actually served in such capacity during not less than 9 months of the preceding fiscal year shall be entitled to the same rights and benefits with respect to annual and sick leave with pay as are regular employees of the Postal Service.

"(b) The amount of pay to which any such special-delivery messenger shall be entitled during any leave period shall be determined by multiplying the number of days in such leave (excluding Sundays and holidays) by the average daily compensation of such special-delivery messenger, computed as provided in subsection (c).

"(c) At the end of each fiscal year each postmaster employing any special-delivery messenger eligible for the benefits of this act shall compute the average daily compensation of such special-delivery messenger during such fiscal year. Such average daily compensation shall be determined by dividing the total compensation paid to such special-delivery messenger during such fiscal year (excluding any amount paid as compensation during any period of annual or sick leave) by the total number of days such special-delivery messenger actually served during such fiscal year. The average daily compensation so determined shall be used in computing the amount of pay due such special-delivery messenger for any leave period during the succeeding fiscal year. Such compensation for annual or sick leave shall be paid to the special-delivery messenger by the postmaster by whom he is employed at the end of the regular pay period during which such leave is taken.

"(d) There are authorized to be appropriated such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section. Such amounts when appropriated shall be made available to postmasters for the payment of the leave compensation herein provided in the same manner as is provided for the payment of special-delivery messenger fees.

"(e) The Postmaster General shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 2. (a) Special-delivery messengers in the Postal Service shall be entitled to all the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, in the same manner as is provided in the case of city, rural, and village letter carriers, except that as applied to any special-delivery messenger, the term 'basic salary, pay, or compensation' as used in such act shall be deemed to mean the actual compensation of such special-delivery messenger.

"(b) The Civil Service Commission shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the effective administration of this section."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CONCHAS DAM AND RESERVOIR PROJECT, NEW MEXICO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8500) authorizing the Secretary of War to execute an easement deed to the State of New Mexico for the use and occupation of lands and water areas at Conchas Dam and Reservoir project, New Mexico.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, under such terms, regulations, and conditions as are deemed advisable by him, to grant to the State of New Mexico for public recreational purposes an easement for the use and occupation of such lands and water areas owned or controlled by the United States in connection with the Conchas Dam and Reservoir project on the South Canadian River, in New Mexico, as he may designate: Provided, That said easement shall be subordinate to the use of said lands and water areas by the War Department as may be necessary in the operation and maintenance of said dam and reservoir project.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

VIRGINIA (MERRIMAC)-MONITOR COMMISSION

The Clerk called House Concurrent Resolution 52, to amend House Concurrent Resolution 32 Seventy-sixth Congress, first session.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That sections 5 and 6 of House Concurrent Resolution 32, which passed the House of Representatives on the 31st day of July 1939, and the Senate on the 2d day of August 1939, establishing the Virginia (Merrimac)-Monitor Commission, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the Commission shall, on or before the 15th day of April 1941, make a report to Congress for such enabling legislation, if any, as the Congress may desire.

"SEC. 6. That the Commission hereby created shall expire within 3 years after the adoption of this concurrent resolution."

With the following committee amendments:

Line 8, strike out "1941" and insert "1942".

Line 12, strike out "three" and insert "four".

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STATE ACCOUNT OF ADVANCES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9263) to permit the Secretary of State to authorize disbursements of appropriated funds under a "State account of advances."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 3528 be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the Senate bill identical with the House bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. No. It is better than the House bill. [Laughter.] The Senate bill is approved by the State and Treasury Departments as well as the Bureau of the Budget.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of any other law the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to issue under the limitations and restrictions hereinafter established requistitions for advances of funds to disbursing officers of the Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department, under a "State account of advances" not to exceed the total amount of appropriations for the Department of State, the amounts so advanced to be used exclusively to pay upon proper vouchers obligations lawfully payable under the respective appropriations: Provided, That a separate "State account of advances" shall be established on the books of the Treasury Department relating to appropriations made to the Department of State for each fiscal year and that a "State account of advances" relating to the appropriations for 1 fiscal year shall not be used to pay vouchers pertaining to the appropriations of any other fiscal year. Expenditures from the amounts requisitioned under the "State account of advances" shall be charged to applicable appropriations on the books of the Treasury Department on the basis of transfer and counter warrants prepared in the State Department as of the close of each month and prior to audit, certification, or adjustment by the General Accounting Office. The General Accounting Office shall subsequently declare the sums finally due from the several appropriations upon audited vouchers according to law and shall certify the same to the Treasury Department which shall make the necessary adjustments between appropriations upon the basis of such audited settlements of the General Accounting Office: Provided further, That such adjustments shall be reflected on the books of the Government in the month and fiscal year during which the audited settlements are certified to the Treasury.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill, H. R. 9263, was laid on the table.

UNIFORMITY OF ALLOWANCES FOR TRANSPORTATION OF HOUSEHOLD GOODS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9264, to provide for uniformity of allowances for the transportation of household goods of civilian officers and employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what civilian employees are included in this bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Civilian employees of the State Department.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Are postal clerks excluded?

Mr. COCHRAN. There are no postal clerks or Indians in this bill; it applies only to the State Department.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, you exclude postal clerks and Indians?

Mr. EATON. And Republicans? [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. No. This has simply to do with the State Department. Republicans are included in this as well as Democrats. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why should not postal clerks be included?

Mr. COCHRAN. Because this is for the State Department only.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. COCHRAN. I will accept the gentleman's clarifying amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That expenses which now or hereafter may be authorized by law to be paid from Government funds for the packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household goods and personal effects of civilian officers and employees of any of the executive departments or establishments of the United States when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty shall hereafter be allowed and paid, when specifically authorized or approved by the head of the department or establishment concerned, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the President, which regulations shall prescribe, among other matters, the maximum weight of the property, not to exceed 5,000 pounds gross or the equivalent thereof when transportation charges are based on cubic measurement, which may be packed, crated, hauled, transported, and unpacked at Government expense: Provided, That no part of such expenses shall be paid from Government funds where the transfer is made at the request and primarily for the convenience or benefit of the officer or employee: Provided further, That nothing herein shall affect the allowance and payment of expenses for, or incident to, the transportation of effects of officers and employees of the Foreign Service, Department of State.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: On page 2, line 13, after the word "State", strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "except where the transfer is made at the request and primarily for the convenience or benefit of the officer or employee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RETIRED PAY OF CERTAIN RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1918, relating to the retired pay of certain retired Army officers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That commissioned officers of the Regular Army placed upon the unlimited retired list pursuant to the provisions of that part of the War Department Appropriation Act, 1923, as amended, which provided for the elimination of commissioned officers of the Regular Army in excess of the number therein provided for, shall be entitled to retired pay after the date of enactment of this act, computed as follows:

(1) Those with more than 10 years' and less than 20 years' commissioned service at date of being placed on the unlimited retired list and all additional service on active duty under competent War Department orders subsequent to being placed on the unlimited retired list, 2½ percent of their active-duty pay multiplied by the number of complete years of such commissioned service, but not in excess of 75 percent of such active pay.

(2) Those with more than 20 years' commissioned service at date of being placed on the unlimited retired list and all additional service on active duty under competent War Department orders subsequent to being placed on the unlimited retired list, 3 percent of their active-duty pay multiplied by the number of complete years of such commissioned service, but not in excess of 75 percent of such active pay.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That concludes the bills eligible on the Consent Calendar today.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and insert excerpts from an article appearing in the magazine Foreign Service, and one or two excerpts from letters I have received.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address delivered by me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a brief letter I have received from one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE WALTER-LOGAN BILL

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 388, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 388

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 6324, a bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a quorum present for this debate. This is a very important measure. In my opinion, it is a violent departure from the present system. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. COX. May I ask the gentleman to withdraw that request? While it is a most important matter, I trust the gentleman will not inconvenience Members who happen to be at their offices or engaged in other duties. I appreciate the gentleman making the motion.

Mr. RANKIN. I am not trying to inconvenience anybody.

Mr. COX. Of course, I know that.

Mr. RANKIN. I regard this as one of the most far-reaching departures from the present system that has yet been proposed. I think the Members ought to be here to hear this debate. I think I ought to stand by my point of no quorum. I insist on the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 70]

Arends	Corbett	Harness	Mott
Arnold	Darden	Harter, N. Y.	Myers

Starnes, Ala.	Tibbott	Wheat	White, Ohio
Steagall	Wadsworth	Whelchel	Winter

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). Three hundred and twenty-five Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

THE WALTER-LOGAN BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to my brethren that while not complaining I do regret the point of no quorum was made. I know how unusually busy Members are, particularly on Monday, and I would have been pleased had you been permitted to have remained in your offices and been given opportunity to attend to matters which I know are always pressing to the front and demanding quick attention. The subject under consideration at the present time is the Walter-Logan bill which the pending rule is intended to make in order.

My friend the gentleman from Mississippi stated a few moments ago that the Walter bill is an important one. That expression was made in the sense, as intended by him, that it carried a threat to administrative procedure that makes important our proceeding with great deliberation before taking action. To the extent that the pending bill is an important measure I agree with him. I can think of a thousand reasons why it should be adopted and not one as to why it should be cast aside.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. With pleasure.

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, if this bill passes does it not turn the executive departments of this Government over to the courts?

Mr. COX. Not at all.

Mr. RANKIN. Does it not give the court the right to paralyze the various branches of the executive departments in the discharge of their respective duties?

Mr. COX. Let me answer the gentleman. There is no one in this body who has a higher appreciation of the gentleman from Mississippi than myself. At this time he thinks he is opposed to this bill, but I have the confidence to believe that if he will listen to this debate, and if he will approach consideration with an open mind, he will be one of the strongest of its advocates when we reach the point of casting a vote. The gentleman is usually right, he is patriotic, and he believes in sustaining and preserving our constitutional system of government. And here, Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with the obligation that comes to us individually and collectively to preserve the supremacy of a system of government by laws over a system of government by men.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. The greatest Democrat the world has ever known, Thomas Jefferson, was born 197 years ago day before yesterday. He is said to have predicted that if this Republic was ever destroyed it would be destroyed by the courts. If you give the courts the right to place themselves above the Congress and the Executive, then you will have a judicial fascisti.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I must ask that the gentleman propound questions and not make speeches, because time is limited. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. RANKIN. If you give them the right to review every single order or discharge of duty by a branch of the executive department, in my opinion you have paralyzed this Government or made it a court government.

Mr. COX. May I say to the gentleman from Mississippi that if this Government is maintained as a constitutional democracy it will be the result of courts rather than the bureaucrats in the Government. [Applause.]

Administrative law is the substitution of the discretion of bureaucrats for the rules of fixed, definite law. It was under the rule of kings, czars, emperors, mikados, and dictators that personalized government, that is administrative law, reached its maximum power over both life and property. From that maximum elevation of power, that maximum elevation of administrative law the people have for several centuries and until recently at least been gradually recovering their independence by building up a system in which the supremacy of general rules of law has been established over that of personalized government and to the obligations of which officials of whatever rank are not immune. The purpose of this bill is to recapture a part of the powers of Congress which it should never have delegated to the bureaucrats.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Then why does not the gentleman advocate giving the Congress the right to pass on them instead of transferring these prerogatives to the courts, a third branch of the Government?

Mr. COX. Our national economy is so complicated that we must employ or use this method of administering public law, but not to the extent of delegating to administrative agents the power of substituting their judgment as to the meaning of law for the judgment of the Congress which enacted the law.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman know that if this law passes in its present form that any executive branch of the Government that undertakes to discharge its duties in any particular can be dragged into court, the litigation strung out for several years, and then when that is over they can go back and take a new hold and repeat the process?

Mr. COX. I understand no such thing. The effect of this law will be to deflate the swollen powers of Government bureaucrats.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. If the Walter bill had ever been the law, would we have had the T. V. A.; would we have had the Bonneville Dam advanced as far as those projects are advanced?

Mr. COX. The employment of the right of review as provided by the pending bill, the Walter bill, would not in anywise have obstructed any administrative agent in the exercise of a lawful delegation of power.

Mr. PIERCE. Would not this law have given the courts the right to have held up those great enterprises during all this time?

Mr. COX. This law would give to the courts the right of review upon the application of a party at interest of any order that an administrative board might make. But why should not the courts have the right to review an order of a legislative agent that construes the acts of Congress? Why should not the courts have such right of review?

Mr. PIERCE. For the reason that the only way the people have to act is through the bureaus set up by Congress.

Mr. COX. Oh, the people have no way of acting except through the constitutional methods which they themselves have established.

Mr. PIERCE. But do not the courts delay, delay, and delay? This bill, it seems to me, puts the brakes on all administrative officials.

Mr. COX. The legislation does put a brake upon administrative agents who assume almost unlimited power to both legislate and to judge.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. May I say to the gentleman, if he will allow me to make a statement, that I approach this bill with an open mind. I have not yet made up my mind that I can vote for legislation of this sort. Now, the gentleman has talked about commissions to which we have given legislative authority.

Mr. COX. There have been no complaints against any of the old commissions. It is the new commissions that have been set up during the past few years.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is exactly the point I am coming to. Why should the Federal Reserve Board be exempt, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, the decisions of which are as controversial as any other agency of the Government, all Federal lending agencies I see have been put in here, the Federal Trade Commission, the conduct of the State Department, and so forth? Why not the Federal Power Commission that is as old as the Federal Trade Commission, because I happen to have served on the committee that reported that bill out 25 years ago? Why not the Communications Commission? Why not the Securities and Exchange Commission? Why should not those Commissions be exempted along with these other Commissions? [Applause.]

Mr. COX. I do not know what were the considerations that influenced the Judiciary Committee to except all these agencies that are named in the bill. Frankly, I think there are too many of them exempted. Certainly not another single one of them should be exempted. I know the agency that my devoted friend has particularly in mind and I do not wish to assault it because it is the creature of the gentleman's brain and heart. I know when this bill comes up for consideration under the 5-minute rule, if it progresses to that point, the gentleman will seek to have it put in the exempted class. But I want to say to the gentleman and the other Members of this House that they could commit no greater blunder than to exempt the Securities and Exchange Commission, because that Commission is fast falling to the low level of the National Labor Relations Board, due to the fact that the Commission has seemingly embraced the same philosophy as that held by the National Labor Relations Board. That Commission has the same philosophy as most of these new agencies that have been set up in recent years, whose thinking is apparently rooted in doctrine that emanates from Russia. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. May I say to the gentleman that of course he supported the measure that brought that Commission into existence. It administers three laws, all of which I happen to have the honor of being the author in the House of Representatives.

Mr. RAYBURN. I refer to the Securities Act of 1933, the Stock Exchange Act of 1934, and the Utilities Act of 1935.

Mr. COX. That is right.

Mr. RAYBURN. After the Congress gave the utilities plenty of time, and the Commission has given them 5 years to present plans to abolish these various holding companies, after the Congress has ordered them to do so, now the Commission must begin to operate under the Holding Company Act. There are a great many people in this country who want to stymie it in the courts when the Holding Company Act begins to be put into effect by this Commission.

Mr. COX. May I say to the gentleman that I am not complaining against the Securities and Exchange Commission in its undertaking to execute the death sentence of that law. I supported the gentleman wholeheartedly in his advocacy of that measure. I made no exception. I followed him all the way through. It is not those activities of the Commission about which I make complaint. I complain of the Commission's assuming that it is better capacitated because of its alleged technical and expert understanding of the problem that it has in hand to determine the meaning of Congress than Congress itself. That is what one of the higher-ups in the Commission said.

Mr. RAYBURN. Of course, no commission can be held responsible for what one commissioner may say in an unguarded moment.

Mr. COX. But the gentleman knows that that commission is falling into disrepute. He knows it is not maintaining that high position in the confidence of the people of the country which it held under the chairmanship of Joe Kennedy. Does not the gentleman know that?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the Commission has had just as high a standing under James Landis, who is one of the most able men in this country.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman read the book written by Mr. Landis? Mr. Landis is a very conscientious and earnest man, but he leans considerably toward ultra-liberalism. If the gentleman does not believe that, read his book.

Mr. RAYBURN. I did not hear the gentleman complain about the Securities Act, the Stock Exchange Act, or the Utilities Act.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think the Securities and Exchange Commission under the chairmanship of Mr. Frank is sustaining the high reputation which it won under the chairmanship of Joe Kennedy?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think it did until recently, or at least until some of these implications started.

Mr. COX. The Securities and Exchange Commission is suffering in the esteem of the people of this country because it has become bloated on power which it insists it has under the limited delegation which the Congress conferred.

Mr. RAYBURN. May I say to the gentleman that he remembers in 1935 when I was trying to pass this bill that I suffered deflation in the estimation of some people of the country.

Mr. COX. Certainly not in my estimation. The gentleman has the heart and mind and the understanding of all public questions that will qualify him for the highest offices in the gift of the people.

Mr. RAYBURN. I said some people in the country. I did not mean the House of Representatives or anyone in it. Now another commission is administering a law of which I was also the author. We had the old Radio Commission, and then there was the telegraph and telephone, jurisdiction over which had been lying in the Interstate Commerce Commission for 40 years, but nothing much had been done about it. Then a bill was introduced by me that brought all communications under the same administration; that is, the Federal Communications Commission. Why is this commission not exempted if you exempt the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. COX. I am not insisting on the exemption of anyone, as far as I am concerned. I should like to wipe out the exemption and go all the way, because I cannot see any very good reason why any agency of the Government should have delegated to it the power both to legislate and to judge, and that is what these agencies do.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. It has frequently been said that the bad administration of a good law can destroy that law.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes. Of course, the gentleman is right; a good law can be used to accomplish great injury by bad administration.

Mr. MAY. In nearly all the acts we have passed here setting up various agencies of Government we have included a clause something like this, that the board of directors or the persons in charge may adopt such rules and regulations for the administration of the law as may be necessary in their judgment. Then these administrators write a rule or regulation of some kind and construe it themselves and give it the effect of law. This practice, as I understand, is all this bill is intended to reach.

Mr. COX. This bill goes no further than to provide for judicial review of the orders of these administrative agencies.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. In view of the fact that the discussion seems to center around the Securities and Exchange Commission and the manner in which it has discharged its duty, I should like to read a portion of an opinion of the Supreme Court:

> The action of the Commission finds no support in right of principle or in law. It is wholly unreasonable and arbitrary. It violates the cardinal precept upon which the constitutional safeguards of personal liberty ultimately rests—that this shall be a government of laws—because to the precise extent that the mere will of an official or an official body is permitted to take the place of allowable official discretion or to supplant the standing law as a rule of human conduct, the government ceases to be one of laws and becomes an autocracy.

This was a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. RAYBURN. The Supreme Court could say that about any commission or any board or any bureau in the Government, and under certain circumstances it might be justified.

Mr. COX. The Supreme Court has no power to review the orders of these executive boards, and that is the point with which we are dealing now. That is the main point in the bill. The bill simply provides that, in addition to reviewing findings of law and findings of fact, there shall exist the right of review of orders which injuriously affect the rights of parties.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have just mentioned four measures with which I had to do. I had a little to do with another one, which bore my name in the House; that is, the bill having to do with rural electrification. It seems that none of the agencies with whose establishment I had to do are exempt.

Mr. COX. Why should anyone even think of exempting the Tennessee Valley Authority? Give me one reason.

Mr. RANKIN. I can tell the gentleman; because if you pass this law it will be litigated to death by the Power Trust and its allies—not by the people it was created to serve.

Mr. RAYBURN. I was asking the gentleman not about the Tennessee Valley Authority but the Rural Electrification Administration.

Mr. COX. Bring them all under the law.

Let me reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] by reading from another decision of the Supreme Court, a recent case, that of Morgan against United States.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX. Let me read this excerpt first, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

In an opinion rendered by Mr. Chief Justice Hughes appears this language:

> The maintenance of proper standards on the part of administrative agencies in the performance of their quasi-judicial functions is of the highest importance and in no way cripples or embarrasses the exercise of their appropriate authority. On the contrary, it is in their manifest interest. For, as we said at the outset, if these multiplying agencies deemed to be necessary in our complex society are to serve the purposes for which they are created and endowed with vast powers, they must accredit themselves by acting in accordance with the cherished judicial tradition embodying the basic concepts of fair play.

Who in this body has the hardihood to contend that the National Labor Relations Board, for instance, has had any regard in its administration of the law for the rules of fair play, or for law, equity, justice, or right?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I accept the challenge of the gentleman and with respect to every statement he has made in relation to the National Labor Relations Board I challenge you to bring up the Smith bill, which you fostered by passing a resolution taking away from the Committee on Labor its power and rights in that regard. Bring up your bill and we will see how we will vote.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman has concluded, let me have my say. Let me say to my friend that I was not addressing myself to the gentleman from Illinois. I had no idea of letting my bucket into his intellectual well. [Laughter.] I want water, and I am afraid the gentleman from Illinois has none to spare.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to my friend.

Mr. RANKIN. I notice the gentleman attacks the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. COX. No; I do not attack the Authority. I said who in God's name wants it exempted. It has had a free hand long enough, has it not?

Mr. RANKIN. It has been litigated by the very forces that are demanding this legislation. I was one of the men who helped create the Tennessee Valley Authority. I was coauthor of the bill creating it.

Mr. COX. I voted for it and I am supporting it now.

Mr. RANKIN. I wonder why these agents of the Federal Government that are trying to protect the power consumers of America, such as the Securities and Exchange Commission that is trying to break up these vast holding companies are not exempt, while others are?

Mr. COX. I will have to ask the gentleman not to put remarks in my speech unless in the form of a question.

Mr. RANKIN. I say I wonder why you leave them in the bill and exempt these other agencies.

Mr. COX. I have left nobody in the bill. It is your Judiciary Committee that reports the bill, and, I assume, is supporting it. I know the author of the bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is supporting it.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will yield further, does not the gentleman know that if any of these commissions or any of these bureaus violate the law, the court has the right now to set their action aside?

Mr. COX. Let me say to the gentleman that in all of these measures setting up these administrative agencies, provision must be included providing for judicial review of questions of law, and in order to meet the due process clause of the Constitution to likewise provide for some sort of review of findings of fact.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. There are 130 separate agencies——

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman think it fair to visit the sins of the few upon the many?

Mr. COX. Oh, you start the argument which is always advanced by these fellows who want to make over America. [Applause.] And most of them want to make it over along the pattern set by Russia. Do not fool yourselves, and the gentleman is fooling nobody in this House and nobody in this country.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Does not the gentleman think America needs to be made over after the orgies that took place in the twenties?

Mr. COX. I do not want these young world-heavers turned loose upon the country by some of our universities, one in particular, to make over our Government as best suits them.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. If they are to make it over for honesty and decency and good intent, it ought to be done.

Mr. COX. My friends, every one of them are undertaking to circumvent the Constitution, and the gentleman himself knows it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COX. I yield to my friend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All the time of the gentleman from Georgia has now expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Georgia 5 additional minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman think he would correct this by having all these matters poured into the lap of the present Supreme Court?

Mr. COX. Let me say to my friend that I am not particularly enamored of the new Supreme Court. [Laughter and applause.] I am not particularly enamored of the Court as now constituted, but there are those on the Court in whose patriotism and in whose understanding of constitutional government I have great confidence.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. My distinguished friend from Mississippi probably has not read the bill because the review is to the circuit court of appeals and not to the court that he is so much afraid of.

Mr. RANKIN. That is worse than ever.

Mr. COX. Well, my friends, I want to say to you that this mixing of powers—legislative, judicial, and executive—which is being practiced on the part of these administrative agencies, constituting a fourth department of government, will certainly bring us to ruin sooner or later unless they are checked by the Congress.

I want to say to you that there is every reason why you should impose something of a restraint upon agents that you have appointed to execute laws that you have adopted insofar as they undertake to substitute their judgment for that of the Congress, and that is what is going on. Let me tell you what is happening. In all of these laws in question there is the provision that findings of facts on the part of these agencies may be reviewed by the courts, but there is no right of reversal where there is in the record substantial evidence to support the finding. In other words, insofar as review by the Supreme Court is concerned, the scintilla doctrine is applied; that is, where there is evidence supporting the findings, no reversal can be had. But these agencies, in their findings on facts, apply that same doctrine.

There are no other bodies in all the world to whom is delegated the duty of making findings of fact that apply any other than the preponderance rule. In other words, you are a trier of facts. You are charged with the duty of ascertaining the truth as to a certain controversy, and there are many witnesses summoned before you. What would you do? Would you not apply the preponderance rule; would you not give your decision in favor of the weight of evidence? Of course, you would. But these boards, who initiate these cases, who first provoke the situation that gives rise to complaint, and who, in many instances, try the case and make the findings before the taxpayer is summoned into court—what do they do? They send out their triers of fact, charged with the duty of making a finding in favor of some particular interest, and authorized to make it where there may be found in the record a particle of testimony, wholly disregarding the preponderance rule. Gentlemen, I say to you a terribly wicked thing is being done to America by some of these administrative agencies that you have set up. I regret the lack of time to make a complete statement. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes. I am not in a controversial mood today and therefore do not desire to enter into disputes or discussions with the "special pleaders" for some of the agencies of the Government that will be deprived of some autocratic power by this legislation. I do not care to discuss the relative value, philosophy, or knowledge of Joe Kennedy or James Landis or Jerome Frank. These men were appointed by the President, and some of them, at least, are ardent disciples of the New Deal. The administrative record each has made speaks for itself. My remarks at this time will be general, but I have to discuss this bill in detail at a later stage of the proceeding.

This rule which is before the House is an open rule. It is a fair rule; it is a square rule. It brings before the House this controversial legislation. We have 3 hours of general debate and then, under the rule, the Members may offer all germane amendments desired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make my position clear.

Mr. MICHENER. Certainly. If the gentleman wants to apologize for or explain what he has said, I yield for that purpose.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, the gentleman has never yet had to apologize for anything that he has said on the floor of this House, and I say to the gentleman from Michigan that, so far as I am concerned, I am not resisting the adoption of this rule.

Mr. MICHENER. I am glad to hear that. I did not mean to make an unkind remark, because we all have much faith in, and much affection for, the gentleman from Texas, the majority leader. We realize how fair, how generous he is. Although he is human like the rest of us, and enthusiastic like the rest of us, and at times he is partisan like the rest of us, and possibly, like the rest of us, he is not always right.

Mr. Speaker, administrative absolutism is fast getting a strangle hold through administrative processes in the National Government. Other speakers will give specific instances. In the beginning of the discussion of this measure we must not forget that ours is a representative form of government, and that the principles of democracy, as we understand them, place the power to make the laws in the Congress, the power to interpret those laws in the judiciary, and the power to execute those laws in the Executive.

In a recent magazine article discussing the Walter-Logan bill, which this bill makes in order, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] made a very understandable statement. He gave the general reasons necessitating the enactment of this law, and I repeat those reasons. As a member of the Judiciary Committee studying and reporting this bill, I concur wholeheartedly. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said:

> Government in Washington is fast becoming a government by men rather than by law. Contrary to the fundamental concepts of our constitutional democracy, the trend is evident in recent years, particularly among the many administrative agencies, that the uncontrolled whims and ambitions of men instead of written laws are directing the destiny of our Nation.
> Such a trend strangely parallels the developments in Europe, where control of governments by men who usurped the laws has culminated in the dictatorships which now hold much of that continent in their grasp.
> In our Nation, for the past half century, the tendency has been to strengthen the powers of the Federal Government so as to regulate and control the governed. This tendency has grown at a constantly accelerated pace in the past 10 years. More than 100 administrative agencies have been established to regulate and control the various channels of trade and enterprise which have increased along with our social and economic advancement.
> In the haste to enact these various control statutes, little provision was made for means and methods whereby the governors could be governed and the regulators could be regulated. The time has come when some of these regulators consider themselves above the statutes and when they show contemptuous disregard for both the Congress and the courts. Some of these regulators constitute a very real threat to the democratic processes of government.
> Thus the need for an administrative law act influenced me to sponsor the House draft of the so-called Walter-Logan bill—a bill to "regulate the regulators." Such an act has long been urged by the American Bar Association and by other students of trends which are dangerous to our government by law.

Had I been making that statement you might possibly have said that it had a political tinge, but that statement is made by one of the leaders of the Democratic Party in this House, one who believes in the American way and who has courage to state his views. That statement is made by a Democrat who believes in constitutional, Jeffersonian government.

In recent years there has been a tendency on the part of the Congress to surrender to the Executive and administrative agencies the right to make rules and regulations which have the force and effect of law, even to the extent of carrying severe penalties for violation. In fact, in recent years some of the statutes creating new Federal administrative agencies have provided that the decision of the agency on the facts should be final and conclusive. It is expressly provided that there be no appeal. There has been no uniformity of the scope of judicial review and little or no provision has been made in any of the statutes as to the practice and procedure which should be followed by the agency in conducting hearings and deciding controversies. As a result some of these bureaus have become power conscious. Requirement to issue regulations interpreting the statutes has been the exception and not the rule. The Congress has been gradually but surely yielding to bureaus, boards, commissions, and other agencies its right to make laws. The administrators of these agencies follow the trend of all bureaucrats and usurp power belonging to the Congress, which was never intended to be granted to the bureau. This has led to a dangerous centralization of governmental power in the administrative branch of our Government.

In totalitarian governments edicts and orders are issued by the heads of the government, and they have the force and effect of law. There is no appeal. The dictator is the law. When we allow Government bureaus to make rules that are tantamount to laws, and then permit no appeal from them, we are rapidly approaching the totalitarian state.

Bureaucrats are never answerable to the electorate; they are answerable only to the appointing power. It necessarily follows that if bureaus are clothed with authority to make rules and regulations having the force and effect of law, and if a bureau's edict is final and there is no court review, then the bureau has even more power than the Congress, because all acts of the Congress are subject to review by the courts.

If the Congress passes a law and entrusts to some agency the administration of the law, the agency should not substitute its judgment as to what the law should be for what the Congress clearly intended as the objective. It is usurpation of power of this kind that makes the enactment of this law a necessity just now. Bureaucrats gone mad with power.

The Walter bill attempts to remedy some of the prevalent conditions and provides for uniform procedure for establishing rules and regulations of administrative agencies, with prior notice and public hearings, and authority for the United States Circuit Court of Appeals to pass on such regulations; it provides intradepartmental appeal boards; it assures wide expansion of judicial review.

I pause to join in the applause given to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], who appears among us for the first time since his severe illness.

Judge MANSFIELD, as the present occupant of the floor I am sure I speak the sentiments of every Member of the House when I welcome you back to the Congress where you belong. [Applause, the Members rising.] We all hope you have fully recovered and that you will stay with us for a long time to come. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the gentleman very much, and I thank the House for the honor they have conferred upon me. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Now, proceeding with my argument, this bill will prevent the making over of the entire system of government without following the constitutional formula. In the last few years there have been too many efforts on the part of the administration to adapt our conditions to a new philosophy by subtle and short-route methods and thereby make the Government over. In short, this bill is designed in effect to give a new bill of rights to the individual citizen or corporation in conflict with the Government. It would require, for instance, that when new laws are passed the administrative rules and regulations which interpret them must be laid down within a short time and made public. It would provide for a uniform system of appeals within an agency and would make any final decision or order by an administrative agency subject to court review, a privilege which recent Supreme Court decisions have been steadily narrowing.

The Supreme Court in the Pottsville Broadcasting case, in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Frankfurter, a recognized authority in this field, stated:

> To assimilate the relations of these administrative bodies and the courts to the relationship between lower and upper courts is to disregard the origin and purposes of the movement for administrative regulation. * * * Unless these vital differentiations between the functions of judicial and administrative tribunals are observed, courts will stray outside their province and read the laws of Congress through the distorting lenses of inapplicable legal doctrine.

It would seem clear that this distinguished Justice feels that our country is fast approaching the day when the people shall be ruled, regimented, and regulated by bureaus and administrators rather than by laws. This case would seem to indicate that in the opinion of the present Court these administrative agencies should not have their decisions reviewed by the court and that the legal doctrine as followed by the Supreme Court in the past should possibly not obtain in this new day.

The Walter bill will make it clear that the Congress still has some rights and powers not possessed by bureaus and similar agencies of the Government in the enactment of laws.

Of course, there will be opposition to this bill, and from whom will this opposition come? The President is quoted in the press as being opposed to the bill because if Government agencies were forced to comply with court practices it would mean a slowing down of Government procedure. The President evidently gives no consideration to the possible injustices of the agency rulings. We have had too much speed and too little consideration in legislative matters in recent years. Slowing-down procedure is exactly what is needed when procedure which means the life or death of industry, or the financial ruin of individuals, is in the hands of an arbitrary, tyrannical, and bitterly prejudiced agency.

Some of the advocates of the bill insist that it is good merely because it would hamper the work of certain Government bureaus. The American people would like to see some of these bureaus hampered, restrained, or whatever is necessary to prevent them doing the things they have been doing. This, however, is not sufficient ground for as far-reaching a bill as the Walter bill. Two wrongs never make a right. The whole subject deserves careful and impartial examination. This careful and impartial examination has been had, and while the bill is undoubtedly not perfect and possibly goes further than I would have it go in some instances, yet, after all, it seems the best that can be worked out at this time. The rule will make the bill open to amendments and as a result the bill as it leaves the House will be the composite view of a majority of our Members. The bill will be considered under democratic processes and will only become a law when a majority of our people, expressing themselves through their representatives in Congress, so determine.

In my judgment, the bill should be brought up for consideration and should pass the House. [Applause.]

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. I just want to make this practical observation: Every Member of Congress who comes here is subject to having his record and his vote reviewed every 2 years by his constituents. He rises or falls, according to their approval or disapproval. But the bureaucrats go on, like Tennyson's brook, forever. They can entrench themselves, and unless some bill such as this is passed, they can put out these edicts, rules and regulations, without fear of any review. The result is that they become more arrogant all the time and the prestige of Congress goes down. The Congress is blamed for the very things that they do, which are against the interests of the ordinary citizen.

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the distinguished gentleman for his contribution. He has said in concise language what I attempted to say in a general way. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6324, with Mr. KERR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in 1932 the American Bar Association, at its annual convention, adopted a resolution calling upon a committee to make a study of the growing encroachment upon the people by the administrative agencies of our Government. It is very significant to note that date. That was before much of the legislation was enacted that our friends have been discussing here this afternoon.

Pursuant to this resolution, a committee was appointed, consisting of Dean Pound, of Harvard; Col. O. R. McGuire, formerly General Counsel for the General Accounting Office; and various other leading students of administrative procedure and administrative law, among whom subsequently was Justice Frankfurter, then Professor Frankfurter, of Harvard.

The following year a similar committee was appointed and a tentative draft of legislation was prepared. This draft was submitted to all of the leading universities and law schools in our country and to lawyers not only in the Government, but to lawyers who had much experience in practice before the Government.

The following year at another committee meeting of the American Bar Association a bill was presented, and this bill was referred to the Committees on the Judiciary of both the House and the Senate. Hearings were held in the Senate by a committee in charge of the late Senator Logan, of Ketnucky, than whom there was no finer student of the law in America. In that connection may I state that Senator Logan at one time was the chief justice of the supreme court of his state.

To that hearing were invited people who could throw some light on this problem of administrative processes, and it is very significant to note that even the opponents of this legislation admit that there is a problem. The Senate committee reported a bill and the following year that bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. No. I will yield later.

Mr. KELLER. Just be specific in the years, if you will.

Mr. WALTER. When this bill was referred to the House Judiciary Committee we invited to hearings representatives of every department of our Government. We permitted all of the agencies to be heard at length. They all filed briefs, and great study was given to the objections interposed by these agencies. After these hearings we reached the conclusion that the opposition to this bill came from people who, while admitting there was a problem, did not approve of the proposed solution thereof. There was not a single objection interposed to this legislation that was well founded that our committee did not recognize, and the bill was redrafted in order to meet these objections. Mr. Chairman, in our zeal in America to meet the problems that have arisen in recent years we have gradually gotten away from our fundamental ideas of the separation of powers in the branches of government. It is trite for me to say to you that this is a tripartite system of government. Bear in mind, however, that the administrative agencies of our Government have two different functions: One is quasi legislative and the other is quasi judicial.

I shall not go into the need for this legislation. Suffice to say that after we had reported our bill we received endorsements from every bar association of importance in America. We received a very strong letter that I should like to read from the general counsel for the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Joseph Padway, in which he states:

Bill H. R. 6324 dealing with administrative law legislation has had my consideration on behalf of the American Federation of Labor. I have discussed it with the legislative department and with President Green. Mr. Green stated that if in my opinion the bill was advantageous to labor I should so state and that it would receive the support of the American Federation of Labor. It is my opinion that the bill is in many respects beneficial to labor, and it has our support. It appears to us as being fair, just, and most necessary.

In addition to the endorsement of all of these bar associations and the American Federation of Labor, the National Grange has endorsed the bill; as have many business groups throughout America. These groups have studied the problem. They recognize that there is a problem and they feel that the solution thereof lies in the enactment of this bill. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, all these people cannot be wrong. Let me go a step further in this problem.

The Attorney General of the United States, Homer Cummings, recognized that there was a problem, and he made recommendations that a study be made of it. His successor, Frank Murphy, agreeing that there was a problem, had a committee appointed to study the problem. This committee retained as its secretary a young Columbia University professor, and let me say that this committee has not functioned except through this secretary. It has been together on two occasions, and I understand on one of those an attempt was made to pass some sort of resolution condemning this bill, but this the committee refused to do. This secretary has conducted the work of studying this problem, and in this connection let me call your attention to a speech he made before the Lawyers' Guild last year—and I think, Mr. Chairman, this clearly demonstrates the truth of what I said a moment ago, that the opposition to this bill comes from those people who do not approve the solution the Committee on the Judiciary offers for the problem.

What we must carefully and constantly eschew, in my opinion, is the belief that the capacity to govern justly lies only beneath the black robe of the judges and that to them, the wise and good fathers, we must turn hopefully for good guidance through the mazes of the law. That belief, I submit, may do more than merely produce poor government. It may also eventually produce chaos and thus destroy faith in government itself.

From the man who uttered that contemptuous statement comes the opposition to this bill. No one who has made a study of what the bill does or what it is intended to do can oppose it. Let me now just briefly call attention to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. WALTER. I will yield the gentleman some time. I understand the gentleman's opposition to the bill and what occasions it.

Mr. CELLER. The President of the United States is opposed to the bill.

Mr. WALTER. Oh, no; the President of the United States is not opposed to the bill. The President of the United States has been misinformed about this bill, and the position he took was because of the provisions in the bill that the gentleman himself introduced which our committee refused to accept. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield further to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WALTER. No; I decline to yield.

The first section of the bill is the section on definitions. The American Bar Association did not propose a section of definitions. The subcommittee of which I am a member decided that we ought to know definitely just what we were dealing with and we slowly, and I might say laboriously, prepared this section of definitions, every one of which was taken from a decision of the court of last resort in America.

Section 2 is the section with respect to the implementation of the rules, and deals with the quasi legislative power of administrative agencies. The purpose of this section is to remove, if possible, a prolific cause of disputes. In this connection, need I say more than that there are five circuits in the United States which have not yet decided whether or not a written or a verbal contract in a labor case is required. This section is not new, it is not novel, and it does not present any departure from anything that we have known in our Government. We follow statutes that have been tried and found to work and function satisfactorily. In this connection, I found it very interesting to examine the basic statute giving to the administrative agencies the power to promulgate rules. This statute was enacted in 1789, and is the first utterance on the subject. It gives to the agencies the right to promulgate rules in conformity with law. Mr. Chairman, could the founding fathers, could that original Congress have indicated more clearly that it was intended that the rules of these agencies should be tested in the courts in the event that the occasion should ever arise to question whether or not they were acting in conformity with law?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I will yield the gentleman some time. I do not want him to interrupt me now.

Under that section, after a rule has been promulgated, the right to go into the circuit court of appeals is given to any person substantially interested. We do not have to wait for an issue to arise, we do not have to wait for a case to be started in Texas, another one in Maine, and another one in Washington, with the result that each one of three circuits will find themselves in disagreement and our citizens will not know what the law is.

After a public hearing, the administrative agency promulgates its rule for the implementation of the statute and then the test of whether or not that rule is in violation of law or in violation of the Constitution may be applied. Mr. Chairman, is that not carrying out the clearly expressed intent of the First Congress when the first law on this subject was passed? What does "in conformity with law" mean? What does it do? What does that expression provide? A justiciable issue, triable in courts and nowhere else. Section 3 provides for judicial review of the rules and is designed to prevent litigation.

There is some opposition to this section because the right to review can only go to the circuit court of appeals. Certainly we do not want the business of our Government, I may say to my friend from Mississippi, tied up through endless litigation; so the right to review lies in the circuit court of appeals and from that decision there is no further appeal.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. These large holding companies are spread all over the country. A local litigant would have to go a thousand or fifteen hundred miles to a circuit court of appeals.

Mr. WALTER. I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi that anyone substantially interested in the operation of a rule of procedure of an administrative agency is represented in Washington. All of the groups which deal with the Government, as the gentleman well knows, because our offices are filled with people who have axes to grind, have representatives in Washington.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALTER. I do not yield further.

All of these groups have representatives in Washington. Notice is given of the intention to promulgate a rule for the implementation of a statute in section 2. This notice is not actual, it may be constructive, but at least our citizens will know what the rules of the game are before they get into the game. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 7 additional minutes.

Section 4 deals with the quasi judicial powers of the administrative agencies and has as its purposes the adoption of uniform standards of procedure, a formal hearing after negotiations, and the fixing of responsibility for administrative action. Many of our agencies have found that disputes are minimized where there has been set up in the agency a board to review the findings of the examiners who first deal with our citizens. I am not naive enough to believe that when a citizen has a controversy or a matter of business, if you please, before it becomes a controversy with our Government that he ever talks with anyone more important than a $2,500-a-year clerk.

If our citizens can dispose of their business with that clerk without feeling that they have been aggrieved, all right, well and good, they do not have to go to court; but when they find that they have been aggrieved they petition the head of the agency for hearing. An intraagency board of three employers, one of whom is a lawyer, is set up to hear this controversy. That board, under this bill, prepares a complete record, and I would compare that board with a judge who hears a case without a jury. Then that record made up by a formal hearing, notice going out to witnesses, is certified, where the aggrieved citizen has a substantial interest, to the circuit court of appeals, not in the District of Columbia only but in the circuit in which he resides, the circuit in which he has his principal place of business or the circuit in which the controversy arose, in addition to the Circuit Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia, thereby eliminating the necessity for our citizens to come to Washington every time they have been injured through the abuse of power by one of these administrative agencies. This section follows the act of July 1916, as amended by the act of June 7, 1934, 48 Statutes at Large 926. In this connection, it is interesting to note that not one case has gone to court under this statute. Do you not realize that today a citizen, if he has been aggrieved, may have his day in court, but it is through the tortuous, expensive method of injunction. He appeals to the equitable powers of the court on the theory that irreparable damage will be done him. Those of you who are lawyers in this House—and there are many who have reached the top in your profession—realize that there is a hearing in the District Court for the District of Columbia. From the decision of that court there is an appeal to the circuit court of appeals on the application for an injunction.

This measure eliminates the hearing de novo because the record that is prepared on the appeal to the board set up in the agency is certified to the circuit court of appeals, and the circuit court of appeals passes on that record just as every appellate court in America passes on the record that is prepared in a trial before a judge without a jury.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. DISNEY. What about the intervention by an interested party?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; a party who has a substantial interest and who can demonstrate to the court his interest in the controversy may petition the court for leave to intervene. That is not new. We have seen that happen right along, through petition to intervene as amicus curiae.

Mr. DISNEY. But how about intervening in the board that is set up in the department?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; he may do that.

Mr. DISNEY. Is there a provision in the bill for that?

Mr. WALTER. Yes. The bill provides, "Any person having a substantial interest in the controversy shall have the right to intervene therein."

Mr. Chairman, in studying this bill it was very interesting to learn that in two departments of our Government where similar review provisions exist in the laws that we passed, namely, the Pure Food and Cosmetcs Act and the Civil Aeronautics Act, in which there were similar provisions for appeal, not one single case has gone to the courts. I asked one of the men connected with one of those agencies, and I may say he was at the top, why it was. He said, "Well, Congressman, I think our decisions are better because we are afraid that if we make a mistake there will be another branch of our Government overrule us." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, after all are not the judges in our courts of original jurisdiction as good as they are because they do not want another court to reverse them? Are not their decisions as nearly in conformity with the law as they are because they fear the possibility of reversal? I think it is very significant that in the two agencies to which I referred there has not been a single appeal taken.

Section 5 provides for judicial review of decisions or orders of administrative agencies. This section follows the act of June 1936 (49 Stat. 1750).

There is a serious question as to how far the courts may go in setting aside the decisions of any agency. The bill provides seven grounds for the reversal of a decision of an agency.

The first ground is that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous. This is the rule of the Supreme Court of the United States, that applies when a circuit court passes on the judgment of a judge trying a case without a jury.

The second ground for reversal is that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence. That is part of the decision and the rule that is laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Consolidated Edison case.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. WALTER. No; I will yield in just a moment. Let me state in a word what the Supreme Court has said substantial evidence is:

> It is more than a mere scintilla. It means such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that applying this rule to any administrative agency is imposing any hardship on that agency. I shall not go into the many cases of abuse of power that have been called to my attention because I do not have time and the rule does not provide enough time to do so.

In closing, may I say that the measure we are considering has been given the most careful thought and study, and I sincerely trust that you will support it. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is about as important a bill as we will have before us this session. I am very much in favor of it. I shall not argue it, however, pro and con, but I should like to devote the short time I have to an explanation of the bill and the manner in which it works. I shall be pleased, however, to yield at any time for questions about any detail of the actual operation of the bill.

May I say at the beginning, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated, that this bill has received for several years very careful consideration by many people both in and out of Congress. I believe that in his efforts to write a satisfactory bill and in bringing it here on the floor of the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] has done a great service for the country.

Briefly, this is the way the bill would operate. We, of course, have under our Constitution a Government of three branches. We have the legislative branch to make the law, an executive branch to administer the law, and a judicial branch to interpret the law. In the early days of the country it was easy to maintain this distinction, but as our economic life became complex we found that Congress could not legislate in all the detail that would be required in many cases. A good example is that of rate making. Obviously, Congress could not legislate every rate throughout the country, so we laid down a general formula and set up a tribunal which has authority under our guidance to legislate further, so to speak, by making rules and regulations to implement the law.

Since the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission we have established many tribunals exercising legislative, executive, and judicial powers; in fact, we now have some 130 of these tribunals. The purpose of this bill is to regulate them and bring their activities under the Constitution and under those principles of due process which are binding on us and on the courts.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Perhaps I should have asked this question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but he seemed to be a little excited. I am asking this question purely for information and not in an argumentative sense. I stated during the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia that I had said I was not going to vote either for this bill or against it. However, I should like to know what it means and what it would do, and some of the Members of the Committee on the Judiciary should know this.

Suppose the Interstate Commerce Commission were not exempted from the operation of this bill, or the Federal Trade Commission were not exempted, what would be the situation with respect to the application of this bill to their rules and regulations and decisions, and what would be the difference between such a situation and the situation that exists under the law as it now is?

Mr. GWYNNE. I may say to the gentleman that, as far as I am concerned, I see no reason why the Federal Trade Commission should not be under the bill. However, the net result would be the same. There is no reason why the Interstate Commerce Commission should be under the bill. In the years that the Interstate Commerce Commission has been operating, the Congress, the Commission, and the courts have worked out for that institution substantially the same procedure, the same course of operation, that we lay down here for other organizations.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman believes, then, that if the Interstate Commerce Commission were not exempted from the operation of this bill there would be no difference in the way it would operate as compared to the way it operates now?

Mr. GWYNNE. No; I do not mean to say that. As a matter of fact, one difference is that in connection with many cases that are appealable or are appealed from the Interstate Commerce Commission and eventually get to the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court in many instances may exercise its own judgment in determining the facts. Under this bill we limit the appeals, and the appellate court is allowed to reverse a decision only if the finding of the tribunal is not sustained by substantial evidence. What I am getting at is that this bill provides, first of all, for regulation of the legislative matters that we turn over to these tribunals.

Mr. RAYBURN. There is no agency of the Government that has more legislative authority than the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is true.

Mr. RAYBURN. There is nothing the Interstate Commerce Commission does that could not be done by the House of Representatives and the Senate if they had the expert knowledge and the time to do it.

Mr. GWYNNE. As far as the legislative part of the work is concerned.

Mr. RAYBURN. We realized and recognized that the Congress could not do that work. I am still a little cloudy, although I appreciate the statement of the gentleman, as to just what would be the difference if this law applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission and if it did not apply.

Mr. GWYNNE. It is true that the Interstate Commerce Commission establishes different rates in accordance with the formula laid down by the Congress; at least, that is my understanding of one function of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It is true we did not provide for the Interstate Commerce Commission any supercommittee or any court that would revise their legislative decisions, as we have done for other tribunals in this bill. I do not know whether I make myself clear or not, but in order to make clear at least what the bill does, let me point out that the first part of the bill, particularly section 2, has to do only with the legislative function of these tribunals, and this is the way it will work. For example, we pass a wage and hour law, a general formula regulating wages and hours throughout the country. We then create an administrative tribunal to further legislate; I mean, to amplify the law, to make rules and regulations applying them to specific cases. Now, in the past we have found that these tribunals become a law unto themselves and have not made their rules and regulations in accordance with the formula that we had set out for them.

In other words, what we do in this bill, in section 2, is this. When we pass these great and important laws we do very little more than lay down a sort of blueprint and specifications, and we turn them over to some tribunal to build a building in accordance with the specifications we lay down. Now, because many times we have specified a house and the tribunal has built a chicken coop, we now propose, in section 2, to provide for a supervising architect, which will be the Circuit Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and all the appeal that is provided for in section 2 has to do with the scheme whereby Congress hopes to regulate the legislative functions of these tribunals.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. COX. You undertake, as I understand it, to provide in your bill for uniformity in procedure and for uniformity in court review. Is that correct?

Mr. GWYNNE. That is right; in other words, we should bear in mind there are two types of appeals provided for here. The first has to do entirely, not with judicial matters, but with appeals from these rules and regulations. The Wage and Hour Division, for example, when they get the law from us, before they start out to enforce it, make certain rules and regulations. Now, if some interested party says that a rule or regulation is not in accordance with the law that Congress passed, they may appeal to the circuit court of appeals of the district. We could not, as has been suggested, provide for an appeal to any other circuit court of appeals, because that is not a case or a controversy under the Constitution. The decision that will be made by the circuit court of appeals will be purely an advisory opinion and will not be binding necessarily in some case that comes up between some actual litigant and some agency of the Government.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. You do not in your bill, as I understand it, undertake to prescribe any rule different from that already governing the courts of review in the review of questions of law and of fact in the decisions of these administrative agencies. You simply provide, in addition to the right of review already existing in the courts under the laws already passed, the right of review of orders which are in the nature of legislative acts.

Mr. GWYNNE. Yes; that is provided for in section 5.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Is not one purpose of this act to guarantee, insofar as we can, that the objectives contemplated by an act of Congress will be carried out rather than have the Board, as was the case in respect of the National Labor Relations Board, adopt another objective? The Congress intended collective bargaining, for instance, but the National Labor Relations Board conceived it to be its duty arbitrarily to organize labor throughout the country and set about the objective of organizing labor rather than presenting a forum whereby labor could organize itself.

Mr. GWYNNE. The gentleman is exactly right. That is exactly the purpose of the section.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I want to get my own mind clear on this point. Here is the Wage and Hour Division which we create, and the first thing which they must do is to pass a rule.

Mr. GWYNNE. Within 1 year they must make rules.

Mr. BULWINKLE. After they pass a rule, it is published for 10 days in the Federal Register. Is that correct?

Mr. GWYNNE. That is right.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Then any person who is aggrieved or has a substantial interest in the matter can attack that rule in the Wage and Hour Division itself. Is not that correct; within 30 days after the rule is published?

Mr. GWYNNE. No; the gentleman does not have it exactly correct. After the law is passed, it is then turned over to the Wage and Hour Division, and the Wage and Hour Division then must give notice that they intend to adopt rules and regulations.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Then, after they adopt them, within 30 days thereafter, anybody can come in.

Mr. GWYNNE. After any rule is adopted by the Wage and Hour Division it must be published in the Register. Within 30 days thereafter any person interested may appeal from the rule to the circuit court of appeals. His appeal is very limited. He can appeal and get the rule declared invalid only if he can show that it is a violation of the Constitution and is contrary to the statute, or has not been adopted after notice and hearing.

Mr. BULWINKLE. How long will it take from the time that rule is adopted until it is heard in the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. GWYNNE. There is a provision in the bill, at some place——

Mr. BULWINKLE. Oh, from the gentleman's knowledge. The gentleman helped in all of these.

Mr. GWYNNE. Of course there is a provision in the bill that these appeals shall be given precedence.

Mr. BULWINKLE. When would they get there? In 6 months or 8 months or 12 months?

Mr. GWYNNE. Oh, we hope the thing would be expedited. At the present time as a matter of fact there is no appeal of this character. Here is what we hope: We hope by getting some judicial review of the rule as laid down that it will expedite the matter; otherwise all over the country they will be challenging it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman knows that by the time you take this up that 12 months will have elapsed before it will get through the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. GWYNNE. Let me say this to the gentleman. There are many activities of Government that the courts will never mix up in. Nothing we can do will allow the court to take any part in deciding them. In practically all of these laws, however, there is at the present time a way to get them in the courts. You can do it by injunction, by mandamus, a much slower and more expensive and unjust method than the one that we provide here.

Mr. BULWINKLE. All right. We have got through the circuit court of appeals after an indefinite time.

Mr. GWYNNE. Oh, no; not an indefinite time. All right, we are through; I admit that.

Mr. BULWINKLE. We come down to the rule and it is promulgated as to a certain individual in the Wage and Hour Division.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is right.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Then it goes from that on up to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. GWYNNE. Oh, no. That is the end of it. No appeal can be taken from the decision on the rule. I wonder if I can explain it to the gentleman. I do not want to yield any more. If the general rule, the legislative rule, is upheld by the circuit court of appeals, that ends the matter. The administrator of the tribunal goes out and begins to enforce the law. He gets into a dispute with some citizen and that citizen then has a hearing in the tribunal as provided in section 4 of the law.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is correct.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is a judicial matter. That is a specific case. A ruling is made by the tribunal in accordance with the machinery set down here, and the litigant is displeased with the ruling. He then has a right to appeal from the specific and definite ruling to the Circuit Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia or of his own district.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. In the case of holding companies there would be no end to it, would there?

Mr. GWYNNE. I cannot agree with that.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to interject a remark in his statement?

Mr. GWYNNE. Yes.

Mr. COX. The gentleman well recognizes the fact that through the evolutionary process running on through the centuries, our American jurisprudence has been developed and that the movement has always been from the rule of discretion to a rule of law.

Mr. GWYNNE. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COX. And you are simply undertaking to bring down to a certain extent the exaggerated rule of discretion which has been established through these grants made by Congress to these administrative heads, and what you are seeking to substitute is the general rule of law.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SATTERFIELD].

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the pending measure, designed to provide expeditious settlement of disputes between citizens and the Government and boards and bureaus, is in my judgment one of the most important measures to come before the Congress at this session. I do not often ask the privilege of speaking, but I have given much thought to this matter, and I shall be very grateful if you will grant me your indulgence.

A few years ago the great questions of public law dealt with the scope of legislative power. How far the State legislatures could go in regulating industry, price fixing, and taxation were the issues of the day. Subsequent court decisions have set up certain bounds within which the law-making arm of the Government may now constitutionally venture. The question today is quite different. It poses the problem of administrative procedure. The few decisions which the highest court of the land has thus far made in these matters of procedure have stimulated an astounding public interest in a matter so technical.

Those who advocate governmental regulation by the more than 130 administrative agencies in this country sound a warning to the champions of an independent judiciary. They say, beware of the use of the courts as instruments to render nugatory those administrative agencies with which society is seeking to evolve an answer to the many complicated problems facing us today.

With equal sincerity a vast number of Americans observing the steady transformation of this Government from one of law to a government by men, sound a warning against the approach to administrative absolutism.

No thoughtful student of government can escape the conclusion that whether we like it or not, it is true that governmental regulation has intervened in our efforts to solve social and economic problems of modern society. It is equally true that such regulations are not new. The law and its administration in ancient days depended upon its promulgation, interpretation, and administration on the uncontrolled will of the rulers. Those primitive governments provided the pattern for Hitler and Stalin. They were totalitarian in every sense of that word.

I think that most of us are familiar with the historical background of those early governments. We know that through the centuries there was gradually evolved a way to check the absolutism of early rulers. The solution of that problem was judicial review, and a review in forums utterly and completely independent of administrative will.

Slowly through the centuries there emerged the basic principle that the rights, liberty, and privileges of men were based on law and not on the discretion of any man or group of men. This fundamental did not come to us in a day. It required many years, dethroned rulers, severe wars, and sacrifices to prepare for that day, a hundred and fifty years ago, when a small group of Americans assembled in Philadelphia to create a new republic in the western world. From Roman imperialism to Philadelphia in 1787 was a long time. It requires a large canvas to portray this panorama.

Undoubtedly the triumphant march of democracy, universally vindicated at the turn of the century, is on trial today, and the question, "What shall we do with the vexing problem of administrative law?" has a direct bearing on what we shall do with our present form of government, for it is becoming increasingly apparent that government by committees, boards, bureaus, and commissions will, if unchecked and uncontrolled, destroy the republican conception of government.

Frequently, Mr. Chairman, well-wishers and enthusiastic friends, solicitous of those of us who serve as Representatives in the Congress of the United States, lament the fact it is a requirement that Congressmen must be elected by their constituents every 2 years. It is a temptation to agree, but it is a duty instead, it seems to me, to explain the wisdom of that requirement. It was the opinion of the founding fathers that membership in this great body should be close to the heartbeats of the people and never beyond recall of those whom they serve. It is one of the wisest provisions in the Constitution. Entrusted with the power to enact laws, which they as good citizens must obey, it is both just and wise that the right to recall any Member of this body to civilian life be positive and prompt. If laws are to be made by boards or commissions composed of people who are not elected, it is obvious that these persons are beyond the control, leverage, and influence of the people. The result is inescapable, they are the masters and not the servants.

Prior to the War between the States in three instances the Congress conferred jurisdiction on the Federal courts to review administrative decisions on both the law and the facts. But Appomattox marked the turning point. The aftermath of that great conflict produced for at least those of us who live in the South a true picture of administrative processes unbridled, and run riot. During the War between the States the Federal Government, fighting for its existence, enlarged its conception of Federal power, and after the surrender you will find that the Congress, wittingly or unwittingly, embraced the Hamiltonian theory. Money was appropriated when no authority existed in the Constitution, and the Congress set up authorization for a bureau to supervise the spending of it. That was the period which marked the genesis of present-day bureaucracy and its attendant evils.

Perhaps we shall never attain the ideal method of making decisions affecting the rights of people. The courts of the land are not perfect, but the fact that those who fancy themselves aggrieved may appeal to them is a custom and a right that cannot be dispensed with in a democracy. If the legislative arm of the Government must delegate to the various administrative departments the power to promulgate rules which have the full force and effect of law, if there is no escape, due to the multiplicity of social and economic problems, from such a course, a way must be found to induce faith and confidence in these tribunals. When their pronouncements become absolute, necessarily they lose caste and invite suspicion. President Buchanan, when a Member of the House and serving as one of the greatest chairmen of the House Judiciary Committee, said:

> Next to the importance of doing justice is the belief that justice is being done.

I have striven to inform myself with the arguments and contentions of those who advocate the view that nothing should be done to disturb the present system of administrative procedure. I think I have read everything reflecting that view. Its proponents take the position that advance in the system of administrative procedure will come only through an understanding of the individual units in our Government. They seem to feel that people resent administrative justice because it is something new, that lawyers resent the loss of a jurisdiction that heretofore was in the courts, and that criticism of the system is a natural byproduct of that resentment. I note that Mr. James M. Landis believes that our thinking has been a little too complacent. He points out a number of our errors in thinking with reference to this subject. He says, in a remarkable statement:

> One is our accepted belief that the so-called adversary method is the only method of administering justice. In your administrative agencies there is a tendency again and again to get away from the purely adversary means of administering justice, and, because you get away from that method of administering justice, certain of the accepted maxims that are applicable to the adversary system have very little play in this field.

So long as there are issues of fact to be determined, and the law applicable thereto to be interpreted, litigants who seek a decision in their controversies must necessarily appear as adversaries. To imagine that disagreeing citizens can submerge their differences to the extent of losing their identity as adversaries in a legal squabble is to indulge in some very wishful thinking, and to vision a Utopia which I fear we shall never attain.

In the hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate, Dean Roscoe Pound had this to say:

> There is a real struggle going on, as near as I can make out, in the English-speaking world, between those who want to preserve the idea that these quasi-judicial determinations must be conducted in accordance with due process of law, with an elementary idea of justice and fairness, and those who favor what I call administrative absolutism. Some of the English courts have been endeavoring to stand up against a doctrine that administrative law does not mean a body of legal administrative actions, but means whatever is done officially. A teacher of law with a good deal of ability has said that law is whatever is done officially. That doctrine is one that is very much urged in some parts of Europe.
> Karl Marx had the idea that in a development of the social system whereby property was abolished you would not need any law and, therefore, there was going to be a movement away from law and a substitution of the immediate administrative determination of anything that was involved in controversy.

But, say the proponents of the present system, these administrative agencies are daily grinding out thousands of cases, and to require judicial review is to provide more grist than the judiciary can grind. We are told that the present procedure is not new, but the fact is, except in a few instances, the system now becoming so universal is new enough in America to cause thoughtful citizens to regard it as a perilous innovation. Its friends proclaim its efficiency. In a spirit which to me typifies a defeatism, they call attention to the enormity of issues constantly arising within the departments of the Government, issues begging a speedy decision. These gentlemen are dangerously close to the theory that method is of no consequence. Surely the membership of this House will agree that the most dangerous and ultimately disastrous idea that can lodge within the human mind is that the end justifies the means. As matters now stand we witness the current phenomena of many citizens who are ordinarily thoughtful following the line of least resistance in the conduct of the affairs of their Government. I am apprehensive that with the passage of time people are prone to forget ancient landmarks, and how important it is for us to preserve them.

The pending measure requires every Federal administrative agency to implement by rules and regulations statutes administered or enforced by it. All rules except in public emergencies must be adopted after public notice and public hearings, and they become effective upon publication in the Federal Register. The bill further provides that no rule may be held invalid except for conflict with the Constitution or statutes of the United States, or except if adopted without the public hearings provided therefor. It will be observed that the flexibility of the rule-making power is preserved and that rules may be changed or supplemented at any time, but only after public notice and hearings, or in an emergency proclaimed by the President of the United States. Under this proposed act a citizen may appeal to an intra-agency board consisting of three members, before whom he shall have a full and fair hearing, and with the right of judicial review of the findings of that tribunal. There are other provisions in the bill which deal with the necessary mechanics to make workable the broad purposes which I have just mentioned. The Judiciary Committee of the House has given long and conscientious study to the bill and favorably recommends it.

In the administration of law are the requirements that there shall be a day of fair hearing by impartial officials; that the decision when rendered shall be based on the law and the facts, and by no chance upon the whim or caprice of the deciding official. Furthermore, that the record upon which that decision is based be preserved, and in order to assure a full observance of constitutional rights there must be in the event of complaint a check over the administrative processes by an independent branch of the Government, the judiciary.

In discussing this matter recently a gentleman stated to me that judicial review meant no more nor less than substituting judicial discretion for administrative discretion. A proper answer to that observation is plain. If such a view is correct, then the time-honored and proven virtue of the separation of the judiciary, legislative, and executive branches of the Government has become a shibboleth.

It is undoubtedly true that grievances growing out of the enforcement of rules and regulations promulgated by the departments of the Government should first be tried out and examined by attachés of the departments. Some splendid work has been done in the administrative posts, and, on the other hand, the rights of individuals have not been so zealously guarded by others in instances painful to recount. No department in the Government has made a finer record for impartiality in its decisions than the Interstate Commerce Commission. Likewise is this true with the Federal Trade Commission. Any aggrieved party has the absolute, unconditional right to appeal from any decision of the Federal Trade Commission to any circuit court of appeals in which he is located or doing business. During the nearly 25 years' existence of the Federal Trade Commission no court has ever criticized its procedure or intimated that any respondent had not had a full and fair hearing. Its procedure has been many times approved and commended by the Supreme Court and various United States circuit courts of appeals. It would be harsh to say that the threat of judicial review had been a contributing factor. Yet students of the law know that there is a restrainful influence and a guiding hand in the wise provision for appeals. The certainty of appeal has stirred many a lower court to greater effort for lurking in the very thought of appeal is the fear of reversal, and the pride which comes with affirmation. If then these gentlemen of the departments of the Government are to be triers of fact and law, let us no longer call them hearing officers or characterize them as quasi-judicial officers, for of the truth they are judges. As such I have an abiding conviction that when the right of judicial review is made part and parcel of procedure before them they will be no less susceptible to pride in the affirmation of their decisions than other members of the judiciary.

It is my firm conviction that the unchecked continuance along our present course will inevitably lead us into great trouble. Without a full hearing, without a written record setting forth the findings of fact, without a right to judicial review too much stress and strain is placed upon our citizens who have learned through centuries of experience that these things are indispensable to the orderly adjudication of controversies. If ways are found to deprive the courts of their jurisdiction of controversies between Federal administrators and the individual, or if Congress should become sufficiently subservient to permit it we shall attain administrative absolutism fully and completely.

I sincerely trust that those of us who come from Virginia will never forget that Thomas Jefferson excoriated uncontrolled executive and administrative power, and that our own James Madison strove diligently so to allocate the governmental powers between the Federal Government and the separate States, and to subdivide Federal powers further between the legislative, judicial, and the executive that forever the people of this country would have ample protection in their conflicts with officialdom. Perhaps Mr. Madison envisioned the developments of our day when he said—

> In framing a government, designed for the rule of men over men, the great difficulty lies in this: You must first enable the government to control the governed and then oblige it to control itself.

To those who are blind followers after speed and efficiency in a democracy, I refer them to the admonitions of Patrick Henry before the Virginia Convention in June of 1788, when he said—

> You are not to enquire how your trade may be increased nor how you are to become a great and powerful people, but how your liberties can be secured; for liberty ought to be the direct end of your Government.

To those who are disciples of the Hamiltonian philosophy of a great centralized government at Washington I give them the prophetic words of that great Virginian delivered on the same occasion, when he said—

> If you make the citizens of this country agree to become subjects of one great consolidated empire of America, your Government will not have sufficient energy to keep them together; such a government is incompatible with the genius of republicanism. There will be no check, no real balances, in this government.

The provisions of the pending measure will give protection to citizens and the Government in disputes before governmental agencies. If enacted it will, in my judgment, lead administrative law in the direction of orderly processes, within the fundamental concepts of the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, what has been said by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SATTERFIELD] leaves very little, if anything, open to argument. However, an illustration or two from some of the decisions of the Board might give a practical slant to what the gentleman has just said.

It is doubtful if there are more than a half-dozen Members of this House who have not become indignant at the treatment they have received when attempting to take up for some of their constituents some of the questions which they have brought here to Washington. It is about time that we in Congress assert our independence of the departments in Washington.

We all know the theory of our Government—the three departments; but, unfortunately, the Congress has delegated much of its power to those independent agencies and boards, and, unfortunately, the courts in recent months in two decisions, at least, have shirked their responsibilities. When one of these boards denied to an employer and to employees the right to carry on their business, the employer the right to sell merchandise, and the employee the right to sell his services, the Supreme Court of the United States, in those two cases, one the longshoremen's case, the case of the employee, the other the fur workers' case here in the district court, quite frankly, and very plainly, said that although the ruling of the Board, under the law under consideration, destroyed the employer's business and deprived the employee of the right to sell his services, his toil, the court could not, or at least the court would not, do anything for him, and that the remedy was with Congress. So here we are. Here is an opportunity to give those who suffer from the rulings of these boards a remedy.

I think most of us would be astounded to learn that one of these boards has said that its decisions might be based upon rumor and hearsay; that, in determining an issue where your rights or my rights are involved, the Board might take into consideration rumor and hearsay. What an absurd proposition, and yet one of the courts has said—Third Circuit Court of Appeals, in the case of Union Drawn Steel Co. and Republic Steel Corporation against N. L. R. B., decided January 20, 1940—that, while the decision of the Board may not be based entirely upon rumor and hearsay, nevertheless rumor and hearsay might be considered.

It may be that the courts have reached the conclusion, because of the wide grants of power by Congress to these administrative boards, that Congress intends that the decisions of the National Labor Relations Board on practically every question of procedure, including that of the admissibility of evidence, is final.

One court at least has, by its decisions, called attention to the danger. In a case where the Board established a rule that litigants wanting subpenas should make application to Washington, the court condemned the practice. Among other things, the court said:

It is further argued by the Board that petitioner's complaint is without merit because there is no showing that evidence favorable to it was excluded. This argument begs the question. We are not now considering the extent to which petitioner was prejudiced, but whether it was, by such procedure, deprived of a substantial right or whether the procedure employed placed it at a disadvantage in contrast with its opponent. It is also argued that the rule is reasonable because petitioner, under section 10 (e) of the act, has a right to make application to this court to adduce additional evidence. This argument also is not tenable. Such provision has no bearing upon what we regard as an unreasonable and unfair restriction upon petitioner's right to the process of subpena. (Inland Steel Co. v. N. L. R. B., decided by the Circuit Court of Ap- in Union Pacific R. Co. v. Syas (246 Fed. 561, p. 568):

Holding that the Board had denied a party to the action a fair trial, the court further said:

The act authorizes the Board to enter an order upon a complaint alleging unfair labor practices, only after a "hearing." This must mean a trial by a tribunal free from bias and prejudice and imbued with the desire to accord to the parties equal consideration. There is perhaps no more important right to which litigants are entitled than that they be given such a trial. Its impairment, ipso facto, brings the court, and administrative bodies as well, into public disrepute and destroys the esteem and confidence which they have enjoyed so generally. Time and experience have demonstrated that the public, as well as litigants, will tolerate the honest mistakes of those who pass judgment, but not the biased acts of those who would deprive litigants of a fair and impartial trial. Foremost among the responsibilities imposed upon a reviewing court, is to make sure that this foundation of our judicial system be not undermined.

That a trial by a biased judge is not in conformity with due process is sustained by the authorities. In Tumey v. Ohio (273 U. S. 510, 535) the court said:

"No matter what the evidence was against him, he had the right to have an impartial judge."

The court, in Jordan v. Massachusetts (225 U. S. 167, 176), said:

"Due process implies a tribunal both impartial and mentally competent to afford a hearing."

The principle is aptly stated in People v. Naimark (154 App. Div. 760; 139 N. Y. Supp. 418, 420), where it is said:

"The first idea in the administration of justice * * * is that a judge must necessarily be free from all bias and partiality. He cannot be both judge and party, arbiter and advocate in the same cause. Mankind are so agreed in this principle that any departure from it shocks their common sense and sentiment of justice."

And the fact that the court's judgment may be justified on the merits does not obviate the requirement of a fair trial. As was said in Union Pacific R. Co. v. Syas (246 Fed. 561, p. 568):

"But no judgment is just if not obtained by due process of law; otherwise courts could enter judgments without trial."

The recognition of the principle is as essential in proceedings before administrative agencies as it is before courts. As was said in Ohio Bell Telephone Co. v. Commission (301 U. S. 292, p. 304):

"Indeed, much that they do within the realm of administrative discretion is exempt from supervision if those restraints have been obeyed. All the more insistent is the need, when power has been bestowed so freely, that the 'inexorable safeguard' (citing case) of a fair and open hearing be maintained in its integrity. (Citing cases.) The right to such a hearing is one of 'the rudiments of fair play' (citing case) assured to every litigant by the fourteenth amendment as a minimal requirement. (Citing cases.) There can be no compromise on the footing of convenience or expediency, or because of a natural desire to be rid of harassing delay, when that minimal requirement has been neglected or ignored."

The rule is again clearly stated in Morgan v. United States (304 U. S. 1, 14).

The Board argues that even though the criticism directed at the trial examiner be justified, yet the order should not be set aside because petitioner has failed to prove that its case was prejudiced or that any evidence favorable to it was kept from the record. It is further argued that the transfer of the proceedings to the Board with no intermediate report on the part of the examiner is conclusive against petitioner. We are not impressed with either of these arguments. To say that petitioner was not prejudiced because of the unfair and biased manner in which the case was tried by the trial examiner is purely a matter of speculation.

The foregoing are sufficient to show the necessity of a fair and impartial trial and we should now, while we have the opportunity, pass this act, compelling these independent agencies to adhere to the principles laid down in our Constitution and to the rules for the trial and settlement of controverted matters, which have been demonstrated to be absoluely necessary if justice is to prevail.

So far my remarks have been addressed to the procedure which should be followed by administrative agencies. However, the necessity of an unbiased, of an impartial tribunal was referred to in two of the Supreme Court decisions just cited.

Shortly, we shall have an opportunity to amend one of the acts which we passed—the N. L. R. A.—in a manner which will insure to those who fall within the operation of that act a fair and an impartial board.

The minority report, as supplemented, which I filed to H. R. 9195 and the majority report filed by the Smith investigating committee, furnish the evidence which justifies the conclusion that the National Labor Relations Board is not the kind of a tribunal to which every American citizen who may fall under its jurisdiction is entitled. [Applause.]

LABOR BOARD WILL BE ABOLISHED IF A. F. OF L. DEMANDS IT—OTHERWISE LEWIS COLLECTS ANOTHER INSTALLMENT ON HIS $470,000 CONTRIBUTION TO THE NEW DEAL CAMPAIGN FUND

A few weeks ago, John L. Lewis shook the New Deal political plum tree with his blast that, if the administration did not behave itself and come across, he would organize a third party, which everyone knew meant the defeat of the President's intention to control and finish his job of remaking this Government during the next 4 years. He jarred loose his plum—the retention of his friends, Smith and Madden, with the hundreds of C. I. O. allies, to administer the N. L. R. A.

Yesterday, at Flint, according to the New York Times, William Green, president of the A. F. of L., referring to Lewis, said:

I charge that this man, suffering from delusions of grandeur, is secretly desirous of becoming the dictator of the United States of America.

He charged that Lewis was "playing the game of the Communist Party." He charged him with "stirring up discontent among the underprivileged groups" and then declared:

I challenge him to explain why he is threatening to marshal these groups into a third party unless he hopes to ride into power as the dictator of America with their support.

More than a dozen times on the floor of this House and elsewhere, I have charged, and indeed C. I. O. witnesses before the Labor Committee admitted, that the object of the C. I. O. was to establish a president of labor. One big national union, with John L. Lewis as the boss.

Whether Lewis desires to become President of the United States, as charged by Green, or merely president of labor, as I have charged, his threats to establish a new party have borne ample fruit.

You may recall that he has frequently charged the President with failing to pay by political favors for the $470,000 campaign contribution his United Mine Workers made in 1936. Many of us believe the President has already overpaid him. Lewis thinks otherwise.

In any event, his latest roaring has so frightened the President that he has forced the A. F. of L. to soft-pedal its demand for the abolition of the National Labor Relations Board.

The President knows, as well as anyone, that the National Labor Relations Board is a festering blot upon his administration; that the people are fully aware that it has been biased, prejudiced, arbitrary, and unjust. The President, as well as the country, knows that it has been roundly and soundly condemned by William Green and by the A. F. of L. Of it Green and his organization have made the following statements:

From the report of the committee on resolutions of the fifty-eighth American Federation of Labor annual convention (1938) (p. 344 of report of proceedings):

"In controversies between A. F. of L. unions and C. I. O. unions the C. I. O. unions have been awarded favorable decisions, not on the merits, but upon preconceived economic predilections of the members of the Board. There is a manifest purpose on the part of the Board to change the historical structure of our national and international unions and in effecting such change to destroy our unions.

"Your committee is of the opinion that the Board has misconceived the purpose of the act; it has perverted the spirit and intent of the law, and instead of administering the act so as to promote peace in industrial relations its method of administration has promoted strife.

"Although the act contains fundamental guaranties of the rights of self-organization by workers which the American Federation of Labor has fostered, the Board has given secondary consideration to these guaranties. Its primary consideration has been directed toward unwarranted assumption of great powers, reaching out and grasping for more and more jurisdiction, until the rights and privileges of free trade-unions have been invaded, usurped, and denied."

From the report of the committee on resolutions of the Fifty-ninth American Federation of Labor Annual Convention (1939) (p. 481 of the report of proceedings):

"Because of a perverted construction of provisions in the act and an improper administration of it by the Board, the fundamental rights referred to have been weakened and in some respects destroyed. Because of bias on the part of certain members of the Board and its personnel, the American Federation of Labor and its affiliates have been made the victims of maladministration." (American Federation of Labor, International Longshoremen's Association and Pacific Coast District International Longshoremen's Association, No. 38, v. N. L. R. B., 103 Fed. (2d) 933 (Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; decided on Feb. 27, 1939); affirmed by Supreme Court on January 2, 1940.)

From the address of President William Green of the American Federation of Labor at the fifty-eighth (1938) Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor (pp. 11–12 of the report of the proceedings):

"We are not opposed to the national labor relations law. The American Federation of Labor participated in the formation of that act.

* * * * * * *

"What we object to is the administration of the law. It is badly administered. It is not administered in accordance with the spirit and the letter of the law. What we wish and what we demand is that a judicial-minded body, keenly conscious of its responsibilities, impartial in its attitude, shall administer this law and apply it without fear or favor to all groups of organized workers.

"But our complaint is this, that the National Labor Relations Board, in the administration of the act, has become the ally of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and we won't stand for that. No Government agency possesses the right to substitute its own peculiar economic philosophy for the plain provisions of an act, nor can it nor should it be permitted to be influenced in the administration of the law by its members' own peculiar ideas."

Report of proceedings of Fifty-eighth American Federation of Labor Annual Convention (1938) (p. 12):

"We want to be free American laboring men, we demand that we be free—free to work out our own problems. We resent governmental control and governmental dictation. We want to organize, free from governmental control and governmental administration, and it is because we believe the Board is exceeding its authority, covering a field never intended to be covered by the act, that we protest against the administration of the act."

From summary of report of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, Fifty-eighth Annual Convention (1938) (p. 62 of the report of proceedings):

"We found it necessary also to take issue with the philosophy and practice of two of the members of the National Labor Relations Board and to protest against their prejudicial attitude toward the American Federation of Labor and their undisguised attempts to foster the cause of the Congress of Industrial Organizations in rendering decisions on cases before them."

Page 133: "It is with deep regret that frankness impels us to report to you that the National Labor Relations Board has administered the act contrary to its letter, spirit, and intent, with manifest bias and prejudice against the American Federation of Labor and in favor of dual and rival organizations. Our resentment has been aroused and your officers have publicly and officially in most vigorous terms condemned this unholy alliance between a Government agency exercising quasi-judicial jurisdiction and the Congress of Industrial Organizations."

Page 134: "That a three-man board, composed of men with no direct labor experience, should undertake to shape the form and structure of our labor movement through decisions clothed with judicial authority aroused among our unions a growing feeling of apprehension and indignation.

"Since the decisions of the Supreme Court of April 12, 1937, the Board has abandoned whatever restraint it imposed upon itself prior to this date and has brazenly and by official acts declared itself as a proponent of the Congress of Industrial Organizations fostering its interests and by the effect of its decrees recruited membership for the Congress of Industrial Organizations."

Page 135: "Our suggestions for caution have gone unheeded. The administration of the act has not been in competent and impartial hands. On the contrary, flagrant bias and prejudice exist on the part of the members of the Board, as is evidenced by decisions which attempt to undermine and destroy the American Federation of Labor unions."

"1. The Board has thwarted the intent of Congress in determining what shall constitute an appropriate unit for the purpose of collective bargaining.

"2. The Board has by its decisions determined that craft unions or other labor unions of long standing and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor have no right to free choice and self-organization. * * *

* * * * * * *

"4. The pronouncements of the Board respecting the proper unit disclose the determination on the part of the Board to comply with the contentions and demands of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and to favor Congress of Industrial Organizations unions in an effort to destroy American Federation of Labor unions * * *."

Page 136: "7. Lawyers and personnel of the regional labor boards have personal relationships with Congress of Industrial Organizations officials and have frequently advised and guided them in pending controversies with American Federation of Labor unions.

"8. The National Labor Relations Board has in many cases built up a straw man by the use of the word 'favoritism' by the employer, as a result of which, it has violated the sanctity of contractual obligations between employers and American Federation of Labor unions, has invalidated contracts, and virtually disestablished existing American Federation of Labor unions.

"9. The Board has instituted investigations and hearings at the request of small minorities of Congress of Industrial Organizations members for the purpose of assisting the Congress of Industrial Organizations in disrupting existing relations between the employers and American Federation of Labor unions."

Pages 137–138: "When American Federation of Labor unions complained respecting outrageous conduct which would affect a Congress of Industrial Organizations favorable election—conduct amounting to bribery of voters—the Board has refused to grant even a hearing on the matter, much less set aside the election. * * *

"By virtue of its decisions the Board has, by implication at least, placed American Federation of Labor unions in the category of company unions and has caused to be visited upon American Federation of Labor unions the same punishment as has been visited upon company unions."

Speaking of the Board, the resolutions committee of the 1938 American Federation of Labor convention (p. 349 of the report of proceedings) said:

"We believe they should substitute a judicial attitude for an anti-American Federation of Labor policy. I have been amazed at the facts which have been presented. They were scarcely believable. They convinced me, notwithstanding my desire to support the Board wholeheartedly in the administration of the act, that the Board had developed out of this internal controversy that arose within the American Federation of Labor, an anti-American Federation of Labor attitude, and that apparently they had substituted their own peculiar philosophic views for the plain provisions of the Labor Relations Act."

Report of the proceedings of the Fifty-ninth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor (1939) (p. 148, report of the executive council):

"Responsibility for much of the maladministration of the act is due to the personnel of the Board. Changes are imperative if a just policy is to be adopted and maintained."

Report of committee on resolutions of 1939 American Federation of Labor convention (p. 482 of report of proceedings):

"The examination of many of the Board's decisions proved conclusively that the structure of the international unions comprising the American Federation of Labor, and that of the American Federation of Labor itself, was at stake.

"It was proved that the National Labor Relations Board had declared bona fide trade-union agreements entered into with employers null and void, and that Federal courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States, had held that the Board was in error and unjustified in its efforts to vacate these agreements.

"It was proved that in numerous cases the Board had so prepared the ballots for election to determine the unit for representation that American Federation of Labor unions were barred.

"It was proved that in instances the National Labor Relations Board had refused to permit American Federation of Labor unions to be parties to cases coming before it.

"It was shown that in many cases American Federation of Labor unions had been dealt with unjustly and in a prejudiced manner, the proof being the decisions which had been handed down by United States circuit courts of appeals, and the United States Supreme Court itself."

Resolution No. 85 of Fifty-ninth American Federation of Labor Convention (1939) (p. 493 of report of proceedings):

"Whereas in the administration of the Wagner Labor Relations Act in particular, the controlling personnel has shown partiality and bias, and has gone so far as to invalidate contracts properly and legally entered into: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the American Federation of Labor in general convention assembled, That we call upon the properly constituted authorities to set up a five-man board in place of the present board, a board of five men who will administer the law in the manner and spirit intended by its sponsors."

All of which are incorporated in the minority report filed on the Norton bill.

Perhaps the President would be glad to get rid of the present Board, which has brought down upon his administration the overwhelming indignation of the vast majority of our people. But, in view of Lewis' threat, apparently he must protect that Board. Otherwise, Lewis will give him a political switching.

Hence, it is that, while a few weeks ago the A. F. of L. was pressing for the abolition of the Board, after Green's visit to the White House we find this roaring demand softened to a gentle whisper; and Members of the House, who, through the months, have made a fight to save the A. F. of L. from the combined efforts of the C. I. O. and the Labor Board and its hundreds of employees, find themselves without the vigorous, aggressive support of the A. F. of L.

Many Members of the House, realizing the overwhelming public demand for the abolition of this Board, knowing of the warfare which it has made on the A. F. of L., stand ready to give the country and the A. F. of L. the relief to which they are entitled. Every consideration of justice, of fair play, demand that the Board be abolished.

It is no answer to say that the appointment of two new members will remedy the situation. As long as the present Board continues in office and has in its service hundreds of employees who, by thought and deed, carry on the partisan fight in favor of the C. I. O. and against the A. F. of L. and continue their assaults against businessmen generally, we will never have industrial peace.

The only sure and certain remedy which will give us any relief is the prompt abolition of the Board and a house-cleaning among its employees. This the A. F. of L. can get, if it will stand up and fight during the coming week.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to check and balance the law-making, law-interpreting, as well as the law-enforcing activities of the Federal administrative agencies of our Government. The power and authority which has been granted to Federal agencies, and which they have assumed during the past few years, has extended far beyond the imagination or expectation of the Members of Congress who took part in the creation and authorization of such agencies.

The number of employees operating under such agencies has almost doubled in the last 10 years. In 1932 this Government had 560,000 civil employees. That number has now reached a figure of 990,000—almost a million—and is increasing right along. We now have an annual Federal pay roll for civil employees amounting to approximately $2,000,000,000.

In view of this situation, the problem of uncontrolled power in the hands of such agencies is entitled to the very careful study and investigation on the part of Congress as representatives of the people of this country.

Each of these independent agencies and bureaus is created for the purpose of administering a certain statute or group of statutes. Congress enacts a general law, then delegates authority to administer such law to the various agencies and commissions so created. They provide their own rules and interpret them and enforce them. It is the abuse of the discretion placed in the hands of many of these bureaus and commissions that brings to our attention the need for this legislation. These agencies and bureaus interpret and enforce their own rules. They sit in judgment on those accused of violating such rules. In many cases they become a law unto themselves and have the combined power of legislative, executive, and judicial authority.

Certainly, many of these agencies are necessary, and in many cases it is required that they provide their particular rules and regulations to carry out their purpose. However, it is the abuse of this authority which has created the need for this law. It has been pointed out many times during the past few years that many of these bureaus have taken upon themselves power and authority never intended by Congress. The purpose of this bill is to curb a fatal tendency of bureaucracies to abuse the power granted them and which they have assumed and to grope continually for more. It is hoped that this measure will check this great trend toward centralization of power in the executive department and help prevent the complete destruction of division of power between the Federal and State Governments.

Unfortunately, Congress, in providing for these commissions and bureaus, did not provide for a uniform procedure for hearings, and did not provide for a uniform method, or limit the scope of judicial review. The whole thing has gone unbridled and uncontrolled. These various agencies have given little heed to decisions which have been rendered on account of other administrative agencies.

Congress created these agencies without any regard for improvement of administrative process and has not attempted—even in a general way—to define the scope of judicial review. In view of the tremendous power and authority which has been vested in such agencies, certainly their regulations and decisions should be reviewed by a separate judicial authority. There can be no reason why any agency of our Government should be permitted to make its own rules, and then have final authority to determine whether or not they were reasonable, or have been violated. Certainly, under our form of government, one who is aggrieved because of the use of such power, or by the judgment that may have been rendered by such bureau or commission, is entitled to his day in court. In recent years there has been a crying need for this legislation. There seems to be a natural human tendency on the part of those who have been vested with power and authority, not only to use such authority granted to them, but assume whatever additional power may possibly go with it.

Mr. Chairman, I called your attention at the beginning to the ever-increasing number of bureaus and agencies which have been added to our Government during the past few years. I am not complaining at this time about the individuals who have been placed in charge of such bureaus and agencies. They may be qualified for their jobs. Nearly all of those who have been appointed in the last few years secured their places as political appointees. Many of them were appointed because of "pressure groups" that insisted they be placed in such positions. Surely, it is not the intention of the American people to appoint men in political positions, give them power to make rules and regulations on the subject matter under control, and then permit them to determine whether or not such rules and regulations have been violated. The least we can do is to provide for some kind of uniform regulation whereby the American citizen who feels that he has been aggrieved may go before a disinterested tribunal and have his case reviewed on its merits.

It may be that there should be some changes in this bill. It is possible there should be amendments to it. But I call your attention to the fact that it has been brought here after a considerable amount of time and study on the part of those investigating this problem. This measure is in no wise political. It is for the best interests of our Government, and I think the American people, if they knew about it, would be demanding its passage. The growing power and authority of bureaucracy in this country is dangerous and most alarming. If held within check, it may be useful. If permitted to go unchecked and disregarded, it might swallow up and destroy democracy itself. If we are going to maintain a democracy, it must be a government by law and not a government by men. A government by men is a bureaucracy of the worst kind.

Here is one more chance to prevent the encroachment of bureaucracy which, if left uncontrolled, will destroy the very vitals of our democracy.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, it is with great reluctance that I oppose this bill. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the purposes of the bill. I believe, however, that the bill could indeed be greatly bettered if the committee of which I am a member had waited until the Attorney General's committee had made its report. This committee, composed of distinguished gentlemen, has worked diligently and has to its credit a great deal of erudition and scholarly learning and study on the subject of administrative law as it affects our 130 departments and bureaus. I think the bill then would have been in much better form—and in all likelihood I could have supported it—if it had been drawn differently and had not sought to treat all bureaus alike. I have the highest regard, indeed an affectionate regard, for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], and it is with a great deal of reluctance that I differ with him on this subject. Nevertheless, I must do my duty as I see it; and I must, therefore, come into this Well and point out the errors of this bill.

I know there are many agencies that have been derelict in their duties. They have sought to legislate instead of doing the full measure of their duty. But there are 130 agencies, all different one from the other. There are no agencies alike in this Government. Why should we visit the sins of the few upon the many? And it is for the reason that this bill would lay all these agencies with few exceptions across a Procrustean bed, as it were, that I object to the bill.

Bad cases make bad laws. Some of the activities in the rulings of the interagency bureaus and independent establishments have been—to say the least—bad. The Members of both Houses are visiting the sins of some of these bad agencies on all agencies. I would even go further. A number of the Members of the Senate and the House have received naught but discomfiture and disappointments as a result of the rulings of some of these bureaus, and they have hastened favorable consideration on the aforesaid bills in order to express disapproval of the action of these agencies.

To be specific: I believe the National Labor Relations Board has shown an utter disregard of Congress. It has on several occasions overridden the plain intent of the basic statute creating it. It has sought to legislate and to replace Congress.

The Federal Communications Commission some time ago issued an order concerning international broadcasts, wherein it was stated that there could be no broadcast addressed to foreign territory unless it reflected true American culture. What in thunder is true American culture? Is it Indian culture? I would not even attempt to define it. Such an edict involved censorship. The basic statute creating the Federal Communications Commission prohibited censorship. This was, therefore, legislation with a vengeance. As a result of widespread protest, the regulation was suspended.

My own experiences with the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor have been highly disappointing because of its arbitrary action. I have been confronted with mere whippersnappers—young students just out of law school—who apparently are given undue authority in originating, if not effectuating, final decisions. These young lads might be excellent in drafting briefs and memorandums of law, but when it comes to deciding important issues involving important rights, the wisdom of years and the mellowness of experience should prevail.

It is these bad cases that gave rise to these bills. It is because some of these commissions have seen fit to adopt policies contrary to congressional fiat that impetus was given toward favorable consideration of the present bill. I deplore the tendency of some of these bureaus. Some remedy is essential, for otherwise we shall drift into some sort of executive domination, if not totalitarianism, with a complete subordination of the legislative and judicial branches of the Government to the executive branch.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALTER. Does not the gentleman's objection go to the bill he himself introduced? That bill was far more stringent in terms. It literally put every agency into a strait jacket. The committee abandoned that bill. I am sure if the gentleman wanted to enact that bill he ought to be for this bill.

Mr. CELLER. I was asked and requested to offer a bill of the character that the gentleman indicated; and, like many Members who are requested to do things, I offered the bill. I did not give it mature reflection before I offered it, but after it was offered and after the gentleman offered his bill and I had given considerable study to the two and had conferred with numerous members of various branches of our Government, with heads of various independent agencies, and they had pointed out to me how wrong it would be to blanket all agencies regardless of their diverse facilities into one bill, to treat them all alike, I changed my viewpoint entirely. It was necessary for me to do that because my study revealed that most agencies are dissimilar in make-up and in functions. You can no more treat them all alike, as the bill does, than you can treat a pigmy like a giant. It was not a question of changing one's mind; it was a question of finding out after study what was right and what was wrong; and I feel that this bill is wrong. It will give us a cure which will be worse than the disease.

Why can we not wait until that factual study has been made? The President has realized the necessity of making that study. He authorized the then Attorney General, Mr. Murphy, in February 1939, to appoint a committee to investithe need for procedural reform in the field of administrative law. A thorough and comprehensive study should be made of existing branches of procedure with a view to detecting any existing deficiency and pointing the way to improvements. Who are the members of that committee? It is well to keep them in mind.

They are James W. Morris, United States district judge and formerly Assistant Attorney General, chairman; B. Lawrence Groner, chief justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; Carl McFarland, a former Assistant Attorney General; Golden Bell, Assistant Solicitor General; Arthur T. Vanderbilt, president, American Judicature Society; Dean Acheson, formerly Under Secretary of the Treasury; Robert H. Jackson, formerly Solicitor General, now Attorney General; Prof. Harry Hart, of Harvard Law School; Prof. Harry Schulman, of Yale Law School; Prof. Ralph Fuchs, of Washington University Law School; Prof. Blythe Stason, of Michigan Law School; and Dean Lloyd Garrison, of Wisconsin Law School.

The executive director is Prof. Walter Gelhorn, of Columbia University.

In justice to the worthy members of that committee may I say they have completed to date about 50 factual studies of about some 50 different departments and agencies. I have them here. You will note they pile high on the desk. They represent a terrific amount of labor.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Does the gentleman think that out of those studies will come any light on this subject at all?

Mr. CELLER. I most emphatically think so.

Mr. WALTER. I had thought that the study was intended to throw some light on this subject until recently when there was called to my attention a letter that a man who is doing this work wrote. As a result of this letter, I am convinced he will never complete this study, because he is receiving $7,500 a year and is trying to justify his existence.

Mr. CELLAR. I think that is an unfair statement, and I believe on reflection the gentleman from Pennsylvania may want to modify it. You could not say that Dean Acheson, Bob Jackson, and these other members I have indicated are unfair or would tolerate any unfairness. You cannot say that Judge Groner or Golden Bell, of Columbia University, is unfair. They are completing their studies and will have them finished by the fall of this year. It is utterly impossible for them to complete their study sooner than that, and I say it is only in the way they have conducted these studies that we can get information and conclusions which will enable us to fashion a bill which will meet the exigencies of the situation. You cannot do it by a mere committee of the House. Because you have tried to do it, you have done it wrong. You try to blanket into one frame and treat alike all agencies. What should have been done was to consider each bureau or agency separately. That is just what the Attorney General's committee is doing. We could not do that, with all our arduous duties. But it is the only safe, logical way. It is a matter that requires scientific study and hours and hours of considered erudition and reflection. It is impossible for us to do it. We must take the guidance of men of scientific minds. These men have gone into the very bowels of each of the departments and you will find on the desk here all these studies made thus far. When these studies are listed, connotated, cross-indexed, and gone through, we will get a consensus of expert opinion, and on that basis we can fashion a bill, and not until then.

The bill gives no consideration to different types of orders. All orders, apparently, are treated alike, just as all bureaus are apparently treated alike, except where exceptions have been made. It requires great study to know how to draft a statute to take care of distinctions of this character. As I have worked out the situation, there are four types of orders:

First. Procedural orders partaking of nature of legislation; establishing a method of hearing and procedure, e. g.:

(a) Order to appear at certain place and time.

(b) Order to postpone a hearing.

(c) Order to dismiss proceeding.

Most of these orders do not involve rights which courts will review at present.

Second. Legislative orders: Affect classes, groups, or public at large. They implement the law like defining terms in the statute.

Third. Orders legislative in form, but judicial in effect, as a rate order affecting a company. Such are reviewable by courts.

Fourth. Judicial orders issued after notice and hearing, like injunctions, command orders, and penalty orders. All are subject to court review.

Orders may also be classed in other ways as: (1) Legislative; (2) regulatory; (3) procedural; (4) administrative controlling; (5) injunctive and command; (6) reparation; (7) penalty; (8) orders in respect of licenses, registrations; and (9) orders in re declarations and designations.

Yet, these orders are all treated alike.

Mr. KITCHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. KITCHENS. Our courts have already assumed jurisdiction to declare the rule of any administrative agency invalid because arbitrary, capricious, or unlawful. They now have the jurisdiction to declare any rule of any administrative agency invalid for either one of those three reasons. This law says that the courts shall have no power in the proceedings except to render a declaratory judgment holding such rule valid or holding it contrary to law and invalid. I am unable to see where this bill gives the courts any further authority than they now have.

Mr. CELLER. That concerns declaratory judgments; and as to that I shall address myself later in these remarks, although my time is flickering by rather fast. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in section 5 (a) the rules of evidence with reference to what the courts can or cannot do concerning an order or decision appealed from have been greatly changed, whereas heretofore the findings of fact of administrative bodies and officers could not be reviewed if supported by substantial evidence. Now this bill changes that situation. That will be changed and the courts would, by this bill, be permitted to upset the findings of administrative bodies and officers if the court deems such findings merely contrary to the weight of the evidence. That gives tremendous power to the courts. What is the result? You are going to dump into the courts thousands and thousands of all manner and kinds of decisions to be reviewed.

I am going to repeat what I said in my minority report:

> The undesirable results would be aggravated by enlargement of the scope of appellate review from that now prevailing. The general rule is that the findings of fact of administrative bodies and officers will not be reviewed if supported by substantial evidence. Section 5 (a) would permit the courts to review the weight of evidence and upset the findings of fact of administrative bodies and officers if the courts deemed them contrary to the weight of evidence. This far-reaching result is to be accomplished by the seemingly innocuous clause which would permit the court to reverse findings of fact if clearly erroneous. What constitutes "clearly erroneous" is, of course, a matter of opinion. These are the words of rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which have been construed as permitting the courts to review the findings of a trial court. There is, of course, a vast difference between the findings of a trial court and the findings of an administrative tribunal or officer. It is a principle that has been deeply imbedded in administrative law for a great many years that findings of the latter type should not be subject to appellate review, unless it appears that they are not supported by substantial evidence. The Supreme Court has recognized this principle in its decisions; the Congress has done so in legislation providing for court review in certain quasi judicial matters. Finality in respect to findings of fact must reside somewhere if the operations of government are not to be constantly delayed and fettered.

Are you going to substitute a court opinion for the well-considered opinion of the head of a bureau or agency who is better qualified by far to pass upon the circumstances than Federal judges with all their other multifarious duties? If you want to dump all these solutions into the Federal appellate courts and the circuit court of appeals, well and good, but I say before you do that examine into the situations as those situations affect all these bureaus. Many of the activities of these bureaus will not lend themselves to that kind of review and it is for this reason I say wait until we get the results of the consideration of this particular committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I want to make my statement, and I hope I may continue without interruption from now on. These interruptions, and requests to yield which I am loath to refuse, simply cut up and butcher, as it were, my remarks into a disjointed statement.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS] suggests that this law will not grant any more power than these bureaus and commissions now have. Let me call his attention to the fact that a number of them in the act of creation passed by the Congress specifically provided that there shall be no appeal.

Mr. CELLER. There are many, many cases where we have provided appellate media for the consideration of appeals by administrative agencies. For example, there is the Board of Review in the Veterans' Administration, there is the Insurance Claims Council in the Veterans' Administration, there is the Board of Tea Appeals in the Department of Agriculture, there is the Examining and Retiring Board of the Navy Department, the Board of Review of the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Board of Review in the Labor Department, the procedure for review in the Food and Drug Administration, the machinery for review in the Bureau of Internal Revenue and also in the Civil Aeronautics Authority. In almost every one of those instances, as pointed out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], our esteemed colleague, there has been no trouble, there has been no friction, there has been eminent satisfaction with that type of appeal.

Mr. WALTER. Before the gentleman goes into that feature, I should like to call his attention to the statement in section 7 of the bill that nothing contained in this act shall operate to modify or repeal any rights or procedure as now provided by law.

Mr. CELLER. I tell the gentleman that is not specific enough language in pursuance of court decisions to determine exactly what you mean. That may be ambiguous. It would be better to mention those agencies specifically.

Mr. WALTER. That was taken from a Supreme Court decision, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. CELLER. I must respectfully take exception to the gentleman's remarks in that regard. Unless there is a very succinct, definite amendment adopted, we would be in a very grave situation with reference to all those agencies. We can just as easily be specific. But let us assume the gentleman is right and we should have, therefore, preserved the different appellate procedures in the agencies mentioned, and we would have different procedures. He then recognizes exceptions. This bill seeks, however, to generalize and treat all other departments alike as to appeals. The gentleman makes exceptions, generally—generally to the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other bureaus. Now he goes further and says with reference to the media of appeal in the agencies that there shall likewise be exceptions. If this bill is sound in principle it should treat every single agency alike, and the appellate jurisdiction should be alike in every instance. If you are going to make exceptions, then to that extent you immediately admit there is something wrong and that your bill is not as perfect as you might intend it to be.

We are somewhat to blame, however, in this Congress. We have created latterly numerous agencies and have specifically set up the type of appeal to obtain in those agencies. In agencies where we did not set up the type of appeal, we were in error. Concerning each one of those separate agencies where appeal media were set up by statute, we were very careful to set up the different types of appeal, depending in each instance on the peculiarities and idiosyncrasies of each agency. But in this bill all agencies are to be treated alike. I say, follow out the same procedure which we followed when we promulgated a bill for each agency, setting up in such agency a separate type of appeal. We must treat each agency appeal medium in diverse manner based on its own particular purposes. For example, appeals concerning the quarantine of animals should be different from appeals concerning the promotion of employees; appeals concerning the size and speed of airplanes should be different from appeals dealing with the destruction of fruits or the censoring of salacious radio programs deemed to be contrary to public morals. Furthermore, there shauld be no appeals in inconsequential matters; there should be no appeals from executive orders which involve no executive discretion; nor should there be any appeals to the courts in matters dealing with the grading of an employee or the refusal to promote an employee, the latter being purely disciplinary executive orders.

I started to indicate the different types of agencies, all of which have diverse and different powers. There are the agencies which directly affect persons outside the Government, either by adjudication or by rule making; for example, the Food and Drug Administration, the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, the National Labor Relations Board, the Federal Power Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, the United States Maritime Commission, and the Securities and Exchange Commission. These Boards and Commissions generally have the power to fix rates; regulate competition; determine services; fix relations of labor; police in the interest of public health, safety, and morals; grant licenses; and exert partial censorship, as in the case of the Communications Commission.

See how diverse all these functions are. You cannot treat them all alike, yet this bill treats every one of these agencies alike. Every one of the agencies mentioned is included in the bill. Why treat the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Federal Reserve Board differently? They act like these other bureaus; they fix rates; they regulate competition; they police in the interest of public health, safety, and morals, in a certain sense; and they grant licenses as the others do. Why make these exceptions?

There is a second class of agencies, those engaged in the managerial work of the Government, such as the Civil Service Commission, the Bureau of the Budget, and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission. See how diverse and different are the activities of these three agencies in this second classification, yet they are all treated alike.

In a third classification are those agencies engaged in proprietary activities, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the General Land Office, the Alaska Railroad, and the Panama Railroad. You treat them all alike, regardless of the diversity of the functions of these agencies and bureaus. Imagine an appeal by a conductor on the Panama Railroad or Alaska Railroad because he was refused a promotion. Yet section 4 (b) says "any person aggrieved" may appeal from the "decision of any officer or employee of any agency"; and section 5 permits appeal by such person to the courts.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Can the gentleman explain to me why there is such a long line of exemptions from the provisions of the bill? The reason I want to know the answer to this question sometime before we have to vote is that I do not understand why, if these provisions are worth while, there should be such a long list of exemptions.

Mr. CELLER. If the provisions of the bill generally are worth while in principle, there should be no exemptions, but everybody tried to get exemptions in. I am just as guilty as anybody else. I got some exemptions in likewise.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Why did they try to get exemptions?

Mr. CELLER. I will put it this way: Those bureaus that yelled most loudly got their answer in exemptions, and those bureaus that did not yell too loudly did not. Most of the agencies—the 130 agencies were just mute—said nothing. Many of the agencies I have mentioned did not appear before the committee and gave no evidence before the committee, and the committee did not realize, or probably some of us did not realize how far-reaching was the bill we were adopting. At least, as far as I am concerned, I did not approve of the bill. I am speaking of some of the other members of the committee.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Let me go further. There is a fourth class of agencies. There are the lending agencies, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and the Federal Works Agency. Fifthly, there are the agencies of a service character, utterly different from the agencies mentioned before, like the Federal Register Bureau and the Bureau of Standards. Sixthly, there are the agencies of a beneficiary character, like the Social Security Board, the Veterans' Administration, the Children's Bureau, the Work Projects Administration, the Public Works Administration, the National Youth Administration, and the Civilian Conservation Corps.

They are utterly different one from another, and that last classification of beneficiary agencies is utterly different from the other classifications. There are also, seventhly, agencies of the protective type, like the Tariff Commission—which is outside the act—and like the Coast Guard; think of this, the Coast Guard is in the act. If the activities of the Army and the Navy, in the main, are exempted, why should the Coast Guard be included? Our Coast Guard has much to do with national defense.

Another classification, eighthly and lastly, is the agencies of conciliation and mediation, for example, the United States Conciliation Service, the National Mediation Service, the National Labor Relations Board, and the former N. R. A., and yet all these boards are blanketed into this bill. I think it was wrong to have done so. Each one of these agencies should be studied most carefully and we should see whether or not the provisions of this bill should be applied to the exigencies and the difficulties that obtain in each one of these agencies mentioned. But there has been no such study made.

Now, I am fearful that the way the bill is drawn it will tie the bureaus into endless knots. For example, let us assume that the Securities and Exchange Commission, at the suggestion of a group of honest, God-fearing security traders, promulgates a rule governing such traders. Some fly-by-night security dealer contests the rule. Under the present conditions the rule could be effective, despite his bringing the test case into the courts. But, under the proposed measure, the Securities and Exchange Commission would be enjoined from carrying into effect such a wholesome rule encouraging wholesome trading until the courts have finally determined the issue.

As was pointed out by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York—and I may say there are a number of bar associations that are opposed, and this is not a one-sided proposition. The National Lawyers Guild is opposed, the Association of the Bar of the City of New York is opposed, and I am sure the President will oppose, if the specific question is asked of him. The Brookings Institution issued a book in opposition, by Mr. Blachly. Almost every agency of the Government is opposed. Every member of the President's Cabinet is opposed. There is not a solitary exception. It is not a one-sided proposition.

As was pointed out by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York concerning the S. E. C.:

> It would seem obvious that the same procedure for internal and judicial review may not be desirable in the case of an order initiating an investigation, on the one hand, and an order expelling a member from a securities exchange on the other. Other types of action or nonaction under that statute may be found in a refusal or failure to order a dealer's registration effective in advance of the prescribed 30 days, a refusal to allow information in a registration statement to be held confidential, an order appointing a trial examiner, a dismissal of an employee, an order referring a matter to the Attorney General of the United States, etc.

See how many orders there are possible in the Securities and Exchange Commission alone. The unlimited appeals from these orders would so tie up the work of the S. E. C. as to render it utterly ineffectual.

Now, if you want such a bill, very good. I do not want such a bill. I want the matter studied more carefully.

As far as the S. E. C. is concerned, by all means give the appeal in certain important matters, but refrain from giving it in trivial cases. Make a demarcation between those various facilities or those various functions of the S. E. C. Grant the appeal in one case—that is, where discretion is involved—and refuse the appeal in the other case, where no discretion is involved, like an Executive order, like a police order—and then I shall be satisfied, but not until then. Then treat all others. [Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN] having resumed the chair, Mr. KERR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

REREFERENCE OF A BILL

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have referred to the Committee on the Public Lands the bill S. 2191, which was referred to the Committee on Labor by mistake.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. MALONEY, for 1 week, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a letter from M. C. McMillan, superintendent of industries of the Minnesota State Prison.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] may proceed for 5 minutes at the end of all other business today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to incude an editorial from the Detroit News, appearing today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include an address by Brig. Gen. Burton K. Yount, Assistant Chief of the Air Corps, at Westover, Mass., April 6, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a speech by Postmaster General Farley.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an eloquent address delivered by Judge Reford Bond, a member of the State Corporation Commission of the State of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including therein a radio address I delivered last Thursday evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROTEST DISCHARGE OF W. P. A. EMPLOYEES

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes and to extend my remarks in the RECORD to include a statement issued today by the Oklahoma delegation in Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, Members of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress met today to protest against an order to drop 10,000 people from the W. P. A. rolls in our State today. A statement was prepared outlining our position on this drastic cut and I shall include this in my remarks.

We also had a meeting this afternoon with Hon. Howard Hunter, deputy commissioner of the Work Projects Administration, at which we discussed the relief situation in Oklahoma in some detail and presented our views as to why this drastic and unreasonable cut in the Oklahoma quota should not be made. We pointed out that Oklahoma is taking a far more drastic reduction than the average cut over the country despite the fact of our prolonged drought situation in Oklahoma. We were informed, however, that reductions are necessary at this time because funds are running low. We were also told that further reductions must be made unless Congress acts to stop it.

The W. P. A. in general, has done a good job in Oklahoma. There has been criticism, of course, some of which may be justified. But most of the criticism is caused by the fact that many thousands of needy and deserving people throughout the State have been unable to get W. P. A. employment for the reason the State was not allocated sufficient funds to employ anything like all of those eligible for work. Many very deserving people, with large families to support, must now look to charity or else go hungry. Today our delegation pointed out that our State has been unusually hard hit by a series of very severe and very costly droughts. Frankly, I do not know how the 10,000 people and their families being dropped by the W. P. A. in Oklahoma today can get by until another crop is harvested. This drastic cut is going to mean real privation and untold suffering. This Congress should immediately make a deficiency appropriation to prevent these lay-offs. I favor such an appropriation and give notice now that I will oppose vigorously any move to make a drastic cut in the W. P. A. appropriation for the next fiscal year. As long as Congress can increase by $44,000,000 the Government subsidy to private shipbuilders I maintain that we can make necessary appropriations to prevent human beings from going hungry. [Applause.]

The deficiency bill carrying relief funds for the next fiscal year will be presented to this Congress within a few days. It has been suggested that it should become effective June 1 instead of July 1 next. I am advised that such action by Congress would prevent any further lay-offs. If so, I would favor it. I cannot overemphasize the seriousness of the situation in our State.

The statement issued by the Oklahoma congressional delegation, prepared and given out today, is as follows:

The letting off of 10,000 W. P. A. workers with a proposed further reduction of 20,000 before July 1 will not be tolerated by the Oklahoma delegation if we can possibly prevent it.

Oklahoma still has over 102,000 certified as needy unemployed, with more than 20,000 additional unfortunates who have been unable to even apply for certification, because of the fact that the Federal Government no longer certifies new W. P. A. applicants and the State has not assumed this responsibility.

This reduction will give less than one man in three who needs work in Oklahoma, a State that has suffered a series of droughts for the last 7 years. This will create an unbearable hardship.

This delegation goes on record to continue to stand for sufficient money to give work to all of those persons eligible in Oklahoma and flat-footedly refuses to economize at the expense of the unemployed who have no faint glimmer of hope for private employment.

Conditions in Oklahoma are now worse than they have been for the past 6 years due to the prolonged and disastrous drought. There is no prospect for early improvement; in fact the wheat yield—usually 10 bushels to the acre—is currently estimated by the Crop Reporting Board to be only 5 bushels for this year. Cotton farmers and livestock men likewise are suffering from the drought and the cotton districts from continuing depressed markets and low yields.

Contrary to the situation in the East and northern States, there has been no industrial pick-up in Oklahoma. No increases are shown or likely to occur in private employment—in fact, there is possibility of further declines as business falls monthly to a lower figure.

None of the vast sums for rearmament or for war supplies being spent in industrial areas affects the industry of Oklahoma. Instead recurring droughts has further decimated the available business normally expected.

The certified relief load of 102,000 was certified and rechecked by W. P. A. authorities themselves who have a "clean list certification." This is compared with inflated rolls of alleged eligibles often put on by State-controlled certification boards elsewhere. Since there has been no new certifications for W. P. A. since November 1939, it is estimated that at least 20,000 additional are in dire need of work.

Fact summary

Certified by W. P. A. officials	102,000
Estimated additional eligibles	20,000
Estimated total relief loan	122,000
Employed April 1 on W. P. A.	50,000
Reduction ordered April 15 to	40,000
Percent of reduction	25
Number to be worked compared with eligibles, percent	32

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under an order heretofore made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker—

The Speaker reads to the House the orderly method of parliaments and the demeanor of the members thereof observed in England, which he recommended to them, as civil and good: as also the method observed by the English in committees. (Votes of the Assembly (Pennsylvania), 1st month, 12th day, 1683.)

Thus from these ancient records we learn much about "the orderly method of parliaments" and the early procedure of our first legislative bodies. It is authoritatively stated that the General Assembly of Pennsylvania furnished by far the largest part of our national law-making devices. Virginia had the beginnings of standing committees, yet Pennsylvania was much further advanced in the use of them.

Attempted imitation of Parliament is evident on the face of the First Pennsylvania Assembly's Journal. It occupied itself at the outset with a consideration of parliamentary practice and the formulation of a crude written procedure. With a degree of conservatism surprising even for them, the Pennsylvanians held to this down to the inception of our National Government and carried it to Congress, whence its influence has spread throughout the length and breadth of the land. Its items were reenacted and improved from time to time, so that in Revolutionary days they formed a code of 19 neatly arranged and numbered rules. (Journal of Pennsylvania Assembly, November 30, 1776.)

In them, and still more in the assembly records generally, is traceable through a devious history the interweaving of old English methods with innovations that are now especially a part of the practice of our National House of Representatives. Of these may be noted the power of the Speaker, the previous question, and various leading features of the committee system. (McConachie.)

Upon the opening of a Provincial Assembly in Pennsylvania, there were appointed committees for Ways and Means; Accounts; Revision of the Laws and Minutes; Revision of the Criminal Laws; Rules; Claims; Unfinished Business; and the President's message. These continued throughout the whole of the session. McConachie, in his Congressional Committees, says of them:

Their names are suggestive of the early lists in the national House—indeed, all the forms of opening proceedings at New York in 1789 seem to have been copied almost literally after those which had long prevailed in Philadelphia. Also from England the American colonies, most notably Pennsylvania and Virginia, drew and transmitted to the legislative bodies of our Federal Union, the most common parliamentary forms relating to the use of select and standing committees, as well as the device known as the Committee of the Whole.

The day following the organization of the Senate in the First Congress—Tuesday, April 7, 1789—

Messrs. Ellsworth, Paterson, Maclay, Strong, Lee, Bassett, Few, and Wingate were appointed a committee to bring in a bill for organizing the judiciary of the United States.

This was the first Committee on the Judiciary in the Senate. Later, on Monday, April 13, Mr. Carroll and Mr. Izard were added to the Judiciary Committee. And on—Friday, June 12, Mr. Lee in behalf of this committee reported a bill to establish the judicial courts of the United States.

This bill passed the Senate on July 17, and in the entry for Monday, July 23, we read:

The Secretary carried to the House of Representatives, for their concurrence, a bill to establish the judicial courts of the United States.

However, when this bill reached the House it was handled in a way entirely different from that used in the Senate as shown by the following excerpts from the proceedings of the House on the dates mentioned. Monday, July 20:

A message from the Senate informed the House that they had passed the bill for establishing an executive department, to be denominated the Department of Foreign Affairs, with several amendments, to which they desired the concurrence of the House; that they have also passed a bill to establish the judicial courts of the United States, to which they desire the concurrence of the House. * * * The bill sent from the Senate, "to establish the judicial courts of the United States," was read the second time, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday next.

Nothing was done, however, until on Monday, August 24, when the following appears:

The House now resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," Mr. Boudinot in the chair.

The bill was debated in the Committee of the Whole, on August 29, 31, September 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, until on September 14 we find:

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole on the judiciary bill, Mr. Boudinot in the chair; and having gone through the same, reported it to the House with several amendments, which were ordered to lie on the table.

On Tuesday, September 15:

The House proceeded to consider the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole to the bill to establish the judicial courts of the United States, which being concurred with, the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

And on Thursday, September 17:

The bill for establishing the judicial courts of the United States was read the third time and passed. * * * A message from the Senate informed the House that * * *; also, that they agree to some, and disagree to others, of the amendments proposed by the House to the bill for establishing the judicial courts of the United States.

And on Monday, September 21, we reach the final entry on this subject:

The House then proceeded to reconsider such of the amendments to the judiciary bill, as had been disagreed to by the Senate; and adopted them without debate.

Thus, by entirely different methods of procedure did the two Houses of Congress draft and report the First Judiciary Act of 1789, which has been characterized as "probably the most important and most satisfactory act ever passed by Congress."

In tracing the origin and development of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, the thirteenth standing committee created in the House, we must turn to the records and proceedings of the Thirteenth Congress, for therein do we learn of the creation of this committee.

THE THIRTEENTH CONGRESS

The Thirteenth Congress extended from March 4, 1813, to March 3, 1815. It consisted of 3 sessions—the first, from May 24, 1813, to August 2, 1813, 71 days; the second, from December 6, 1813, to April 18, 1814, 134 days; and the third, from September 19, 1814, to March 3, 1815, 166 days. The Speaker of the House during the first and a part of the second sessions was Henry Clay, of Kentucky. He resigned January 19, 1814, and on that day Langdon Cheves, of South Carolina, was elected Speaker. James Madison was serving his second term as President from March 4, 1813, to March 3, 1817. The House consisted of 182 Members, representing 18 States and 4 Territories. The population of the United States, as shown by the census of 1810, was 7,239,881. The ratio of representation was 1 Representative for every 35,000 of population.

It was during this first session that the initial move was made to create a standing committee to be known as the Committee on the Judiciary. Thus it was almost a quarter of a century after the meeting of the First Congress that the Committee on the Judiciary of the House came into existence.

However, in the first session of the preceding Twelfth Congress an effort had been made in this direction as evidenced by the following (24 Cong. Ann. 1086):

Monday, February 24, 1812, Mr. Gold offered the following resolution: "Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire whether any, and if any, what alteration is necessary in the judicial system of the United States, and that they report by bill." Agreed to, and a committee of five appointed.

The author of this resolution was Thomas R. Gold, Representative from New York and later a member of the Committee on the Judiciary in the first session of the Fourteenth Congress.

Mr. Gold was not a Member of the Thirteenth Congress and, of course, was not named on the committee when Henry Clay, as Speaker, appointed the first committee.

In the proceedings and debates of the House of Representatives of the United States at the first session of the Thirteenth Congress, begun at the city of Washington May 24, 1813, we learn that on Tuesday, June 1—

A motion was made by Mr. Jackson, of Virginia, to amend the Standing Rules and Orders of the House by adding the following thereto:

"An additional standing committee shall be appointed at the commencement of each session, viz: a Committee on the Judiciary, to consist of seven members. It shall be the duty of the said Committee on the Judiciary to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things touching judicial proceedings as shall be presented, or may come in question, and be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion thereupon, together with such propositions relative thereto, as to them shall deem expedient.

"Ordered, That the said amendments do lie on the table."

In the proceedings of Thursday, June 3, the following entry appears:

THE JUDICIARY

Mr. J. G. Jackson called up the resolution which he submitted for consideration a day or two ago, in the following words:

"Resolved, That the following be added to the Standing Rules and Orders of the House: An additional standing committee shall be appointed at the commencement of each session, viz: a Committee on the Judiciary, to consist of seven members. It shall be the duty of the said committee to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things touching judicial proceedings, as shall be presented or may come in question and be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion thereupon, together with such propositions relative thereto as to them shall seem expedient."

Mr. Jackson said he had been induced to submit this resolution from the consideration that our laws are in many instances defective, and it is of the utmost importance that they should be amended, and that this object could be best attained by the appointment of a standing committee to whom should be referred all propositions for establishing new courts and regulating these powers.

He recollected two cases falling within his own observation which had led him to contemplate some such provision, and it was not without some surprise that he found it had been passed over so long. As long ago as during the existence of the internal taxes one of those cases occurred. It would be recollected, he said, that prosecutions might be commenced in State courts for the penalties attendant on the infraction of those laws. In pursuance of this provision a prosecution had been commenced in Virginia in an inferior court; judgment was rendered against an individual, who it was manifest had not conformed to the provisions of the law. The case was carried to a higher court, however, and on the ground that the Constitution had vested the judicial powers of the United States in the Supreme Court, and such other courts as Congress might establish, it was decided that it was not in the power of Congress to confer jurisdiction on the State courts. The offenders, of course, escaped. Another case occurred in the course of the last year, in which a prosecution was instituted against a post rider for having opened the public mail traveling from Ohio to Kentucky. The fact was notorious. The same question occurred again, and the same decision took place. The individual was permitted to escape without punishment.

An amendment to our laws was unquestionably necessary in this respect. To consider such cases, and the various applications for altering the organization or location of courts, etc., he considered the appointment of a standing committee necessary. With this view, and also to render the decision of the House more uniform on these applications, as they would be if all referred to the same committee, he had thought proper to propose this amendment to the rules.

No opposition being made to the motion, it was adopted without division.

Nothing further seems to have been done at this session. The explanation is probably this: On Wednesday, May 26, preceding the standing Committees on Elections, Ways and Means, Claims, Commerce and Manufactures, Public Lands, District of Columbia, Post Offices and Post Roads, Revisal and Unfinished Business and Accounts had been appointed, and, inasmuch as Mr. Jackson's resolution did not pass until June 3, it is altogether likely that it was determined to pass over the appointment of this committee until the next session. War against Great Britain had been declared on June 18, 1812, and was still in progress, and the minds of the Representatives were occupied with matters other than those of the judiciary.

Then, in Proceedings and Debates of the House of Representatives at the second session of the Thirteenth Congress, begun at the city of Washington, Monday, December 6, 1813, in the proceedings of Tuesday, December 7, we find the following:

STANDING COMMITTEES

A motion was made by Mr. Dawson that the House do now proceed to the appointment of the several standing committees, except the Committee on Elections; and, the question being taken, it passed in the affirmative. Whereupon, the following committees were appointed, viz: Committee of Ways and Means * * *; Committee on the Public Lands * * *; Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads * * *; Committee for the District of Columbia * * *; Committee on the Judiciary, Mr. Ingersoll, Mr. Nelson, Mr. Pitken, Mr. Stockton, Mr. Pickens, Mr. Montgomery, and Mr. Oakley; Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business * * *; Committee of Accounts.

The Members appointed on the Committee of the Judiciary were Charles Jared Ingersoll, of Pennsylvana; Hugh Nelson, of Virginia; Timothy Pitken, of Connecticut; Richard Stockton, of New Jersey; Israel Pickens, of North Carolina; Thomas

Montgomery, of Kentucky; and Thomas J. Oakley, of New York. John Dawson, of Virginia, was the Member making the motion. A brief sketch of the lives of the seven members of the first Committee on the Judiciary follows:

Charles Jared Ingersoll was the son of Jared Ingersoll, a member of the Federal Constitutional Convention, and was elected as a Democrat to the Thirteenth Congress; he served as United States district attorney for Pennsylvania, 1815–29; elected to the Twenty-seventh and three succeeding Congresses—March 4, 1841–March 3, 1849; appointed Minister to France in 1847, but was not confirmed by the Senate; appointed United States judge for the district of Connecticut April 8, 1853; and died in Philadelphia, Pa., May 14, 1862. He was the first chairman of the committee.

Hugh Nelson served in the State Senate of Virginia, 1786–91; member of the State house of delegates in 1793 and served as speaker; judge of the general courts; elected to the Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Seventeenth Congresses, and served from March 4, 1811, until his resignation on January 14, 1823, having received an appointment in the Diplomatic Service; appointed by President James Monroe as United States Minister to Spain on January 15, 1823; died at his home, Belvoir, Albemarle County, Va., March 18, 1836.

Timothy Pitkin, member of State House of Representatives of Connecticut; served as clerk of the house, 1800–1802, and as speaker, 1803–5; elected as a Federalist to the Ninth Congress; reelected to the Tenth and to the five succeeding Congresses and served from September 16, 1805, to March 3, 1819; defeated for Speaker of the House of Representatives in the first session of the Thirteenth Congress by Henry Clay; delegate to the convention which framed the new State constitution in 1818; again a member of the State house of representatives, 1819–30; died in New Haven, Conn., December 18, 1847.

Richard Stockton was both a Senator and Representative from New Jersey; elected as a Federalist to the United States Senate and served from November 12, 1796, to March 3, 1799; member of the State general assembly; elected to the Thirteenth Congress—March 4, 1813–March 3, 1815; died near Princeton, N. J., March 7, 1825.

Israel Pickens, a Representative from North Carolina and a Senator from Alabama; member of State senate in 1809; elected as a Democrat from North Carolina to the Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth Congresses—March 4, 1811–March 3, 1817; register of the land office of Mississippi Territory—which included the present State of Alabama—1817–21; Governor of Alabama, 1821–25; appointed to the United States Senate from Alabama; declined appointment of judge of the United States Court for the District of Alabama in 1826; died near Matanzas, Cuba, April 24, 1827.

Thomas Montgomery, judge of the circuit court of Lincoln County, Ky.; member of the State house of representatives in 1811; elected as a Democrat to the Thirteenth Congress, and reelected to the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Congresses; died in Stanford, Ky., April 2, 1828.

Thomas J. Oakley, surrogate of Dutchess County, N. Y., in 1810; elected as a Federalist to the Thirteenth Congress; member of the State Assembly; attorney general of New York; elected as a Clinton Democrat to the Twentieth Congress; judge of the superior court of New York City; appointed Chief Justice in October 1847, and served until his death in New York City, May 11, 1857.

John G. Jackson, who introduced the resolution of June 1, 1813, to create a Committee on the Judiciary, was a civil engineer; appointed surveyor of public lands of what is now the State of Ohio in 1793; member of the Virginia House of Burgesses, 1798–1801; elected as a Democrat to the Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Congresses, and served from March 4, 1803, to September 28, 1810, when he resigned; member of the State house of delegates in 1811 and 1812; brigadier general of Virginia Militia in 1812; elected as a Democrat to the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Congresses; while in Congress fought a duel with Joseph Pearson, of North Carolina; appointed United States district judge for the western district of Virginia in 1819, and served until his death in Clarksburg, Va. (now West Virginia), March 28, 1825.

John Dawson, who moved the appointment of the Committee on the Judiciary on December 7, 1813, was both a delegate and a representative from Virginia; member of the State house of delegates, 1786–89; member of the Congress of the Confederation in 1788 and 1789; delegate to the State convention in 1788 that ratified the Federal Constitution; elected privy councilor in 1789; elected as a Democrat to the Fifth and eight succeeding Congresses, and served from March 4, 1797, until his death; was bearer of dispatches from President John Adams to the Government of France in 1801; served as aide to Gen. Jacob Brown and to Gen. Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812; died in Washington, D. C., March 31, 1814.

Thus to two sons of the Old Dominion fall the honors of being first to introduce the resolution and first to move the creation of the Committee on the Judiciary in the House of Representatives.

The committee was soon put to work, for on Friday, December 10:

> On motion of Mr. Hempstead * * * it was > Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making provision, by law, for the appointment of an additional judge of the supreme court, in the Territory of Missouri, exclusively for the district of Arkansas, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

More work was to follow, for on December 15, 20, 21 the committee was instructed to inquire into certain matters. On Friday, December 24, we read as follows:

> Mr. Ingersoll, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a bill for the appointment of an additional judge in the Missouri Territory, and for other purposes, which was twice read and committed.

This bill was read the third time and passed. On Thursday, December 30:

> On motion of Mr. Ingersoll:
> "Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of altering the judicial system of the United States.
> "Resolved also, That the same committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the more effectual punishment of crimes against the United States, and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise."

We now see the committee at its appointed task, a work which has continued without interruption throughout the succeeding Congresses for the past 127 years.

Before leaving the Thirteenth Congress it is well to remember the following: On August 2, 1813, Egbert Benson, Member from New York, resigned. His departure removed the last tie binding the present Congress to the past. Egbert Benson had been a delegate to the Annapolis convention in 1786; had served in the Congress of the Confederation, 1784–85, 1786–88; member of the State constitutional convention in New York in 1788, which ratified the Federal Constitution, and had served in the First and Second Congresses under the Constitution from March 4, 1789, to March 3, 1793.

It is indeed interesting to turn from the past and look ahead through the succeeding century and a quarter's history of this truly great committee.

CHAIRMEN

During the 127 years of its existence 39 different men have served as chairman of the committee. The list is as follows in the order of their first term of service as chairmen:

Thirteenth Congress, second session, Charles J. Ingersoll, Pennsylvania.
Thirteenth Congress, third session, Charles J. Ingersoll, Pennsylvania.

Seventy-fourth Congress, Hatton W. Sumners, Texas.
Seventy-fifth Congress, Hatton W. Sumners, Texas.
Seventy-sixth Congress, Hatton W. Sumners, Texas.

In recapitulation it is seen that of the men who held the chairmanship, nine came from Pennsylvania, five came from New York, three came from Virginia, two each from Massachusetts, Tennessee, North Carolina, Alabama, Iowa, Ohio, Texas, and one each from South Carolina, Georgia, Maryland, Kentucky, Maine, Wisconsin, New Jersey, and Minnesota. It falls to the lot of the gentleman from Texas, Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, the present chairman, to have served for the longest continuous period, he having been chairman since the beginning of the Seventy-second Congress and a member of the committee since the Sixty-fifth Congress.

MEMBERSHIP

From the second session of the Thirteenth Congress, to and including this session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, 480 men have composed the personnel of this committee.

That these men were men of more than average ability is attested by these facts:

Three, Franklin H. Pierce, of New Hampshire; James Buchanan, of Pennsylvania; and William McKinley, Jr., of Ohio, have been Presidents of the United States, while three other members have been unsuccessful candidates for the high office, viz, John Bell, of Tennessee, on the Constitutional Union ticket of 1860; Stephen A. Douglas, of Illinois, on the Democratic ticket that same year; and John W. Davis, of West Virginia, on the Democratic ticket in 1924.

One, James S. Sherman, of New York, has been Vice President, and three, George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, and John Sergeant, of Pennsylvania, have been unsuccessful candidates for the office.

Seven, Philip P. Barbour, of Virginia, in the Seventeenth; John Bell, of Tennessee, in the Twenty-third; John W. Jones, of Virginia, in the Twenty-eighth; Michael C. Kerr, of Indiana, in the Forty-fourth; Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, in the Fifty-first, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth; David B. Henderson, of Iowa, in the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh; and Frederick H. Gillett, of Massachusetts, in the Sixty-sixth, Sixty-seventh, and Sixty-eighth Congresses, have been Speakers of the House; and three, Timothy Pitkin, of Connecticut, in the Thirteenth Congress; Samuel S. Marshall, of Illinois, in the Fortieth Congress; and Joseph W. Bailey, of Texas, in the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses, have been unsuccessful candidates for the speakership. Another, Armistead Burt, of South Carolina, served as Speaker in 1848 during the absence of Speaker Winthrop.

In later years three have been President pro tempore of the Senate, viz, Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio; Isham G. Harris, of Tennessee; and William P. Frye, of Maine.

Fifteen have been Secretaries in the Cabinets of the Presidents, to wit:

Three, Daniel Webster, of Massachusetts; James Buchanan, of Pennsylvania; and Edward Livingston, of Louisiana, have been Secretaries of State.

One, Charles Toucy, of Connecticut, has been both Secretary of the Navy and Attorney General. Two, James M. Beck and W. E. Fuller, have been Assistant Attorneys General of the United States.

Two, John W. Davis, of West Virginia, and James M. Beck, of Pennsylvania, have been Solicitor General of the United States.

Four, John C. Spencer, of New York; John Bell, of Tennessee; William Wilkins, of Pennsylvania; and George W. McCrary, of Iowa, have each served as Secretary of War; Spencer had also been appointed as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court in 1844, but was rejected January 31, 1844.

John C. Spencer also served as Secretary of the Treasury from March 3, 1843, to May 2, 1844, when he resigned.

George S. Boutwell, Massachusetts, and Thomas Corwin, Ohio, also served as Secretaries of the Treasury.

Three, Charles Toucey, as stated, Hilary A. Herbert, of Alabama, and Edwin Denby, of Michigan, have been Secretaries of the Navy.

Three, Charles A. Wickliffe, of Kentucky, Nathan K. Hall, of New York, and William L. Wilson, of West Virginia, have been Postmaster Generals.

Twenty-two have served in the Diplomatic Service, either as ministers or ambassadors to foreign countries: Hugh Nelson, of Virginia, to Spain; Romulus Saunders, of North Carolina, to Spain; James Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, to Russia and to Great Britain; Edward Livingston, of Louisiana, to France; William C. Rives, of Virginia, to France;

Robert P. Letcher, of Kentucky, to Mexico; Francis Thomas, of Maryland, to Peru; Balie Peyton, of Tennessee, to Chile; Thomas Corwin, of Ohio, to Mexico; Daniel D. Barnard, of New York, to Prussia; David A. Starkweather, of Ohio, to Chile; William Wilkins, of Pennsylvania, to Russia; Joseph R. Ingersoll, of Pennsylvania, to Great Britain; Richard K. Meade, of Virginia, to Brazil; Humphrey Marshall, of Kentucky, to China; Christopher Robinson, of Rhode Island, to Peru; Albert G. Porter, of Indiana, to Italy; George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, to Germany; Charles R. Buckalew, of Pennsylvania, to Ecuador; John W. Davis, of West Virginia, to Great Britain; John A. Bingham, of Ohio, to Japan; James O. Brodhead, of Missouri, to Switzerland.

One, Philip P. Barbour, of Virginia, has been an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Three, Philip P. Barbour, aforesaid, George W. McCrary, of Iowa, and J. Earl Major, of Illinois, have been United States circuit court judges.

Twelve, Charles J. Ingersoll, of Pennsylvania; William Wilkins, of Pennsylvania; Asa Biggs, of North Carolina; Nathan K. Hall, of New York; George W. McCrary, of Iowa; John H. Rogers, of Iowa; Albert C. Thompson, of Ohio; George W. Ray, of New York; Edwin Y. Webb, of North Carolina; Louis Fitzhenry, of Illinois; J. LeRoy Adair, of Illinois; and Henry D. Clayton, of Alabama, have been United States district judges.

Four have been United States judges in Territories, namely: Robert Reid, of Georgia, East Florida; Alexander White, of Alabama, Utah; John Pettit, of Indiana, Kansas; John J. Jenkins, of Wisconsin, Puerto Rico. Walter I. McCoy, of New Jersey, has served as chief justice, Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; and Richard S. Whaley, of South Carolina, has served as chief justice of the United States Court of Claims.

John A. Bingham, of Ohio, was judge advocate of the Union Army and special judge advocate in the trial of the conspirators against the life of President Lincoln.

C. Frank Reavis, of Nebraska, and Louis E. Graham, of Pennsylvania, have served as Special Assistants to the Attorney General of the United States.

Thirty-four have served as United States attorneys: Charles J. Ingersoll, Joseph Hopkinson, Enoch Lincoln, Edward Livingston, John C. Wright, Samuel Beardsley, Gorham Parks, Balie Peyton, J. Ogden Hoffman, Samson Mason, James I. Roosevelt, John Pettit, Lucian Barbour, Noah Davis, Daniel W. Voorhees, Jasper D. Ward, Hugh J. Jewett, William P. Lynde, John C. Lehr, William Dorsheimer, Thomas M. Browne, Horatio Bisbee, Jr., William A. Stone, James M. Connally, John J. Jenkins, DeAlva S. Alexander, Henry D. Clayton, Martin W. Littleton, Frank Plumley, Andrew J. Montague, William C. Hammer, Louis E. Graham, James O. Brodhead, and William V. Gregory. William Dorsheimer has the unique distinction of having served as United States attorney for both the northern and southern districts of New York.

Three—John Dickey, of Pennsylvania; Gorham Parks, of Maine; and John J. Mitchell, of Massachusetts—have been United States marshalls.

Foster V. Brown, of Tennessee, has been attorney general of Puerto Rico.

Forty-nine have been United States Senators, namely: Richard Stockton, New Jersey; Israel Pickens, Alabama; James Pleasants, Virginia; James Fisk, Vermont; Daniel Webster, Massachusetts; Josiah Johnson, Louisiana; James Buchanan, Pennsylvania; Edward Livingston, Louisiana; William C. Rives and John S. Carlile, Virginia; John L. Kerr, Maryland; John Bell, Tennessee; Franklin Pierce, New Hampshire; Isaac Toucey, Connecticut; Thomas Corwin, Ohio; Hopkins L. Turney, Tennessee; Walter J. Colquitt, Georgia; James A. Pearce, Maryland; Garrett Davis, Kentucky; William Wilkins, Pennsylvania; John Pettit, Indiana; Stephen A. Douglass, Illinois; Richard Brodhead, Pennsylvania; Allen G. Thurman, Ohio; James Dixon, Connecticut; Asa Biggs, North Carolina; Preston King, New York; Isham G. Harris, Tennessee; George S. Houston, Alabama; George H. Pendleton, Ohio; James F. Wilson, Iowa; George S. Boutwell, Massachusetts; Daniel W. Voorhees, Indiana; Luke P. Poland, Vermont; William P. Frye, Maine; Eppa Hunter, Virginia; George F. Hoar, Massachusetts; Omar D. Conger, Michigan; Elbridge G. Lapham, New York; John W. Stewart, Vermont; Charles R. Buckalew, Pennsylvania; Joseph W. Bailey, Texas; Frederick H. Gillett, Massachusetts; Oscar W. Underwood, Alabama; George W. Norris, Nebraska; Thaddeus H. Caraway, Arkansas; M. M. Neely, West Virginia; John E. Miller, Arkansas; and John M. Robsion, Kentucky.

Thirty-seven have served as Governors of States and Territories, namely; Israel Pickens, Alabama; James Pleasants, Virginia; Robert Wright, Maryland; Robert Reed, Florida (Territory); Enoch Lincoln, Maine; Hutchins Burton, North Carolina; Robert P. Letcher, James Clark, Kentucky; Charles A. Wickliffe, Lieutenant Governor and Governor, Kentucky; Edward D. White, Louisiana; William W. Ellsworth, Connecticut; Francis Thomas, Maryland; Isaac Toucey, Connecticut; Joshua L. THE JURISDICTION OF THE COMMITTEE

The powers and dutes of the Committee on the Judiciary are fixed by section 4 of rule XI in the following words:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely:
Subjects relating * * *
4. To judicial proceedings, civil and criminal law: to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There has been no change in the form of this rule since its adoption in the revision of 1880. This occurred on January 6, 1880, and was then rule No. 83. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2d sess., 46th Cong., p. 205.)

From the date of the creation of this committee on December 7, 1813, until the aforesaid revision in 1880, the jurisdiction of the committee under rule No. 83 was determined—to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things touching judicial proceedings as shall be presented or may come in question and be referred to them by the House.

Under the foregoing rule of the House of Representatives which provides for the distribution of its business among the standing committees there is assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary all matters relating to impeachments, the establishment, jurisdiction, and procedure of Federal courts; crimes; penalties, and extradition; bankruptcy; Government contracts; the relation of the courts to labor and corporations; antitrust legislation; amendments to the Constitution of the United States; the rights and privileges of women; the settlement of boundary lines between a State and a Territory; and the regulation of the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

CHANGES IN MEMBERSHIP OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

The membership of the committee is fixed by section 4 of rule X—adopted April 5, 1911, first session, Sixty-second Congress, pages 11–86—in the following words:

There shall be elected by the House, at the commencement of each Congress, the following standing committees, viz: * * *
4. On the Judiciary, to consist of 25 members.

At the time of its creation the committee consisted of seven members—Journal, page 19, Annals, volume 1, page 32. The committee consisted of this number until 1833.

In the first session of the Twenty-third Congress, on Thursday, December 5, 1833, the following is stated:

Committees of the House, Mr. Hubbard again moved his amendments to the fifty-fifth rule, which fixes the number and size of the standing committees of the House, so as to make those formerly containing only seven members now to contain nine, and those consisting of three, now to consist of five members. The amendment was carried and the rule as amended was adopted. An order was passed for the appointment of standing committees. December 9 committee appointed.

The number remained the same until 1869, in the second session of the Forty-first Congress, when on December 9—Congressional Globe, page 62—Mr. Welker introduced a resolution authorizing the Speaker to assign Representatives admitted since organization of the present Congress to any of the committees as additional members.

On March 3, 1873, third session of the Forty-second Congress, a resolution was introduced by Mr. Banks amending the rules of the House so that the standing committees with 9 members are to have 13 members—Congressional Globe, page 2132.

On January 6, 1880, second session of the Forty-sixth Congress—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 10, page 203—a report was adopted fixing membership of committees at 15 from the time forward.

On August 21, 1893, first session of the Fifty-third Congress—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 25, page 554—Speaker announced the appointment of 17 members to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On April 5, 1911, first session of the Sixty-second Congress—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 47, pages 55–80—House Resolution 30 provided for increase of committee membership from 15 to 21.

On December 11, 1925, first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress:

On motion of Mr. Tilson, by unanimous consent,
Ordered, That the membership of the Committee on the Judiciary be increased from 22 to 23 members until March 2, 1927. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 66, p. 725.)

On December 12, 1927, first session of the Seventieth Congress—House Resolutions 53 and 54, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 69, page 491—election of 23 members of the Committee on the Judiciary announced.

On December 14, 1931, first session, Seventy-second Congress—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 75, page 465—House Resoution 54, providing for 23 members on the Committee on the Judiciary agreed to by the House.

On March 14, 1933, first session of Seventy-third Congress—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 77, page 43—House Resolution 43, providing for 25 members on Committee on the Judiciary agreed to by the House.

From the foregoing statement it appears that some of the changes in the size of the committee were effected by simply electing a larger number of members than prescribed by the current rule.

The present membership of the committee is 26, and in this membership 21 States are represented.

IMPEACHMENTS

Since, under the Constitution, impeachment proceedings must originate in the House of Representatives, and since the Committee on the Judiciary is the law committee of the House, all its members being lawyers, all matters of impeachment, and resolutions calling for investigation of such charges are referred by the House to the Committee on the Judiciary in the first instance.

In the nine impeachment proceedings which have resulted in trial, since the formation of the committee in 1813, the Committee on the Judiciary has done much to develop, clarify, and state the law of impeachment and in this respect has performed a great and lasting service to the country as a whole.

While the House of Representatives has the sole power of impeachment the Senate has the sole power to try all impeachments. However, the jurisdiction of the Senate does not attach until articles of impeachment have been exhibited to it by the House.

The several sections of the Constitution applicable to impeachment proceedings are hereinafter set out.

CONSTITUTION

Article I

Section 2, clause 5:

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers; and shall have the sole power of impeachments.

Section 3, clause 6:

The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. When sitting for that purpose, they shall be on oath or affirmation.

When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members present.

Clause 7:

Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than removal from office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit, under the United States; but the party convicted shall, nevertheless, be liable and subject to indictments, trial, judgments, and punishments according to law.

Article II

Section 4, clause 1:

The President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

GOOD BEHAVIOR

Article III

SECTION I. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services, a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

SEC. II. The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury.

NATURE OF IMPEACHMENT

On January 3, 1913, in the Senate sitting in the trial of the impeachment of Judge Robert W. Archbald, Mr. Manager Henry D. Clayton, of Alabama, submitted on behalf of the House of Representatives a brief from which the following is an excerpt:

THE GENERAL NATURE OF IMPEACHMENTS

The fundamental law of impeachment was stated by Richard Wooddeson, an eminent English authority, in his Law Lectures, delivered at Oxford in 1777, as follows (pp. 499 and 501, 1842 ad.):

"It is certain that magistrates and officers entrusted with the administration of public affairs may abuse their delegated powers to the extensive detriment of the community and at the same time in a manner not properly cognizable before the ordinary tribunals. The influence of such delinquents and the nature of such offenses may not unsuitably engage the authority of the highest court and the wisdom of the sagest assembly. The Commons, therefore, as the Grand Inquest of the Nation, became suitors for penal justice, and they cannot consistently, either with their own dignity or with safety to the accused, sue elsewhere but to those who share with them in the legislature.

"On this policy is founded the origin of impeachments which began soon after the Constitution assumed its present form.

* * * * * * *

"Such kinds of misdeeds, however, as peculiarly injure the commonwealth by the abuse of high offices of trust, are most proper—and have been the most usual—grounds for this kind of prosecution."

Referring to the function of impeachments, Rawle, in his work on the Constitution (p. 211) says:

"The delegation of important trusts affecting the higher interests of society is always from various causes liable to abuse. The fondness frequently felt for the inordinate extension of power, the influence of party and of prejudice, the seductions of foreign States, or the baser appetite for illegitimate emoluments are sometimes productions of what are not unaptly termed 'political offenses' (Federalist, No. 65), which it would be difficult to take cognizance of in the ordinary course of judicial proceeding.

"The involutions and varieties of vice are too many and too artful to be anticipated by positive law."

In Story on the Constitution (vol. 1, 5th ed., p. 584) the parliamentary history of impeachments is briefly stated, as follows:

"800. In examining the parliamentary history of impeachments it will be found that many offenses not easily definable by law, and many of a purely political character, have been deemed high crimes and misdemeanors worthy of this extraordinary remedy. * * * One cannot but be struck, in this slight enumeration, with the utter unfitness of the common tribunals of justice to take cognizance of such offenses, and with the entire propriety of confining the jurisdiction over them to a tribunal capable of understanding and reforming and scrutinizing the polity of the State, and of sufficient dignity to maintain the independence and reputation of worthy public officers."

Elmore Whitehurst, Esq., formerly clerk of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House and now assistant director, administrative office of the United States courts, in a brief prepared on this subject, has summed up, the nature of impeachments, in the following manner:

Impeachment came into our Constitution from England. There it was a criminal proceeding with all the accouterment of a criminal trial, and with a possible penalty upon conviction of a sentence of ignominious death with confiscation of property. When it reached the United States Constitution the criminal penalties were stripped from impeachment. Judgment upon conviction was limited to removal from office with a possible judgment barring the defendant from again holding office of trust or profit. Impeachment was changed from a criminal to a civil proceeding. Since there was no other precedents to guide, when the first impeachments came to trial in this country, English precedents naturally were followed. Thus it came about that for more than 150 years of our history the real nature of impeachment under our Constitution was obscured by confusion of thought brought about by the fact that impeachment proceedings were conducted as if they were criminal trials. The Judiciary Committee, particularly in recent years, has fought vigorously and successfully to establish general acceptance that impeachments in this country are not criminal trials but are solely ouster proceedings and should be tried as such.

Another very able statement of the nature of impeachment is found in the speech of Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS in the House, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 12, 1933.

Mr. Whitehurst has also set out the method of examination of impeachment charges, as follows:

It is the practice of the Judiciary Committee to make a preliminary informal examination of charges brought against judges. If, in the opinion of the committee, the action is warranted, a resolution is reported to the House authorizing and directing the committee to conduct an investigation of the charges and giving the power to subpena persons and papers. An exhaustive examination into the charges follows the adoption of the resolution by the House. Hearings are conducted before a subcommittee at which the accused and the accusers are accorded the privilege, usually exercised, to appear in person, to be represented by counsel, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. The accused may testify in his own behalf. The evidence is printed, and after full consideration in executive session the committee makes its report to the House. If the judgment of the committee is for impeachment, articles of impeachment are drafted and presented to the House with the committee report. After debate, the House votes on the question of impeachment. If an impeachment is voted by a majority of the House, managers are appointed to conduct the trial in the Senate. The managers are agents of the House. In practice they are named from members of the Judiciary Committee by the chairman, who presents the names to the House in a resolution, which is ordinarily agreed to without debate. The managers present themselves at the bar of the Senate and demand the impeachment of the accused in the name of the House of Representatives and of all of the people of the United States. A summons is issued to the accused to appear and answer. The Senate organizes itself into a court of impeachment, and the trial is held in the Senate Chamber. The managers conduct the prosecution, while the respondent, as the accused is termed, is represented by counsel of his own choosing.

IMPEACHMENTS

In the 151 years of this Nation's existence under the Constitution the Senate of the United States has sat as a Court of Impeachment in 12 cases.

Prior to the creation of the Committee on the Judiciary three of these had been disposed of, to wit:

That of William Blount, a Senator of the United States from Tennessee, in 1798–99; John Pickering, judge of the United States District Court for the District of New Hampshire, 1803–4; and that of Samuel Chase, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, 1804–5. The charges against Blount were dismissed for want of jurisdiction, Pickering was removed from office, and Chase acquitted.

The first Court of Impeachment to be held after the creation of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House in 1813 was that of James H. Peck, judge of the United States District Court for the District of Missouri. This trial lasted from Monday, April 26, 1830, to Monday, January 31, 1831.

The case of Judge Peck originated as a result of a memorial by an individual, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and was by that committee reported to the House with a recommendation in favor of impeachment.

On March 23, 1830, Mr. Buchanan, chairman of the committee, submitted a report from the Committee on the Judiciary recommending the impeachment of James H. Peck.

Judge Peck was impeached in a single article containing a number of specifications on the ground that he had grossly abused his power as a judge in sentencing an attorney to 24 hours' imprisonment and suspension from the bar of his court for 18 calendar months for writing and publishing a moderate criticism of one of Judge Peck's decisions in a case in which the attorney had appeared on behalf of the plaintiff, with the result that the attorney was practically prevented from further participation in the case. The respondent was acquitted by the Senate on all of the article presented against him on the ground that he was justified in assuming that he was legally clothed with the power that he had exercised, and that the element of malice had not been established. The vote was 22 to 21 against conviction.

Five managers were selected by ballot, three of whom were members of the Committee on the Judiciary; they were Mr. Buchanan, of Pennsylvania; Mr. Storrs, of New York; Mr. Wickliffe, of Kentucky; Mr. Spencer of New York; and Mr. McDuffie, of South Carolina, the three first named being members of the committee.

On April 26, 1830, Messrs. Buchanan and Storrs appeared before the bar of the Senate and impeached Judge Peck in the following manner, to wit:

Mr. President, we have been directed, in the name of the House of Representatives and of all the people of the United States, to impeach James H. Peck, judge of the District Court of the United States for the District of Missouri, of high misdemeanors in office, and to acquaint the Senate that the House of Representatives will in due time exhibit particular articles of impeachment against him and make good the same. We have also been directed to demand that the Senate take order for the appearance of the said James H. Peck to answer to said impeachment.

While Judge Peck was acquitted, nevertheless, as a result of this trial the act of March 2, 1831, defining and limiting the power of judges to punish for contempt was passed. It is entitled "An act declaratory of the law concerning contempt of court," and was enacted to remedy the wrongs this case disclosed. The history of this act is interesting and important. One of the main questions in the case was whether the power of the Federal courts to punish contempts was derivable from the common law or whether it was limited by the act of September 24, 1789, the seventeenth section of which provided that all the said courts of the United States—shall have power to administer all necessary oaths or affirmations, and to punish by fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of said courts, all contempts of authority in any cause or hearing before the same.

Upon the one hand, the contention was that the Federal courts were of limited jurisdiction, and unless a statute or constitutional provision could be found conferring power, no such power could be exercised. Upon the other hand, the claim was made with great vigor and zeal that all courts have the inherent right to protect themselves and to maintain their authority by punishing for contempt all who disturb the court or who directly or indirectly defy its orders and decrees or do anything to bring court or judge into disrepute. It was claimed that all the power to punish contempts of every kind possessed and exercised by the courts in England before the revolution was possessed by and could be lawfully exercised by the Federal courts. Nothing was settled by the result of the trial of Judge Peck. To meet the doubt and settle the uncertainty as to the power of the Federal courts to punish contempt, Mr. Draper, a Member of the House, introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire into the expediency of defining by statute all offenses which may be punished as contempt of the courts of the United States.

To which the following amendment was added:

And also to limit the punishment of the same. (Gales & Seaton, for 1831, p. 559.)

The act of 1831 was reported by Mr. Buchanan from the Committee on the Judiciary in pursuance of this resolution.

In the decision of the Supreme Court in Ex Parte Robinson (19 Wall. 211) there is found a very clear statement as to the nature and character of the offenses punishable under this act.

Following the foregoing impeachment trial which has been set out somewhat in detail came the impeachments of West H. Humphreys, judge of the United States District Court for the Middle, Eastern, and Western Districts of Tennessee; he was removed from office; the trial lasted from May 7, 1862, to June 26, 1862.

Next was that of Andrew Johnson, President of the United States; he was acquitted; the trial lasted from February 25, 1868, to May 26, 1868.

Next was that of William W. Belknap, Secretary of War; he was acquitted; the trial lasted from March 3, 1876, to August 1, 1876.

Next was that of Charles Swayne, judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Florida; he was acquitted; the trial lasted from December 14, 1904, to February 27, 1905.

Then followed the trial of Robert W. Archbald, additional circuit judge of the United States from the third judicial circuit and designated a judge of the United States Commerce Court; he was removed from office; the Senate sat as a court of impeachment from July 13, 1912, to January 13, 1913.

Next was that of George W. English, judge of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Illinois; he resigned from office November 4, 1926; the court of impeachment adjourned to December 13, 1926, when on request of the House managers, the impeachment proceedings were dismissed.

Next came the trial of Harold Louderback, judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California; he was acquitted; the trial lasted from May 15, 1933, to May 24, 1933.

The last time that the Senate sat as a court of impeachment was that of Halsted L. Ritter, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida; he was removed from office; the trial lasted from April 6, 1936, to April 17, 1936.

These trials have vastly changed the concept of the real nature of impeachments in this country, but due to their great length, the mass of testimony, the law, and the rulings, plus the fact that this history of the committee has already been prolonged to undue length, they are not separately discussed at this time.

It is a far cry from the year 1813 to the year 1940. From the little Nation of 18 States to one of 48; from a population of seven and one-fourth to one hundred and thirty-two millions. Yet this is the span of the committee's existence. A committee which existed before the advent of the railroad, the telegraph, the telephone, the wireless, the electric light, the airplane, the oceangoing steamship, the automobile, the truck, and the tractor. A committee which came into existence before the War of 1812 had ended. A committee whose first members were to see the Capitol burned, and whose later members were to pass through the Mexican, Civil, Spanish-American, and World Wars. A committee which has witnessed 9 amendments added to the Constitution of the United States.

Yet quietly, effectively, and surely it has done its work as one of the truly great committees of the House of Representatives. The statute books of the Nation are filled with the results of its labors, hundreds of decisions of the Federal courts have dealt with the bills it proposed and which finally became the laws of the land. No laws more important to the property, the liberties, and the lives of the citizens of this Nation come before the House of Representatives than those which are referred to its Committee on the Judiciary and which in turn that committee reports back to the House for its decision.

A great and important responsibility.

In writing the history of the committee, the thought has been simply to tell the story of its origin, to trace the public services of its members through the years, to invite attention to its jurisdiction, and to briefly mention a few of its legislative accomplishments.

This is only a foundation; to tell the complete story of the acts reported, together with the debates and legislative battles which ensued, will require a much longer statement.

As an illustration, on January 4, 1826, there began a debate on a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, by Daniel Webster, providing for three new circuits and three new associate judges which continued for 3 weeks, or until January 25. This is one of the great debates dealing with judicial organization, but, such are the limitations of time and space of the article that only a reference can be made to it here.

When the full story of the work of the Committee on the Judiciary is told it will be one of the most fascinating stories in the legislative history of the Congress.

SENATE

TUESDAY, APRIL 16, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, April 8, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named: Imbue us with the spirit of Thy dear Son, that we may understand His teachings and apply them wisely to the facts and circumstances of our daily life. In the midst of the world's confusion keep us steadfast in our faith, responsive in heart and mind, that we may rejoice in other people's joy and in every service we are called upon to render for the furtherance of truth. Bestow upon us all the gifts of kindness, generosity, courtesy, self-control, and, above all, those gifts that will engender happiness, freedom, and simplicity, gifts that will make our tired world grow young again. We ask it in the Saviour's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, April 15, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT RELATIVE TO SUGAR LEGISLATION

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by the President to Chairman JONES, of the House Committee on Agriculture, relative to sugar legislation. In view of the importance of this subject and the widespread interest in it, I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD at this point for the information of Senators.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE.
Washington, April 11, 1940.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to your recent letters to the Departments of State, Interior, and Agriculture, requesting comments on the various bills with respect to sugar which were introduced in the Seventy-sixth Congress and are now pending before the House Committee on Agriculture. In accordance with your request, and since your committee is now holding public hearings on these measures, it is believed that you may wish to have at this time a summary of our views on the basic issues of public policy which are involved in this group of bills.

In reviewing the present sugar situation I have been gratified to note the great improvement in conditions that has taken place since the adoption of the sugar program 6 years ago. Domestic sugar producers are fortunately receiving incomes at approximately the parity level, and they are enjoying a large volume of production. The losses of sugar processors in the years preceding the program have been converted into profits; child labor has been greatly reduced; wages and working conditions for labor have been improved, and there has been brought about an important and greatly needed recovery in the market for our surplus products in the foreign countries from which sugar is imported into the United States. Furthermore, the world price of sugar has increased substantially.

I also find that under the existing provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937, domestic sugar producers and processors will receive price protection through the quota system for the full calendar year of 1940, and that domestic sugar-beet and sugar-cane growers will receive benefit payments on their 1940 crops even though the marketings of the sugar may extend well over into 1941. The seaboard cane-sugar refiners are protected for an indefinite period against competition of Philippine refiners under terms of the Philippine Independence Act, and they will continue to enjoy quota protection from the competition of Cuban refiners for the full calendar year of 1940. The tax on sugar will remain in effect until July 1, 1941. Consequently, it seems clear that no sugar legislation is necessarily required at this session of the Congress although it might be advisable to extend the life of the Sugar Act of 1937 for an additional period through a joint resolution of the Congress.

In considering the questions raised by these bills, I find myself again confronted with the fact that the basic problem of good government inherent in sugar legislation is to balance, practically and fairly, the directly conflicting interests of the various groups of American citizens concerned; the producers of sugar and the producers of export commodities, the farmers and the processors, the employers and labor, and the industry as a whole and consumers and taxpayers. These requirements of the general welfare indicate that at least three fundamental aspects of the major bills on sugar now pending before the House Committee on Agriculture should be given special consideration:

In the first place, several of the proposals would unavoidably bring about an impairment of the export market for surplus American agricultural and industrial products, and they would do so at a time when increased export outlets are so greatly needed. It is to be regretted that each increased acre of domestic sugar-beet and sugar-cane production inevitably results in a contraction of our export markets in an amount equal to the value of the product of several acres of our principal agricultural crops. A decrease in sugar imports would, therefore, require an unnecessary and painful readjustment and contraction in our production of export commodities. It would also injure the economic status of other American republics, to which we must look in increasing degree for enlarged outlets for the products of our own labor, land, and factories. It would strike a serious blow, particularly at the foreign marketing of such important surplus farm commodities of the United States as corn-hog products, rice, wheat, and cotton.

In the second place, some of these bills would discard the established basis of distribution of quotas among the various sugar-producing areas that was carefully developed by the Congress after considerable labor. In its report to the Congress in 1937, your committee stated that the quotas had been arrived at "after careful consideration of the history of production in each area and its present and future capacity to market." I believe that we all appreciate readily the natural desire of each producing area to enlarge its share of the market, but it would be most difficult to justify an abandonment of the existing distribution of quotas in favor of a new and arbitrary basis of allotments. It is also clear that a reshuffling of domestic quotas so as to discriminate against producers in the domestic insular areas would, under the special circumstances, hardly be a conscionable procedure. The people of the Territory of Hawaii and the possessions of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are American citizens who compose some of those minority groups in our population with local governments that lack the protections of statehood. If this circumstance were not given adequate consideration, it would be possible to destroy by legislation the livelihood of our citizens in the insular parts of the United States through the enactment of discriminatory prohibitions against their products; and they would possess no legal power to take countermeasures in self-defense. Such a course of action, as I have pointed out on a previous occasion, would be tantamount to an imperialistic classification of citizens and a tyrannical abuse of minority rights that is utterly contrary to the American concept of fairness and democracy. Among the cases in point is the proposal to reinstate the former discrimination against the refining of sugar in the insular parts of the United States.

In the third place, the bills submitted to your committee include a proposal that would sacrifice the protection afforded consumers under existing legislation and substitute a sugar price standard requiring a reduction in total quota supplies to consumers to a point that would enhance sugar prices beyond the level required to give a majority of producers full parity returns. One of the principal objectives of the sugar program is to assure producers and others fair and reasonable incomes; but after that has been done, further increases in price would place an excessive burden of public protection for the sugar industry as a whole on agriculture, industry, consumers, and taxpayers.

Under the existing circumstances, with sugar producers enjoying approximately a parity level of income and a large volume of production, with labor being benefited by improved wages and working conditions, with sugar processors making substantial profits, and with a gratifying increase in our exports to foreign sugar-producing countries, I am confident that the House Committee on Agriculture will not recommend any bill that would impair the foreign outlets for our surplus products, run counter to the good-neighbor policy, discriminate among various groups of domestic producers and processors, or increase the burden on our consumers and taxpayers.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Hon. MARVIN JONES,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SUBCOMMITTEE TO STUDY OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE, FEDERAL OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE BENEFITS, ETC.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of a resolution adopted this morning by the Senate Finance Committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by Senate Finance Committee on April 16, 1940

Resolved, That the chairman of the committee is authorized to appoint a subcommittee of eight members, of whom three shall constitute a quorum, to make a full and complete study with respect to (1) the provisions of the Social Security Act, as amended, relating to old-age assistance and Federal old-age and survivors insurance benefits, and the Federal Insurance Contributions Act, (2) any bills relating to such matters referred to the committee during the Seventy-sixth Congress, and (3) any proposals dealing with related subjects which may be submitted to the subcommittee during the course of its study. The subcommittee shall report to the full committee as soon as practicable, together with its recommendations.

Mr. HARRISON. Pursuant to this resolution, I have appointed the following subcommittee:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], chairman; the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND].

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions of Painters Local Union No. 22 and Local Union No. 217, I. B. E. W., affiliated with the Ogden Building Trades Council, of Ogden, Utah, relative to the W. P. A. construction program, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FRAZIER presented the petition of 400 business and professional men, being citizens of Stark County, N. Dak., favoring the reemployment of 90 men dropped from the W. P. A. rolls and also no further curtailment in the number of workers employed under the W. P. A. in Stark County, N. Dak., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] had the floor; and it was the understanding that he would have recognition today.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the unfinished business at the close of yesterday was a bill to create additional circuit and district judgeships, as amended by the Senate. I joined with the majority leader and the minority leader in their desire to terminate proceedings as early as possible today; and I, myself, desire, in accordance of that understanding, to save all the time I can.

I have three amendments, which I send to the desk at one time, and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments will be stated at this time.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof "five"; and in line 15 to strike out "district of New Jersey."

Also, on page 2, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof "five", and in lines 14 and 15 to strike out "Southern district of California, district"; and insert in lieu thereof "District."

Also, on page 2, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof "five"; and on page 2, line 16, to strike out "eastern district of Pennsylvania."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, again to save time, I send to the desk and ask to have lie on the table, pending their insertion in the RECORD, three tables which I have prepared.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall talk from those tables, copies of which were distributed in the Senate Chamber last Friday. If any Member has not a copy of the table relating to any amendment in which he has an interest, I shall be very happy to supply him a copy at this time. I am taking this course, to which I hope no objection will be raised, in an effort to finish my discussion of the amendments in about a half hour. That will give Senators who entertain other views a chance to express those views. Furthermore, in connection with what I have said I wish to state that, in order to save time, I shall not ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendments, and I shall not raise any question of a quorum during the consideration of the amendments. I shall, however, move to recommit the bill after the amendments shall have been disposed of, and upon that motion I desire a record vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, these statements are before every Senator who desires to be informed. As I have repeatedly stated, I have caused an analysis to be made of the business of every district for which an additional judge is allowed by this bill. The first amendment relates to New Jersey. I desire very briefly to discuss the New Jersey situation.

Four judges are authorized in that district. The whole State of New Jersey is one district. For some time a vacancy existed in that district because of the failure of the President to appoint, due to the fact that he was unable to get the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] and the mayor of Jersey City, Mr. Frank Hague, to agree as to who should be appointed. However, that vacancy has been filled.

The salient points of the New Jersey statement as to the business of that district are as follows:

At the beginning of 1930 there were 895 criminal cases pending. Please bear in mind that there are four judges. On the 30th of June 1939 there were 480 cases on the docket, less than half of the number of cases of that particular class 10 years before.

Of civil cases to which the United States is a party, on June 30, 1930, there were 1,142 cases pending. On June 30, 1939, there were 412 such cases pending, about one-third of the number 10 years before.

Of other civil cases in which both parties are private citizens, and which by general agreement are the most important cases and take most of the time of the average court, in 1930 there were 796 cases pending, and on June 30, 1939, there were 588 cases pending. I do not refer to the bankruptcy cases, because they are largely handled by referees anyway, and it has been repeatedly stated by distinguished lawyers that as a rule bankruptcy cases do not require much of the time of the court.

Mr. President, I have shown the improvement in the business of the New Jersey district in 10 years. It is true that there was a congestion in that district along about 1934, 1935, and 1936; but that condition has steadily improved. For example, in 1935, there were 1,158 civil cases pending. In 1936 there were 1,185 civil cases pending. In 1937 there were 934 civil cases pending. In 1938 there were 635; and at the end of 1939, notwithstanding, there were only three judges there, because of the vacancy which was not filled, there were 588 civil cases pending. Since New Jersey presents a peculiar situation, I have asked the Attorney General's office to give us information as nearly up to date as he could supply it. The data show that, whereas on June 30 of last year, there were 480 criminal cases pending, an average of 120 for each judge. On February 29 this year, the last date for which I could obtain official reliable information, there were 401 cases pending, 100 cases for each judge. Of the United States civil cases, on June 30, the other statement shows, there were 401 cases pending, and on February 29 this year, there were 353 cases pending; that is, the average for each judge last June 30 was 103, and the average for each judge on February 29, this year, was 88. The number of the other civil cases has slightly increased, from 588 to 641, which means an increase for each judge of from 147 to 155.

Mr. President, I ask consent to have a copy of the statement, which is taken from the records of the Attorney General's office, inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks, together with the long statement which I send to the desk, so far as it relates to New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Authority: Reports of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD two editorials from the Newark News dealing with this judgeship situation. I am not a lawyer; I am a newspaperman, and I know more about newspapermen, thank God, than I do about lawyers. The Newark News is the largest newspaper in New Jersey, and among newspapers has a very high reputation for integrity, and for fidelity to the public interest. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the editorials to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Newark Evening News of March 18, 1940]

THAT FIFTH JUDGE

Pressure for the creation of a fifth United States district court judge for New Jersey has been constant for the last 2 years. This pressure has come from within the Congress and from without. These previous attempts to add to the judicial establishment failed. But now the House has adopted and sent to the Senate an omnibus bill, designed by and for logrollers, under the provisions of which 10 new judges would be appointed, 1 of whom would be assigned to New Jersey. The chief argument for the new judgeship in this State is that criminal and civil dockets are congested "alarmingly."

Crowded calendars may be attributed directly to the delay in appointing a successor to Judge Clark on the district bench. And what and who were responsible for that delay? Politics and politicians, namely, Senator SMATHERS and Mayor Hague. They could not agree on a nominee, and so 18 months intervened between Judge Clark's elevation and the appointment of Judge Walker as his successor. Meantime cases accumulated, and the very delay which had its origin in politics has been used by Democratic Congressmen from New Jersey to help steer the omnibus bill through the House.

As to those congested dockets, Senior Judge Biggs, of the third circuit, has assigned three members of his court to sit in New Jersey and to dispose of 200 pending criminal cases. Judge Biggs himself is sitting in Camden to facilitate clearance. Judges from districts less pressed might be brought into the jurisdiction to dispose of civil litigation.

Why, then, a fifth judge?

[From the Newark Evening News of April 5, 1940]

THAT "RIDICULOUS" JUDGESHIP

Senator REED (Republican), of Kansas, objects to the House omnibus bill creating 10 new Federal judges, of which 1 would go to New Jersey—a fifth district judgeship here, for which no convincing need has been shown. The Kansas Senator told the Senate that an additional judgeship in New Jersey was "ridiculous, because Senator SMATHERS intimated on the Senate floor that a Federal judgeship there was vacant for almost a year because SMATHERS and Frank Hague couldn't agree on an appointment."

Just so. Mr. REED points out that there have been ninety-odd judges appointed under the Hoover and Roosevelt administrations, and that "I'm going to fight this thing every way I know how." Of the creation of judgeships there seems to be no end.

As concerns New Jersey, the question recurs: Why a fifth judge? Senator REED has the answer—logrolling.

Mr. REED. As I stated, Mr. President, I am trying to save the time of the Senate so that Senators who desire to get away may be able to do so promptly. Without asking for a roll call upon the amendment relating to the New Jersey court, I wish to proceed to discuss the southern California amendment. I am doing this only for the purpose of saving time, and in the hope of accommodating Senators on the other side.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Whatever the Senator may say is agreeable to me. The Senator is secure from my prejudice. Any one who fights so fairly and vigorously as does the Senator from Kansas is secure from my prejudice at least.

Mr. REED. I thank the gracious Senator from Arizona very much for his kindness. He is always kind. What I am trying to do now is to save the time of the Senate.

Among the statements I have sent to the desk is one which shows the business of the court of the southern district of California. I invite the particular attention of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to this. He went to California and made a report to the Committee on the Judiciary. Has the Senator a copy of this statement?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; the Senator from Kansas gave me a copy quite early.

Mr. REED. I have tried to supply every Senator who might have any interest in the matter with a copy so that he might secure any information he desired.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is now discussing the California case?

Mr. REED. I shall proceed to discuss the California matter. Of course, we are hoping no one will make any very long speeches, because if that happens I am afraid we will not get away by 1:30.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator knows that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary laid certain burdens on its various members, and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], a member of the committee, was appointed by the chairman of the committee to go to California to make an investigation. At great trouble to himself he performed that task in a most commendable way. The work he did was laborious, and he submitted to the committee quite an elaborate report.

While I happen to know much about the need for an additional judge in southern California, I have no such wealth of information on the subject, as has the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who, at the proper time, I am sure, will secure recognition and lay before the Senate the various facts.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada and I discussed this matter on the floor last year. I stated then that I made no objection to the provision for an additional judge for southern California. I do make an objection now.

Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Arizona, being one of his constituents, that I have been in Los Angeles many times myself, and I know the lights there are bright and dazzling, and they might confuse the eyes of even an honest man. The fact is, the more honest he is the more dazzled he is likely to be. I have been greatly dazzled myself. It is barely possible that the Senator from Nevada may have been.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I beg the Senator not to ask me to yield. I am trying to save the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. REED. I am not declining out of any desire to be discourteous. I join the majority and minority leaders in seeking to have the matter concluded by 1:30.

If I may have the privilege, or if the Senator from Connecticut may have it, if he prefers, my wish is that when we offer a motion to recommit, which we shall do, there may be about 10 minutes for discussion. Therefore I am trying to conclude with the discussion of the amendments by, say, 1:15 or 1:20.

In southern California there are seven judges. Congress has been giving the southern district of California an additional judge about every year or every other year, until there are now seven judges in that district. I shall read the figures as to the maximum number of cases in that district in any year in the last 10 years, and the condition of the docket on June 30 last. This is the best information I have been able to obtain.

I do not contend, any more than does Judge Otis, that it is possible absolutely to determine the work of a district or of a number of judges by the number of cases. It is a broad, sweeping kind of measurement. As Judge Otis well said, it will not measure one thirty-second of an inch, but it will measure a mile, and we have traveled many miles in allowing additional judges for southern California.

Mr. President, I shall start on the table of figures which is on the desk, and I ask the Chair to recall that I should like to have the tables printed in the order in which I discuss the various districts. Otherwise I would have kept them separate.

I ask that the statement as to California be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Authority: Reports of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the highest number of criminal cases in the last 10 years pending on the docket in southern California was in 1931, when 631 such cases were pending. At the end of the last fiscal year 196 were pending.

If we take United States civil cases, we find that the highest number of such cases pending at any one time was in 1932. At the end of the last fiscal year 233 were pending. The highest number of civil cases pending at any time was in 1932, when 1,080 were pending.

I now wish to read a statement of the figures, by years, of the civil cases, which everyone agrees comprise the most important business a Federal court has to handle. In 1932 there were 1,072 such cases; in 1933 there were 1,018, and in 1934 there were 773.

In connection with the statement to which I am referring an explanation is necessary for 1935. We found an error in the records of the Attorney General, and the officials of his office agreed that it was an error. It is one of those things which just happen. So two figures are used, and I wish to be fair and read them both. The statement furnished by the Attorney General's office, which I think is in error in this particular, shows that there were 673 cases in 1935. The correct number, which upon analysis the Department of Justice agreed with my secretary, who went over the matter, was correct, was 656. Be that as it may, there is not much difference.

In 1936 there were 530 United States civil cases. In 1937 there were 445; in 1938 there were 328, and in 1939 there were 233.

I had intended to read figures as to the other civil cases. The highest figure of the purely civil cases, in which both parties were civil litigants, was in 1932, when there were 1,080 such cases.

In 1933 there were 1,056; in 1934 there were 1,024; in 1935 there were 993; in 1936 there were 791; in 1937 there were 677, and in 1938 there were 547.

At the end of the last fiscal year, with 7 judges, there were 461 civil cases pending. Can anyone, I do not care whether he be a United States Senator, or a member of the F. B. I., or a prosecuting attorney, or judge, or anyone else, find necessity for adding to 7 judges, when, as shown by the dockets in that district last year there were pending only 196 criminal cases, 233 United States civil cases, and 461 purely civil cases?

The improvement in the California situation, with the addition of the judges already allowed, has been remarkable. I inform the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the Senator in charge of the bill that probably later in the session I shall bring up a further study of this situation. There are districts in the United States with two and three judges which have more business than has the southern California district with seven judges. I have disregarded the bankruptcy cases. They are heard by referees. But I want to say to the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and the very able Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] that we did not fail to look into that. We found a number of districts with three or four judges which had more bankruptcy cases pending than did the southern California district with seven judges.

Mr. President, I now want to discuss the third amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, does the Senator wish to be interrupted? I desire to give a few enlightening statements to the Senate pertaining to the southern California district. I do not care to interrupt the Senator unless he would prefer an interruption at this time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I said that I presented these three amendments together rather than separately merely to save the time of the Senate. The Senator from Nevada can make his statement in his own time, or he may interrupt me now if he chooses.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think the Senator would be very much enlightened by an authentic statement made by one of the judges of the district of southern California while every judge of the district was present. The statement was made on the 15th day of May 1939, at which time I made the investigation with respect to the district of southern California. I wish to read the statement of cases and proceedings then pending made by the presiding judge, Judge James, whose integrity is beyond all question.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Nevada understands, does he not, that the figures I have used in every case have been obtained from the Department of Justice.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand that; but I am going to give to the Senate first-hand, from an authentic source, the very best evidence that can be obtained. I read Judge James' statement as follows:

Judge JAMES. If the other judges have covered the ground, I want to give just a few figures. I have prepared a statement showing the filings for a year of civil and criminal. In connection with that, I have a little statement here which I will ask the reporter to copy into the record and then I won't need to go into it particularly.

(The statement above referred to is as follows:)

"STATEMENT OF CASES AND PROCEEDINGS FILED IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA FROM MAY 1, 1938, TO MAY 1, 1939

"Civil (including equity)	731
"Criminal	772
"Total civil and criminal	1,503
"Reorganization	28
"Bankruptcy	2,643
"Total	2,671
"Total cases filed	4,174

"Estimates of the time required to handle the 1,503 civil and criminal cases filed for the year from May 1, 1938, to May 1, 1939, may be made with approximate certainty as to the result. First, calculating the available trial days in a year, we exclude Mondays, as the law and motion calendars and all short matters are heard by each of the judges on that day; then, if we calculate the remaining open week time up to Saturday noon, it will show the total available trial time for each judge to be 220 days in a year (excluding the month of August, which is considered a vacation month).

"Now, if the court were supplied with 7 judges, the total trial time available for all judges would amount to 1,540 days in the year. Many cases, such as the numerous patent suits on the civil side, and mail-fraud cases on the criminal side, often occupy weeks of a judge's time. The general average of the ordinary civil trial would be at least 2 days; hence it is fair to estimate that 7 judges would try 770 cases per year. With a total of 1,503 civil and criminal cases filed during the past year, it is quite apparent that that number could not be disposed of under 1½ years, making due allowance for the number that would not reach trial.

"Judges should be allowed reasonable periods off the bench to work in chambers on submitted cases and matters. In patent cases, especially, there are invariably offered many prior patents, and hours of time are required to study and analyze them. Tax suits by and against the United States require much study as well. If hasty decisions are made, the appeals will be increased in number, and reversals will be more frequent, with the result that second trials must be had. There is great need, too, that the judges be provided with law secretaries, who could aid greatly in handling chamber work.

"Regular trial sessions of the court are held twice each year at Fresno and San Diego, with intervening motion days. These sessions at a minimum will each last from 4 to 7 weeks. Our district includes the 17 southern counties.

"In the above no account has been taken of reorganization matters under the Bankruptcy Act, or bankruptcy proceedings proper. It is the common experience of the judges that reorganization proceedings occupy far more than a total of 3 or 4 days of a judge's time. In the bankruptcy matters, while the referees conduct the larger part of the administration, there are constantly review proceedings brought from orders made by the referees, and these proceedings take up a great deal of time in the aggregate."

In that respect the judge made no mention of the cases that would normally be filed during the year while these 1,503 cases were being tried.

Let me draw to the attention of the able Senator from Kansas the fact that for amount of business the southern district of California has no equal in the United States. It has a population which, in my opinion, the census will show to be very close to 5,000,000. It has varied industries, and for some reason or other it has had more than its share of mail-fraud cases. That is probably due to the rapid influx of population.

Mr. President, I am not boosting southern California. I am presenting to the able Senator from Kansas only the result of a careful study made by me of the situation there as regards the business of the Federal court. I have here—and I wish it might be inserted in the RECORD—a copy of the proceedings conducted by me in California when every one of the trial judges of the Federal court in the southern district of California was present and gave his statement, which reveals to the Senate that the southern district of California could not only use 8 judges but it could use 10 judges, because the business warrants such an addition to the number of judges.

Let me say to the able Senator from Kansas that human endurance is a thing which reaches a limit. When a man is placed on the bench or in his chambers and he is expected to work from 12 to 18 hours a day, one cannot expect him to carry on at that rate interminably. Human nature gives out after a time.

I have a statement in my hand which shows that the seven judges now on the Federal bench in the southern district of California, which extends from the northern line of Fresno County in central California to the Mexican line in southern California, are working from 15 to 18 hours a day. Such hours of work simply cannot be continued. Why make slaves out of public servants who render the highest degree of efficient service in all the intricacies of our Government?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the Senator from Nevada if the work performed by the judges of this country relates only to quantity of work and hours, or does quality have some relation to it?

Mr. McCARRAN. Most certainly, if the Senator from Kansas will pardon me again, the quality of work is all important. Let me draw to the attention of the able Senator from Kansas a chapter of history which applies to southern California, when the district courts were called upon to try and determine the legality of certain oil claims in southern California, in which the Federal Government was involved. Some of those cases took many weeks to try. So quality in matters of that kind speaks far more than quantity. I say again to the able Senator from Kansas, for whose solicitude in this regard I have great respect, that southern California should have 10 trial judges instead of 8.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, frequent reference has been made to the report of the judicial conference, and it has been very frequently and freely stated by the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who does not happen to be present in the Chamber at the moment, and by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] that the Judiciary Committee has not been able to follow entirely the recommendations of the judicial conference.

In that attitude I concur, and I wish to give the reason for doing so.

The next phase of the question which I shall discuss—having to do with the last of the three amendments which I sent to the desk—is the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

On page 5 of the report of the judicial conference, at its September session, 1939, the conference reported as follows:

> The Attorney General also states that the following districts, which showed arrears a year ago, now report that the dockets are current.

Mr. President, after declaring that the docket in the eastern district of Pennsylvania was up to date—using the language, "now reports that the dockets are current"—on page 7 the judicial conference recommends an additional judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. I do not care if the recommendation is made by the Chief Justice of the United States and the senior circuit judges; those two things are inconsistent. On one page there is a finding that the docket of a district is up to date, and on the second page following there is a recommendation for an additional judge for that district.

I do not blame the Judiciary Committee for not taking the recommendation of the judicial conference. I do not wish to repeat, but I have referred to Judge Otis' comment that the judicial conference itself is frequently misled, because it is human. We have a direct example from the last report of the regular conference. I think an extra session has been held since that time, which has nothing to do with this question.

The judicial conference, presided over by the Chief Justice, meets in September every year, and last September it found that the business in the eastern district of Pennsylvania was current, and yet on the second page following it recommends an additional judge.

I do not know how to reconcile those things. I can well understand that the Committee on the Judiciary may have difficulty.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the table relating to Pennsylvania printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The table is as follows:

Authority: Reports of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have repeatedly told the same story. I am under no illusions. There are sufficient votes on the other side to defeat all my amendments, and that is perfectly all right with me. All I am doing is making a record for the information of the people of the United States, to the very best of my ability, without any prejudice or bias, and without any feeling except a general knowledge that we have about 25 more district judges than we need.

I hope that when the administrator appointed by the Supreme Court goes into action—and I have conferred with his office in this connection—it will be possible so to arrange the work of the various courts so that it may be carried on without delay, without confusion, and with a smaller number of judges than we now have. I cannot reconcile my conscience to allowing additional judges, when during the past 20 years we have allowed 87 additional district judges and 22 additional circuit judges, although litigation has declined in that time, and although there is today, on the docket of every district for which the bill provides an additional judge, less business than at any time in 10 years. How in heaven's name we are justified in authorizing additional judges, I cannot understand.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a few figures in connection with the Pennsylvania situation, and then I shall yield the floor to Senators who do not agree with me.

I ask unanimous consent that at 1:20 o'clock p. m. I may have 10 minutes in which to discuss the motion to recommit. I shall conclude in 2 or 3 minutes, and Senators who are opposed to me may have the remainder of the time until 1:20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the junior Senator from Kansas that, beginning at 1:20 o'clock he be given 10 minutes to discuss a motion to recommit the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have done my part today. I have gone as fast as I could.

With respect to criminal cases in the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the high-water mark was reached in 1933, when national prohibition was in effect. There were 686 cases pending. On June 30 last there were 184 cases pending. That district has 4 judges, and the recent vacancy there has been filled.

With respect to United States civil cases, the high-water mark was reached in 1930, when 595 cases were pending at the end of the fiscal year. Let me read the figures on United States civil cases for the past 4 years. In 1936 there were 332 pending at the end of the year; in 1937, 323; in 1938, 209; and in 1939, 215. That is a little more than 50 cases pending for each judge. No judge in a district of any consequence can ever get his docket clear. If he does not have more than 50 cases on his docket, he probably feels lost.

With respect to other civil cases, I show on this statement the business for 10 years. The high-water mark was reached in 1936, when 1,598 cases were pending at the end of the fiscal year. At the end of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1939, there were 1,283 cases pending. That is the lowest number that has been pending in the eastern district of Pennsylvania in any year since, including 1930.

In order to bring the matter a little closer down to date, I asked the Department of Justice to bring it down to February 29, as it has done in the case of New Jersey. I find a startling improvement in the condition. I am now reading the total number of cases pending on February 29 for 4 judges. There were 259 criminal cases, 194 United States civil cases, and 837 other civil cases, a reduction of more than 400 between July 1 of last year and February 29 of this year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this table be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Cases pending in United States District Court, District of Eastern Pennsylvania, 4 judges

	Criminal		United States civil		Other civil		Bankruptcy
	Total cases	Average per judge	Total cases	Average per judge	Total cases	Average per judge	Total cases	Average per judge

Authority: Reports of the Department of Justice.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, these are the figures of the Department of Justice, and not my own.

I now yield the floor.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I wish to take only about 3 minutes to answer the 3-day speech of my distinguished colleague from Kansas.

I marvel at the audacity, the temerity, and the impertinence of the junior Senator from Kansas. He comes across the continent, from the great wheat fields of Kansas, screaming that he is "the United States Senator of the United States," and asks us——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I did not say that. I said I was a United States Senator of the United States, which I thought included New Jersey; and I still say it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is out of order.

Mr. REED. Not on a question of personal privilege, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may not take another Senator from the floor on a question of personal privilege.

Mr. REED. I am not taking him from the floor. I merely wished to say what I have said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is out of order. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. SMATHERS. When the Senator from New Jersey asked the Senator from Kansas if he did not think his Republican colleague, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], knew more about what New Jersey needed in the way of a new judge than did the Senator from Kansas, the Senator from Kansas replied, according to the RECORD, that he was "the" or "a"—I do not care which—United States Senator of the United States, and therefore a Senator of New Jersey.

I do not recall ever having seen the name of the junior Senator from Kansas on the ballots of New Jersey, and I do not expect to see his name there this fall.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Kansas comes into my State and to the New Jersey Bar Association that has recommended an additional judge in New Jersey, he says, "I am not a lawyer, but hold on; you do not need a new judge, and I will proceed to tell you why." He comes into the State of New Jersey and says to his Republican colleague, who joins in the request that New Jersey may have sufficient judges, "Hold on, while you are elected by the people of the State of New Jersey, you do not need a new judge in New Jersey, and I will tell you why." And he says to the three Republican judges in my State of New Jersey, who have met and adopted a resolution urging that the Congress provide them with an additional judge, "Hold on, you do not need a new judge, and I will tell you why."

Mr. President, in the olden days, according to the Bible, wise men came out of the east, but after listening to this all-American roving Senator from Kansas I am sure that they now come out of the West.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate further. A bill similar to this having passed this body once, this bill having passed the House and being supported by my Republican colleague and by the three Republican United States district court judges in my State who are today urging that an additional judge be provided, I am satisfied that this bill will pass, notwithstanding the 3-day speech we have heard from my distinguished colleague, the great roving Senator from the State of Kansas. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire what is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

Mr. REED. Before that is done, may I suggest that we take a separate voice vote on each of the three amendments?

Mr. SMATHERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. Just a moment. I do not yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the pending amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 2, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof "five"; and in line 15, to strike out "district of New Jersey."

Mr. McNARY. I assume that debate is about to be concluded on this amendment; so I yield to the able Senator from New Jersey to make his suggestion.

Mr. SMATHERS. I thank the Senator. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Sheppard
Austin	Frazier	Lodge	Shipstead
Bailey	George	Lucas	Slattery
Bankhead	Gibson	Lundeen	Smathers
Barbour	Gillette	McCarran	Stewart
Barkley	Green	McKellar	Taft
Bone	Guffey	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Gurney	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Hale	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Harrison	Minton	Tobey
Byrnes	Hatch	Murray	Townsend
Capper	Hayden	Neely	Tydings
Caraway	Herring	Norris	Vandenberg
Chandler	Hill	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Chavez	Holman	Overton	Wagner
Connally	Holt	Pepper	Walsh
Danaher	Hughes	Reed	White
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Russell
Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators having answered the roll call, a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 2, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof "five", and in lines 14 and 15 to strike out "southern district of California district" and insert in lieu thereof "district."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 2, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof "five", and on page 2, line 16, to strike out "eastern district of Pennsylvania."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, at the end of the bill, it is proposed to insert a new section, to read as follows:

A vacancy occurring in the office of any circuit judge or district judge appointed pursuant to this act shall not be filled unless the Congress shall so provide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

After the date of enactment of this act, the salary of the judge of the District Court of the Virgin Islands of the United States shall be at the rate of $10,000 a year.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the salary of every district judge in the United States, and in the insular possessions, and in the Federal Court for China is $10,000 per annum. One judge, and one only—namely, the Federal district judge for the Virgin Islands—receives $7,500.

The Federal district judge for the Virgin Islands, Judge Herman E. Moore, is a Negro. He is a very highly educated man. He has served with credit to himself and to those who employed him in every capacity in which he was employed. He is a graduate of Boston Law School, with a long line of experience. He carries on the court work in the Virgin Islands, sitting in two places down there, and carries it on expeditiously and to the credit of the Federal court. So far as I can see, there is no reason why there should be any discrimination in pay. In my judgment, color makes no difference when efficient service is rendered. Therefore I have offered this amendment, so that the judge of the Virgin Islands Federal Court shall receive the same salary as any other Federal judge—no more, no less.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Nevada has investigated the matter. I ask him a question for information. Is it the Senator's information that the various district judges in the Territories and other possessions of the United States receive $10,000 a year, as do district judges on the mainland?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is my information.

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Senator is well informed on that subject. If that be true, while I have not expected or wished any amendments of this nature on the bill, I am decidedly for the amendment since the question has been raised.

As the Senator says, it is true that the judge in the Virgin Islands is a colored man. I happen to know that he is a learned man. He is a sound jurist, a man of high character. If it be true—and I take the Senator's word for it—that the judges in other Territories or possessions of the United States receive $10,000 a year, there is no reason for the present apparent discrimination against the judge in the Virgin Islands.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me be very frank with the Senate and state that my investigation of the matter was hurried. If I should be wrong, the conference may eliminate the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. It may go to conference, and there the matter may be looked into.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask a question of some Senator? Has there been any change in the general pay of these judges during the past 3 or 4 years?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; not during the past 10 years.

Mr. HARRISON. I know that a very estimable gentleman from my State served as judge in the Virgin Islands for several years, and I am sure his record will compare quite favorably with that of the present occupant of the office. I do not see any reason why the salary should be increased at this time. I know that the other judge received $7,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the floor now goes to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary status?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary status is that the Senate has agreed to give the floor to the junior Senator from Kansas at 1:20 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. That will not prevent the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] from being voted on at 1:30?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; his motion will be disposed of at 1:30.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this matter came up a year ago on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], a member of the Judiciary Committee, to recommit the bill of last year, which was identical with the bill of this year. I wish the Senator from Connecticut were present. He is still a member of the Judiciary Committee. He told me yesterday that he is in favor of recommitting the bill; but I intended to ask him, as a member of the committee, to make the motion to recommit.

The main reason which was urged last year and this year was, first, that last year we passed a law authorizing and creating a new position—that of an administrator, to be appointed by the Supreme Court—and providing, as has been brought out in this discussion, in order better to conduct the affairs of the Federal courts, that judges may be temporarily moved from one district where they are not busy to another district where they are overloaded. If I may interpret the act liberally, the purpose was to find a better way than constantly imposing additional burdens upon the taxpayers to take care of this declining volume of litigation.

I have not done anything that I have done, last year or this year, out of any personal feeling. Notwithstanding the deputy sheriff—I beg your pardon, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey—nothing that I have done has been done out of any feeling except a desire to serve the public interest. This year, when the matter came up to us in exactly the same form in which it came up last year——

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I desire to say that I resent the remark of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will state his point of order.

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator from Kansas is trying to be funny at the expense of one of his colleagues, and I think it entirely improper and out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey does not have the floor, the Senator from Kansas does have the floor, and unless the Senator from Kansas yields, the Chair is not in position to take him off the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish the majority leader were present. I think I have done a good job in saving the time of the Senate, and living up to the agreement we made yesterday, to be ready to vote at 1:30, and that at 1:30 we would begin to vote on the bill and all amendments. I have waived making any quorum calls or doing anything which would result in delay. The only quorum call that has been had was not at my suggestion, but at the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. President, as a part of the understanding we had last night, I shall ask that upon either the motion to recommit or the final passage of the bill, and I am not particular which, we shall have a record vote. I hope my friends on the other side—and all on the other side except about one are my friends—will be generous enough to give us the yeas and nays.

It is my earnest belief that, instead of passing the bill, we should recommit it to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to investigate further the need for additional judges in the light of what has developed, for we must remember—and the Senator from New Mexico has been candid and fair about it—that the bill we are considering today is identical with the bill which was before the Senate a year ago, and since then much water has gone over the dam. The volume of litigation has constantly declined, and the condition of the docket in every district has improved.

Under these conditions it is not good business to vote for additional Federal judges. The Senator from Arizona and the Senator from New Mexico stated—I wish to quote them correctly, and I am sure they will correct me if I do not—that they have had no hearings on the bill this year, that they merely wrote into the bill as it passed the House, which we are considering, the bill which was passed by the Senate last year. I am correct, am I not?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REED. It will have to be for only about half a minute.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to answer the Senator's question, and to ask leave to put into the RECORD a statement from the judicial conference as to these judges. Will the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I answer the Senator's question in the affirmative by saying that we held no hearings this year. Our hearings were held last year. We thought the work we did last year was well performed, and we were willing to stand on it this year.

With the permission of the Senator from Kentucky, in view of the fact that I will not have a further opportunity——

Mr. REED. I trust the Senator will not offend the majority leader by saying I am from Kentucky. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. I mean Kansas. I was thinking of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], who is presiding at this time, and who I know would very much prefer to be on the floor in order that he might say a word in behalf of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], but the Senator from Kentucky is presiding.

With the permission of the Senator from Kansas, I wish to say that all the judges included in the bill, with the exception of the judge for Florida, have been recommended by the judicial conference, presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States. It is true that as to the judge for the sixth circuit the recommendation was changed. With the Senator's permission I should like to insert the report of the judicial conference at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF THE JUDICIAL CONFERENCE, SEPTEMBER SESSION, 1939

The judicial conference provided for in the act of Congress of September 14, 1922 (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 218), convened on September 28, 1939, and continued in session for 3 days. The following judges were present in response to the call of the Chief Justice:

First circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Scott Wilson.
Second circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Learned Hand.
Third circuit, Senior Circuit Judge John Biggs, Jr.
Fourth circuit, Senior Circuit Judge John J. Parker.
Fifth circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Rufus E. Foster.
Sixth circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Xenophon Hicks.
Seventh circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Evan A. Evans.
Eighth circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Kimbrough Stone.
Ninth circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Curtis D. Wilbur.
District of Columbia, Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner.

The senior circuit judge for the tenth circuit, Judge Robert E. Lewis, was unable to attend, and his place was taken by Circuit Judge Orie L. Phillips.

The Attorney General and the Solicitor General, with their aides, were present at the opening of the conference.

State of the dockets—number of cases begun, disposed of, and pending in the Federal district courts: The Attorney General submitted to the conference a report of the condition of the dockets of the district courts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, as compared with the previous fiscal year. Each circuit judge also presented to the conference a detailed report, by districts, of the work of the courts in his circuit.

The report of the Attorney General disclosed the following comparison of cases commenced and terminated during the fiscal years 1937 and 1938:

	Commenced		Terminated
	1938	1939	1938	1939
Criminal	34,099	34,701	34,214	35,588
Civil	33,409	33,531	38,155	37,463
Bankruptcy	57,306	50,997	57,303	52,102

For every year since 1932 the conference has noted a decrease, more or less pronounced, in the number of cases pending in the district courts. The figures for the year ending June 30, 1939, show a continuation of this trend:

Pending cases	1938	1939
Criminal cases	10,896	10,009
United States civil cases	11,285	9,593
Private suits	24,587	22,347
Bankruptcy cases	54,277	53,172
Total	101,045	95,121

It will be observed that there has been some increase in the number of criminal cases filed and terminated. But the increase in the number terminated has been greater than the increase in the number filed. The result is some reduction in the number of cases pending at the end of the year, this amounting to almost 9 percent.

There is an increase of 122 civil cases in the number filed during the year ending June 30, 1939, as compared with the preceding year. This difference is little more than negligible. And it appears that during the past year and the preceding year the number of civil cases terminated was approximately 4,000 in excess of the number filed so that there has been a steady decrease in the number of pending cases.

Taking together the United States civil cases and private suits, the total number of civil cases pending at the end of the fiscal year 1937 was 40,618; in 1938, 35,872; and in 1939, 31,940. This decrease in the volume of pending cases is probably due, the Attorney General suggests, to the increase in the number of judges.

There has been a marked reduction in the number of bankruptcy cases filed during the last fiscal year. But as there has been a similar diminution in the number of proceedings concluded, the reduction in the number of pending cases is much less than the diminution in the number filed.

Arrearages: Delays in the disposition of cases: There has been a marked reduction in the arrears of civil cases as disclosed by the tabular statement submitted by the Attorney General. It is thus shown that on June 30, 1939, 65.3 percent of civil cases had been pending 6 months or over, as against 67 percent in 1938; 45.6 percent had been pending 1 year or over, as against 50.2 percent in 1938; 25.1 percent for 2 years or over, as against 32 percent in 1938; 17.3 percent for 3 years or over, as against 22 percent in 1938; 12.1 percent for 4 years or over, as against 16 percent in 1938; and 9.4 percent had been pending 5 years or over, as against 13 percent a year ago.

We pointed out last year in considering the tabular statement submitted that to obtain a true picture of the state of judicial work it was necessary to consider the reasons why cases had been pending for a considerable time and not simply the number set forth. There are many reasons for the pendency of cases which do not involve inordinate delays. Thus, as we said last year, cases may be held to await a decision in some other jurisdiction, which would make a trial unnecessary or affect the rights involved, or to await the result of negotiations for settlement; foreclosure suits may be suspended by moratorium or redemption statutes; the litigation may be ancillary to that in another jurisdiction or there may be an injunction restraining proceedings; or cases may be held awaiting appeals.

It cannot be too often emphasized that judicial statistics require analysis and knowledge of the circumstances to which they relate, and while they may, in a general sense, be of value to show a trend, they often afford an inadequate basis for a just conclusion. When the present report was received, several of the senior circuit judges made inquiries to ascertain the actual reasons for the delays which were shown. The result was to indicate that in many cases the delays were justified. There is, however, as pointed out, a gratifying reduction in arrears and this has been due to the efforts of the judges to expedite the disposition of cases. Last year, we pointed out that one remedy which had proved effective in many jurisdictions was to have the entire docket called at reasonable intervals so that the "dead wood" may be removed and the cases that are expected to be tried may be brought to a speedy determination. This practice, as recommended, has been followed in a number of districts.

The Attorney General observes that, except in a few congested centers, the court dockets are in excellent condition and generally current, the waiting time for trials being caused by the intervals between terms of court. While it appears, as the Attorney General states, that 18 out of 85 districts—as against 17 a year ago—report more or less congestion in their dockets, a comparison of the conditions in the 2 years indicates that the extent of the congestion and arrears has considerably diminished; that only in the District of Columbia, the southern district of New York, and the western district of Washington have the arrears increased.

In the District of Columbia it is hoped that the recent increase in the number of judges will result in at least an amelioration of the great delays there existing. But this may not prove to be a complete cure in view of the fact that the number of civil cases filed during the year was 5,601 as against 5,045 during the preceding year. On the other hand, there has been a diminution in the number of criminal cases filed.

In the southern district of New York the arrears appear to be again accumulating. In the western district of Washington there has been a considerable increase in the arrears in jury cases and some increase as to nonjury cases.

The Attorney General reports that in the northern district of Georgia, the western district of Louisiana, the eastern district of Michigan, and the northern district of Ohio, while there is still congestion, that reported a year or two ago appears to have been considerably alleviated.

The Attorney General also states that the following districts which showed arrears a year ago now report that the dockets are current: Northern district of Alabama, eastern district of Illinois, eastern district of Kentucky, district of Massachusetts, eastern district of Pennsylvania, middle district of Pennsylvania, and northern district of Texas.

It is believed that in the district of Massachusetts an important factor in clearing up the congestion has been the adoption of pretrial procedure for all jury cases.

It appears that in the following districts where the dockets were reported to be current a year ago there is now congestion to a greater or less degree: eastern district of Arkansas, northern district of California, northern district of Illinois, western district of Kentucky, district of New Jersey, middle district of Tennessee, eastern district of Washington.

The Attorney General adds that in the eastern district of Arkansas, the northern district of California, and the eastern district of Washington this state of affairs is due to temporary conditions.

The statement and tables submitted by the Attorney General were supplemented by full reports by the senior circuit judges from each circuit as to the condition of the dockets in the several districts.

Circuit courts of appeals: We are able to report, as heretofore, that in general the circuit courts of appeals are up with their work. We called attention last year to the accumulation of cases in the sixth circuit. Progress has been made in the disposition of these cases and the conference believes that with the present force of circuit judges the circuit court of appeals will be able in the near future to make its docket fairly current.

We also pointed out last year that the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit had been able to keep abreast of its work only through the aid of retired judges. After a careful review of the situation there, the conference decided to recommend one additional circuit judge for that circuit.

No other recommendations for additional circuit judges are made at this time.

The conference renews its recommendation that section 212 of title 28 of the United States Code should be amended so that, in a circuit where there are more than three circuit judges, the majority of the circuit judges may be able to provide for a court of more than three judges when in their opinion unusual circumstances make such action advisable.

District courts—additional judges required: The conference carefully considered the reports submitted by the Attorney General and also the intimate description of conditions furnished by the circuit judges.

In the southern district of New York additional judges are clearly required. The conference recommends that the vacancy caused by the appointment of Judge Robert P. Patterson to the circuit court of appeals should be filled, and that the present restriction should be removed. (See act of May 31, 1938, sec. 4 (d); 52 Stat. 584.) The filling of this vacancy, however, will not afford all the judicial assistance that is needed and the conference recommends that provision should be made for two additional judges, that is, in addition to the filling of the vacancy above mentioned. This recommendation is made with the qualification that it be provided that the first three vacancies occurring in the district court in that district shall not be filled.

The conference also recommends that provision be made for an additional district judge in the following districts: One additional district judge for the district of New Jersey; one additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania; one additional district judge for the northern district of Georgia; one additional district judge for the northern district of Ohio; one additional district judge for the eastern district of Missouri; one additional district judge for the southern district of California; one additional district judge for the western district of Oklahoma.

Court rules: In view of the changes necessitated in the rules of courts by reason of the adoption of the Rules of Civil Procedure, the conference last year appointed a committee to review the rules of the circuit courts of appeals for the purpose of making recommendations in order to obtain uniformity so far as might be found practicable. This committee was composed of Circuit Judges Parker, Hicks, Wilbur, and Phillips.

At the present session of the conference, Judge Parker submitted two rules which had been drafted in cooperation with a committee of the Department of Justice, of which Hon. James W. Morris was chairman. These rules concern the review by the circuit courts of appeals (a) of orders of the Board of Tax Appeals and of the United States Processing Tax Board of Review, and (b) of orders of other administrative bodies. The conference recommends to the several circuit courts of appeals the adoption of these rules, as thus submitted, in the form in which they are proposed.

District court rules: At the last conference a committee was appointed, composed of District Judge John C. Knox, of the southern district of New York; District Judge William P. James, of the southern district of California; and District Judge Robert C. Baltzell, of the southern district of Indiana to examine the various rules of the district courts and to make recommendations so that the greatest practicable degree of uniformity throughout the country should be secured. This committee was assisted during the year by Maj. Edgar B. Tolman and by representatives of the Department of Justice. A tentative draft of uniform local rules was prepared and presented to the members of the conference.

The conference continues this committee for another year to the end that the above-mentioned report and such further suggestions as may be made should be considered.

Boundaries of judicial circuits and districts: At the conference held in 1937 a committee was appointed to consider possible changes in the boundaries of existing circuits and districts and to confer with the appropriate committee of the Senate and House of Representatives with relation to this matter. The conference continues this committee, which, as now constituted, consists of Judges Foster, Wilbur, Phillips, and Learned Hand.

The administration of the United States courts: For some time measures have been under consideration looking to the establishment of an administrative office of the United States courts. One objective was to give to the courts the power of managing their own business affairs and to that extent to relieve the Department of Justice of responsibility. Another objective was to secure an improved supervision of the work of the courts through an organization under judicial control. After full discussion of these objectives, the conference, at its last session, appointed a committee to prepare recommendations in collaboration with the Attorney General. This committee was composed of Chief Justice Groner of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and Circuit Judges Manton, Parker, Evans, and Stone. The result of the collaboration of this committee with the committee appointed by the Attorney General and with representatives of bar associations has been the promotion and ultimate adoption of legislation to attain the desired ends. The act, which adds a new chapter (chapter XV) to the Judicial Code entitled "The Administration of the United States Courts," was passed by the Congress and was approved by the President on August 7, 1939, to take effect 90 days thereafter.

A large part of the present session of the conference has been taken up with a discussion of the provisions of this act and of the necessary steps fully to achieve the purposes in view. The act provides for the appointment by the Supreme Court of the United States of a director and an assistant director of the administrative office. While these appointments are to be made by the Supreme Court, the act provides that the director shall have charge of the matters specified "under the supervision and direction of the conference of senior circuit judges." The director is charged with duties of the highest importance and it was deemed not only fitting but necessary that the conference of senior circuit judges, in order to exercise the intended supervision over his activities, should be represented by a committee which shall be in immediate touch with the director and be in a position to keep the conference fully informed. For this purpose the conference has appointed an advisory committee to advise and assist the director in the exercise of his duties until further order of the conference. The committee is composed of the Chief Justice of the United States, as chairman, Chief Justice Groner of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and Circuit Judges Parker, Stone, and Biggs.

The act provides (sec. 306) that, to the end that the work of the district courts shall be effectively and expeditiously transacted, it shall be the duty of the senior circuit judge of each circuit to call at least twice a year a council composed of the circuit judges for the circuit at which the senior circuit judge shall preside. The senior judge is directed to submit to the council the quarterly reports which the director is required to submit (sec. 304 (2)) in relation to the state of the dockets of the various courts, their needs of assistance, the preparation of statistical data and information as to the business transacted. It is made the duty of district judges promptly to carry out the directions of the council as to the administration of the business of their courts. The conference considered the duty of the circuit judges under this provision and the responsibility of the council, convened and informed as stated, for the appropriate expediting of the work of the district courts.

In addition to these councils composed of the circuit judges in each circuit, the act provides (sec. 307) that a conference shall be held annually in each judicial circuit which shall be composed of circuit and district judges in such circuit, who reside within the continental United States, with participation of members of the bar under rules to be prescribed by the circuit courts of appeals. These conferences are stated to be for the purposes of considering the state of the business of the courts and of advising ways and means of improving the administration of justice within the circuits.

The conference considered these provisions, and several of the circuit judges described at length the character of the proceedings of conferences which had been held in their circuits, including the sort of questions presented, the arrangement of programs, and incidental matters. The profitable results of these conferences in a number of circuits were emphasized.

It is confidently expected that through the operation of this act the important objectives to which reference has been made will be measurably attained.

Sentences in criminal cases: The conference appointed a committee composed of Judges Learned Hand, Evans, and Wilbur to consider and report upon the feasibility of an indeterminate-sentence law for the Federal courts; also with respect to the advisability of conferring upon the circuit courts of appeals the power to increase or reduce sentences.

Rules of practice and procedure in criminal cases: The Supreme Court, on May 7, 1934, pursuant to the act of March 8, 1934, promulgated Rules of Practice and Procedure, after plea of guilty, verdict, or finding of guilt, in criminal cases brought in the district courts of the United States and in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. The conference requests the Supreme Court to consider amendments of these rules so as to conform the practice relating to records on appeal in criminal cases to the practice provided for by the Rules of Civil Procedure. The conference also requests the Supreme Court to consider an extension of the Criminal Appeals Rules (within the authority conferred by the Congress) to appeals from courts to which the rules do not presently apply.

The conference approved Senate bill No. 1283, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, which provides for the conferring upon the Supreme Court of the power to promulgate rules of pleading, practice, and procedure with respect to any or all proceedings prior to and including verdict, or finding of guilty or not guilty by a court if a jury has been waived, or plea of guilty, in criminal cases in the various courts specified.

Rules of evidence in criminal cases in the Federal courts: The conference appointed a committee composed of Judges Phillips, Hicks, and Wilbur to study and report on the advisability of legislation with respect to the rules of evidence, and also the competency and privilege of witnesses, in criminal cases in the courts of the United States.

Provision for law clerks: The conference directs that the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts upon his appointment prepare as soon as practicable for the consideration of the conference proposals with respect to the salaries of law clerks of district judges and circuit judges with a view to a recommendation of such legislation as may be found advisable.

Court reporters: The subject of compensation of court reporters was referred to the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts to the end that as soon as practicable after his appointment he should prepare recommendations for the consideration of the conference.

Public defenders: Upon considering its former recommendation upon this subject, the conference approved in substance S. 1845 and H. R. 4782, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, with respect to the appointment of public defenders.

Recess: In view of the fact that action may be required by the conference in connection with the operation of the act creating the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, the conference, instead of adjourning, declared a recess subject to the call of the Chief Justice.

For the judicial conference:

CHARLES E. HUGHES,
Chief Justice.

SEPTEMBER 30, 1939.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have only about a minute or two left. I send a motion to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

I move that House bill 7079, to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges, be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to make further investigation as to the need of the additional judges provided in this bill and the existing district judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] that the bill be recommitted.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, was it on this motion that the Senator wanted the yeas and nays?

Mr. McNARY. I think it was rather agreed that the vote on this motion would be an oral vote, and that when the bill was placed on its final passage there would be a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. HATCH. I did not quite understand what the agreement was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas that the bill be recommitted. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. McNARY. I ask for a division.

On a division, the motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to the committee amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. 3. After the date of the enactment of this act the salary of the judge of the District Court of the Virgin Islands of the United States shall be at the rate of $10,000 a year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt. Those in favor of the amendment to the amendment will rise and stand until counted. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. The amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	Lucas	Sheppard
Bailey	Gibson	Lundeen	Slattery
Barbour	Gillette	McCarran	Smathers
Barkley	Green	McKellar	Stewart
Bone	Guffey	McNary	Taft
Bulow	Gurney	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Burke	Hale	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Harrison	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hatch	Murray	Tobey
Capper	Hayden	Neely	Townsend
Caraway	Herring	Norris	Tydings
Chandler	Hill	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Chavez	Holman	Overton	Wagner
Connally	Hughes	Pepper	Walsh
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	White
Downey	King	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is now upon the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is my position that it is too late now to call for the yeas and nays, because the Chair announced the result of the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did announce the result of the vote, but thinks he acted a little precipitately. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] was on his feet asking for the yeas and nays, and the Chair believes he was in error in making the announcement. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Am I not right in assuming that the RECORD will show that the decision was announced by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot answer that question. The Chair does not know what the RECORD will show, but feels that he made the announcement while the Senator from Mississippi was on his feet asking for the yeas and nays. The Chair does not wish to deny a yea and nay vote if the Senate wishes to order it.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada to the committee amendment. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the roll call not having been begun, am I permitted to say something?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order at the present time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that would conflict with the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KING (when his name was called). Upon this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question I withhold my vote.

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained at one of the Government departments.

Mr. TYDINGS (when Mr. RADCLIFFE'S name was called). My colleague the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is necessarily detained from the Senate. He is unable to secure a pair. If he were present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I inquire if the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee. Therefore I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. My colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is unavoidably absent from the Senate on important business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER) (after having voted in the affirmative). Before the result is announced the Chair will state that he has a pair on this question with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is detained on public business. The present occupant of the Chair transfers that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and will permit his vote to stand.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senators from Missouri [Mr. CLARK and Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on public business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] has a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. I am not advised how either Senator would vote on this question.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO]. On this question the Senator from North Dakota would vote "yea" and I am advised the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—49

Ashurst	Gillette	McCarran	Taft

Bulow	Johnson, Calif.	Reynolds
Clark, Idaho	King	Shipstead

So Mr. McCARRAN'S amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McNARY. That does not contemplate a final vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; it does not contemplate a final vote.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KING (when his name was called). Upon this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained in one of the Government departments. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER [after having voted in the affirmative]. The Chair again announces that he has a general pair on this vote with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is detained on public business. The Chair transfers that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and permits his vote to stand.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. My colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on important official business. I am advised that, if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Florida, the Senator from Mississippi, the Senator from Michigan, the Senators from Missouri, the Senator from Arkansas, and the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the absence of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] on official business. On this question he is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. If present, the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "nay," and the Senator from Michigan would vote "yea."

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] has a pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING]. I am advised that the Senator from North Dakota, if present, would vote "yea." I am not advised how the Senator from Iowa would vote.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 21, as follows:

So the bill H. R. 7079 was passed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. MCCARRAN, and Mr. AUSTIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, with reference to the bill just passed by the Senate about half an hour ago, I received a special-delivery letter from Mr. Justice Wilbur, presiding judge of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, and also a letter from Mr. Justice James, the presiding judge of the southern district of California, together with a report from the clerk of that court. I ask that these documents be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters and report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS,
NINTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT,
Los Angeles, April 15, 1940.

Hon. WM. P. JAMES,
United States District Judge, Los Angeles, Calif.

MY DEAR JUDGE: You have called to my attention a letter from Senator MCCARRAN, of Nevada, concerning need for an additional judge in the southern district of California. I am writing you in order that you may enclose this statement with your letter to Senator MCCARRAN instead of writing him direct.

As you know, this request for an additional judge was made by the judicial conference in Washington at each of its two last meetings.

From actual personal contact with the problem of the district court in the southern district of California and acquaintance with the conditions in southern California based upon over 50 years' experience, and 10 years' experience in hearing appeals from this district, I am satisfied that we not only need one additional judge in the southern district of California but that with the rapid extension of Federal jurisdiction under laws recently passed, the number of cases that will demand a long period of trial already filed in this district, even if the present judges continue to dispatch business in this district with the fidelity and devotion with which they have previously done, we will again fall behind. A litigant is entitled to prompt hearing of cases in court although it is rare that he gets such attention.

I have not quoted statistics because, after all, the question involved is not one of statistics but of a practical situation which can be ascertained by anyone who examines the records and observes the amount of time necessary to try some of the pending mail fraud cases, violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, and patent cases.

Sincerely yours,

CURTIS D. WILBUR.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
Los Angeles, April 15, 1940.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I received your special-delivery letter calling attention to the fact that Senator REED is opposed to the increase of one judge for the southern district of California. His compilation from reports of the Attorney General respecting the number of cases has no real bearing upon our crowded condition. It is the heavy cases, of which there are many pending in this district, that eat up the time of the judges. Of course, the shorter cases are speedily disposed of, many by pleas of guilty.

I have had our clerk prepare a statement, which gives a fair picture of the present status of the business of the court. I also enclose a letter from Judge Wilbur, our senior circuit judge, who happens to be here holding court at this time. You will remember that only during the past year the circuit court found it not only desirable but necessary to hold a 6-month session in the southern district of California, because practically one-half of all the appeals from the seven States in the circuit, including Hawaii and Alaska, come from this district.

Trials of pending cases cannot be set and finally heard within any 6-month term of court, and we have not been able to better that situation. We must have more judges if the litigant is given anything like a reasonably early trial. It is useless for me to enter upon a further argument, because I think the conditions confronting us are now fully explained. We are all hoping that the added help will be given us by Congress.

I am, with very best wishes,

Most sincerely yours,

WM. P. JAMES,
Senior United States District Judge.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., April 15, 1940.

STATUS OF CALENDAR

There are pending in this court a large number of criminal cases which will take more than the usual time for trial. Some of these are:

14279–H–Criminal which has 7 corporate defendants and 14 individual defendants;

14250–Y–Criminal which has 11 corporate defendants and 62 individual defendants;

14280–Y–Criminal which has 3 corporate defendants and 17 individual defendants;

14286–Y–Criminal which has 3 corporate defendants and 22 individual defendants;

14262–Y–Criminal which has 9 corporate defendants and 74 individual defendants; and

14302–H–Criminal which has 11 corporate defendants and 20 individual defendants;

these six cases are all antitrust cases and the estimated time for trial, as given by the assistant attorneys general who are prosecuting the cases, is 1½ years for the six cases.

The special grand jury hearing the antitrust cases is still in session and there will doubtless be additional indictments returned.

14149–M–Criminal is an antitrust case involving the oil companies, having 48 corporate defendants, which will take at least 6 months to try. Counsel for some of the defendants have estimated approximately 1 year for trial, due to the number of exhibits which will have to be offered and analyzed.

14048–B–Criminal is a criminal contempt case against Fox West Coast Theaters et al. which is being prosecuted by special assistant attorneys general and will take 3 months for trial.

14215–Y–Criminal is a mail fraud case against Odell and 15 others which is now set for trial commencing the latter part of April which will take at least 6 months for trial.

14051–RJ–Criminal is a criminal case against Yamatoda, et al, for violation of the Lindbergh kidnaping law. This case is now set for trial commencing April 30, 1940, and will take at least 6 weeks for trial.

14075–M, 14076–H, 14077–Y, and 14078–H–Criminal are cases for violation of the mail fraud and securities and exchange laws which will take approximately 6 weeks for trial.

The above cases being criminal cases have preference over civil cases for trial. If all seven judges of this court did nothing but try the above criminal cases with a total estimated trial time of 42 months it would occupy the time of all members of this court for the next 6 months.

LAND CONDEMNATION CASES

There are pending 10 land condemnation cases in which the Government is condemning land for various purposes. 204–J–Civil involves 47 separate parcels. There have already been two trials with a jury covering certain parcels and a third trial involving 17 parcels is now set for April 16, 1940, and will take approximately 3 weeks for trial.

453–Y–Civil involves 216 parcels of land. Trial as to 74 parcels is to be set on April 15, 1940, there being no estimate as yet as to the time for trial.

657–RJ–Civil involves 66 parcels. Trial as to 19 parcels is now set in October and will take approximately 1 month.

The other seven cases have not been set for trial, and no estimate of the trial time has been made. These cases involve a large number of parcels, and the judges are inclined to give early trials in these cases as the owners' land has been taken from them by the Government, and some of them are in dire need of the money in order to rehabilitate themselves.

SHERMAN AND CLAYTON ACTS CASES

There are a number of Sherman and Clayton Acts cases pending. 7902–B–Law was tried once, resulting in a hung jury. The trial took 28 trial days on the first trial and no doubt will take about the same time for the second trial.

There are several of these cases in addition in which no estimate of trial time has been made.

One judge of this court started a trial on November 7, 1939, of four cases, which were consolidated for the purposes of trial. These cases involve the title to over 600 acres of producing and potential oil lands at Long Beach Harbor valued at many millions of dollars. The estimated trial time was a minimum of 6 months and a maximum of 2 years. After 3 months of trial upon the resting of the claimants' case on one of the many issues involved the parties requested a recess for the purpose of negotiating on a settlement. Other cases are being tried in the interim, but so far it has not been decided whether the trial will have to continue to a conclusion or if the parties will be able to compromise the litigation. If the trial must continue it will take several months more, and may run into many months depending on the result of investigations still in progress.

467–B–Civil is a civil case by the United States against the General Petroleum Corp. et al. for additional royalty interests. The Assistant Attorney General prosecuting this case estimates a minimum of 4 months' trial time.

564–J–Civil, Mutual Orange Distributors against Agricultural Prorate Commission of State of California et al., is a three-judge case which took the time of two district judges and one circuit judge for 8 days at the hearing on the merits. Briefs are now being filed, and the case may later be again set for oral argument.

There are pending in this district, 71 matters under section 77–B of the Bankruptcy Act, and 19 matters under chapter X of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended by the Chandler Act. These matters all consume a great deal of the judge's time.

There are pending 96 patent cases, most of which have been pending for a long time but not tried on account of the length of time necessary for trial which could not be spared from criminal cases, and other cases entitled to an earlier trial.

The naturalization department has increased the number of petitions filed per month from 400 to about 1,000.

Judge Jeremiah Neterer from the western district of Washington called the January term calendar in the southern division of this district at San Diego in order to enable Judge James of this district to try cases in Los Angeles. He sat in San Diego for approximately 3 months in order to try all the cases in which trials were requested. There will be over 50 criminal cases on the calendar at San Diego on April 19, 1940. If not-guilty pleas are entered at that time the cases will be set down for trial during the July term at San Diego.

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Bill 8668, the War Department civil functions appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8668) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator does not wish to go further with the bill this afternoon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As I understand, the bill will be the unfinished business tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

REPLY BY ATTORNEY GENERAL JACKSON TO SENATOR BRIDGES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] made some comments in the Senate on the disposition of certain cases before the Department of Justice and criticized the Attorney General. I ask unanimous consent that a statement issued to the press yesterday by the Attorney General be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Attorney General Robert H. Jackson today issued the following statement:

"Senator BRIDGES' political attack on me on the Senate floor is based on cases pending in the courts. He even includes a discussion of one that is now on trial before a jury, and his speech is well designed—and was no doubt intended—to prejudice the Government's case. If Senator BRIDGES feels no ethical restraint, I am not at liberty to descend to this level, even in self-defense. I have tried to make it a policy of this Department that we will avoid the issuance of statements or publicity designed, or likely, to influence trials in the courts. It is too much, however, to expect that such considerations of fair play would appeal to Senator BRIDGES.

"Fortunately no such consideration restrains me from discussing one of the situations involved in the Senator's attack which he discusses with an understanding and accuracy that is characteristic of his entire speech. As it has been so long disposed of, I am free to discuss it. Senator BRIDGES asks:

" 'What has become of the investigation at Hot Springs, Ark., of charges against city officials and police that they had accepted bribes for harboring Federal fugitives from justice?'

"The answer is that the former chief of police, the former lieutenant of detectives, and two associates have been indicted and have been convicted and are now serving maximum terms, while a fifth pleaded guilty after indictment and received a sentence which has been served.

"Herbert Akers is now in Atlanta Penitentiary; Joseph Wakelin, former chief of police at Hot Springs, is now imprisoned at the Federal institution at Springfield, Mo.; former Lt. Cecil Brock is confined in Leavenworth Penitentiary; and Jewel Grayson is at Alderson Federal Penitentiary for Women. All of these prisoners have applied for parole and in each case it has been denied. With the exception of one defendant who pleaded guilty, the trials were bitterly contested.

"Of course, Senator BRIDGES is to be forgiven for knowing nothing of the subject of which he talked, for he has had his ear so close to the ground that he has not been able to get his eyes to the level of court proceedings.

"His violent partisanship and his determination to inflict his own candidacy upon his party and the country has caused him to throw overboard even that elemental sense of restraint and caution that men not in possession of the facts usually exercise. He is the 'infant terrible' on the contemporary political scene, and is not taken seriously even by the members of his own party."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

Dental Surgeon Frank C. Cady to be senior dental surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from May 13, 1940; and Senior Surgeon Clarence H. Waring to be medical director in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from August 22, 1940.

Mr. HARRISON also, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nominations of following surgeons to be senior surgeons in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from the dates set opposite their names:

William Y. Hollingsworth, May 24, 1940; and

Leo W. Tucker, June 15, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS—NOMINATIONS FAVORABLY REPORTED

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters which had been favorably reported.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters which have been favorably reported be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters which have been favorably reported are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 17, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 16 (legislative day of April 8), 1940

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

Thomas M. Woodward, of Pennsylvania, to be a member of the United States Maritime Commission for the term of 6 years from September 26, 1939, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate. (Reappointment.)

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

The following-named commanders to be captains in the Navy, to rank from the date stated opposite their names:

Eugene T. Oates, September 23, 1939.

Daniel E. Barbey, April 1, 1940.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders in the Navy to rank from the 1st day of August 1939:

Albert E. Freed	Robert S. Smith, Jr.
Walker P. Rodman	Stephen K. Hall
Logan C. Ramsey	Frank N. Sayre
William E. Clayton	Ross A. Dierdorff
George M. O'Rear	Palmer M. Gunnell
Charles L. Andrews, Jr.	Raymond G. Deewall
Philip P. Welch	Charles M. Johnson
Harry A. Rochester	Henry L. Pitts

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders in the Navy to rank from the 1st day of September 1939:

Raymond E. Farnsworth	Harvey R. Bowes
Norman E. Millar	Cyril E. Taylor
Scott E. Peck	Laurence Bennett
Emil B. Perry

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders in the Navy, to rank from the date stated opposite their names:

Marion E. Crist, September 23, 1939.
Robert D. Threshie, September 23, 1939.
Robert E. Robinson, Jr., September 23, 1939.
Karl J. Christoph, September 23, 1939.
John P. Vetter, September 23, 1939.
John F. Crowe, Jr., December 8, 1939.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the Navy, to rank from the date stated opposite their names:

Joseph M. Began, July 1, 1939.
Jeane R. Clark, August 1, 1939.
John S. Blue, August 1, 1939.
William C. Schultz, September 1, 1939.
Cameron Briggs, September 1, 1939.
Arthur H. Graubart, September 1, 1939.
William J. O'Brien, September 1, 1939.
William O. Gallery, September 1, 1939.
Harry F. Miller, September 23, 1939.
John O. Lambrecht, September 23, 1939.
William L. Wright, September 23, 1939.
Howard T. Orville, November 1, 1939.
Oliver F. Naquin, November 1, 1939.
Thomas H. Tonseth, December 8, 1939.
Waldeman N. Christensen, December 8, 1939.
Joseph H. Wellings, December 8, 1939.
William R. Headden, December 8, 1939.
Paul C. Crosley, December 29, 1939.
James M. Hicks, December 29, 1939.
Edward L. Beck, January 1, 1940.
William A. New, January 1, 1940.
William H. Standley, Jr., January 1, 1940.
Fred R. Stickney, January 1, 1940.
Warren P. Mowatt, January 29, 1940.
Carter A. Printup, February 1, 1940.
Bennett W. Wright, February 1, 1940.

The following-named Lieutenants (junior grade) to be Lieutenants in the Navy, to rank from the date stated opposite their names:

Harry E. Seidel, Jr., July 1, 1939.
Halford A. Knoertzer, August 1, 1939.
William J. Dimitrijevic, August 1, 1939.
Roland H. Dale, August 1, 1939.
James V. Reilly, September 1, 1939.
Paul H. Harrington, September 23, 1939.
Leon S. Kintberger, September 23, 1939.
Earl T. Hydeman, October 1, 1939.
John R. Van Evera, November 1, 1939.

Alfred L. Cope, November 1, 1939.
Richard C. Williams, Jr., November 1, 1939.
Harold L. Sargent, December 8, 1939.
Norman E. Blaisdell, December 29, 1939.
William P. Schroeder, December 29, 1939.
George R. Beardslee, January 1, 1940.
William B. Perkins, January 1, 1940.
Maximilian G. Schmidt, January 1, 1940.
Alvin W. Slayden, January 1, 1940.
Charlton L. Murphy, Jr., January 1, 1940.
Ralph M. Wilson, February 1, 1940.
Paul E. Emrick, February 12, 1940.
Robert O. Beer, February 20, 1940.
Earl R. Eastwold, February 20, 1940.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy, to rank from the 4th day of June 1939:

William J. Lederer, Jr.
Edward E. Hoffman

John H. Cox to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) to rank from the 2d day of April 1940.

Chaplain Herbert Dumstrey to be a chaplain in the Navy, with the rank of captain, to rank from the 1st day of August 1939.

Lieut. Joseph C. Wylie, Jr., to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 1st day of September 1939, to correct the date of rank as previously nominated and confirmed.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be assistant paymasters in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), to rank from the 4th day of June 1939:

John D. Hewitt 3d
Billy Johnson

The following-named ensigns to be assistant paymasters in the Navy, with the rank of ensign, to rank from the 3d day of June 1937:

Bernhard H. Bieri, Jr.	Clifford A. Messenheimer
Raymond F. Parker	Paul S. Burt, Jr.
William J. Held	Charles J. Zellner
Charles Stein, Jr.	Wesley J. Stuessi
Lewis O. Davis	Edward K. Scofield

The following-named ensigns to be assistant naval constructors in the Navy, with the rank of ensign, to rank from the 2d day of June 1938.

Irvin J. Frankel	James J. Stilwell
James F. Ellis, Jr.	John B. Shirley

Ensign John J. Cassidy, Jr., to be an assistant civil engineer in the navy, with the rank of ensign, to rank from the 2d day of June 1938.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 16 (legislative day of April 8), 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 16, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou ever blessed Lord, fill us with Thy Spirit that we may achieve great things in patience, in perseverance, in life, and in every good word and work. Grant that our zeal and diligence may inspire wise endeavor in those who are listless and careless. Though the signs of the times may give but little comfort, measured by the years, yet the power of truth will be augmented until it gives ascendency to a new world and man shall know the vastness of our Father's house. We beseech Thee to cause the shadow of retribution to fall across all those who are swayed by the scepter of injustice and inhumanity. The Lord God forgive our sins and save us from ourselves. If we are covetous, may we not become slaves to our own selfishness, nor prey of evil desire. More and more relate us to the eternal, timeless things, such as love, purity, and truth, and Thine shall be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 17 and 28 to the bill (H. R. 7922) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

HOUR OF MEETING APRIL 24

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, April 24, on account of the memorial services, the House convene at 11:45 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement made by the President after he signed the Trade Agreements Act; also a statement by Secretary Hull when the bill passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix on the Wheeler-Lea transportation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a radio address delivered over the blue network by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include certain tables and extracts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] may extend his remarks by including a speech made by Hon. W. Arthur Simpson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include letters from Presidents Lincoln and Buchanan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein some recent editorials from the Endicott Bulletin on the flood situation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ANTHRACITE COAL

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Speaker, on March 2, 1939, it was my privilege to address the House on the results of my studies and surveys of the anthracite coal situation in Pennsylvania, at which time I called attention to the importance of making provision for the initiation of a program of scientific research on the utilization of anthracite coal as provided for in my bill (H. R. 5849) to provide for the rehabilitation of the anthracite coal industry by providing for the establishment, equipment, maintenance, and operation of a research laboratory in the Pennsylvania anthracite region to conduct researches and investigations on the mining, preparation, and utilization of anthracite coal, and to develop new scientific, chemical, and technical uses, and new and extended markets and outlets for anthracite coal and its products.

My bill further provides that—

Such laboratory shall be planned as a center for information and assistance in matters pertaining to the more efficient mining, preparation, and utilization of anthracite coal; and pertaining to safety, health, and sanitation in mining operations, and other matters relating to problems of the anthracite industry.

ANTHRACITE COAL RESERVES

In my previous speech I called attention to the fact that the present anthracite coal reserves are estimated at about 16,500,000,000 tons—about three-fourths of the original reserves.

All of the anthracite coal of any commercial importance lies in four major fields in eastern Pennsylvania within an area of 3,300 square miles—less 500 square miles of which are underlain by workable coal beds.

During my service in Congress I have endeavored to direct attention to the national importance and significance of scientific research looking to the development of new uses for anthracite and its products.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION FOR RESEARCH

It has been very pleasing as well as gratifying to me personally to observe the attention given to anthracite coal research since the introduction of my original bill, H. H. 4109, on February 14, 1939. This bill was superseded by H. R. 5849, which I introduced on April 18, 1939.

On February 27, 1939, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLANNERY] introduced H. R. 4543, and on May 25, 1939, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] introduced his bill, H. R. 6529. All of these bills provide for Federal funds for research on anthracite coal.

On July 13, 1939, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER] introduced his bill, H. R. 7189, appropriating the sum of $54,500 to enable the Bureau of Mines to conduct research and experiments to find new uses for anthracite coal. This bill was passed by the House in the closing days of the first session, and is now before the Senate Committee on Mines and Mining.

As a result of the passage of a special act by the Pennsylvania Legislature, cooperative research has been undertaken by the Pennsylvania State College, in cooperation with the State department of mines and the coal industry. These researches at Pennsylvania State College cover gasification of anthracite, activation of carbon, and other lines of research of coal utilization.

All of these efforts are, of course, steps in the right direction and prove the soundness of my position in initiating activities for research on anthracite-coal utilization. I hope that a still larger program can be provided whereby the Federal Government, through its scientific and technical staff will be able to assist our people in the anthracite region in opening up new uses and markets for our coal.

It is not my intention at this time, however, to discuss in any detail the value of research of this character to our people in the anthracite region. It is rather my desire to discuss the other aspects of my bill, H. R. 5849, providing for this proposed laboratory to serve as a center for information and assistance in matters pertaining to safety, health, and sanitation in mining operations and other matters relating to problems of the anthracite-coal industries.

SAFETY AND HEALTH IN ANTHRACITE MINING

It must, of course, be recognized that matters pertaining to the safety and health of coal miners are of fundamental importance. The hazardous occupation of the miner requires that all possible precautions be taken to assure his safety during working operations.

Due primarily to the hazardous nature of anthracite-coal mining, such as large coal beds, pitching veins, and so forth, special hazards are encountered in the mines in our region. In my opinion continued research studies on matters pertaining to the safety and health of our miners should be encouraged.

The establishment of an anthracite-research laboratory as provided in my bill, H. R. 5849, will make possible these important studies and investigations.

But we are not only faced with the necessity of providing safety for our miners during actual mining operations. We are now confronted with the problem of safety for the homes of our people in the anthracite region. The recent experiences in Shenandoah, one of the largest towns in my district, has caused particular anxiety in our part of the anthracite-coal fields.

SHENANDOAH, PA., SURFACE SUBSIDENCE

Early Monday morning, March 4, a 17-block area in Shenandoah, a thriving borough of approximately 22,000 people, was badly damaged by surface settling or what we commonly call cave-in conditions.

A large number of properties, including homes and business places and public schools, were affected. The residents in the section of the town affected by the surface subsidence are very much alarmed as to their future safety. The uncertainty as to whether there will be a further serious development involving not only this area but other sections of Shenandoah is causing a great deal of concern.

The direct cause of this surface disturbance in our section of the anthracite region is now being investigated by State and local authorities. Our people in the region are naturally very much interested in ascertaining the facts and circumstances contributing to this condition.

Here again it is my feeling that the Federal engineers in the Bureau of Mines can cooperate with the Pennsylvania State Department of Mines in conducting investigations relating to surface subsidence and development of efficient control measures. I am hopeful that some plan can be worked out to make funds available for this important undertaking.

A study of safety in mining operations, both as it may affect the coal miner at his work as well as his family at home, certainly should be encouraged by the Federal Government.

SURFACE SUBSIDENCE IN ANTHRACITE REGION

This recent surface subsidence at Shenandoah indicates the importance of determining definitely the factors that contributed to this condition and the working out of methods for prevention of occurrences of this character in other anthracite mining towns.

I am told it is the opinion of many prominent mining men that under certain conditions the most practical way of preventing loss of unmined coal in pillars and of protecting surface property from damage by subsidence is by filling the workings with refuse material. The value of mine filling as a roof support for surface protection has long been recognized.

United States Bureau of Mines Bulletin No. 60, by Charles Enzian, discusses the use of hydraulic mine filling in the Pennsylvania anthracite mine fields. The author states:

Hydraulic mine filling has played an important part and been highly effective in the prevention of surface subsidence. Further consideration should be given to hydraulic mine filling as a means of prevention of such surface subsidence as has occurred in Shenandoah.

I also favor further appropriation of funds for engineering studies of the factors contributing to surface subsidence or settling. This subject should be given particular attention by the Bureau of Mines with special attention to the heavy veins in the western and southern anthracite regions.

SAFETY IN ANTHRACITE MINING

One of the important provisions in H. R. 5849 is to make possible studies pertaining to the safety and health of anthracite miners and to the sanitation conditions under which they work.

The hazards of mining are well known and many lives have been lost from explosions of mine gases, explosions of blasting materials, falls of roof and coal, and haulage and transportation accidents, and other causes.

Some attention has been given to studies of "anthracosis," resulting from breathing the coal dust in anthracite coal mines and the effect on the miner. Further research is essential to acquire accurate data on this subject, which have for years been so vitally important to anthracite miners.

ANTHROSILICOSIS (MINERS' ASTHMA) AMONG HARD-COAL MINERS

The United States Public Health Service has made a preliminary study of the nature and prevalence of chronic, incapacitating miners' asthma. The results of this study are published in Public Health Bulletin No. 221, entitled "Anthrosilicosis Among Hard-Coal Miners."

In making this study, a representative mine was selected in each of the three districts in which the anthracite-coal field is divided by geological formation and by method of mining. One of the mines selected was in the northern, one in the southern, and one in the western middle area. It was agreed that all employees, including office, breaker, and other outside workers, as well as all underground employees, would be examined in each of the three mines selected for study.

Anthrosilicosis is a chronic disease due to breathing air containing dust generated in the various processes involved in the mining and preparation of anthracite coal.

The Public Health Service reports that according to their conclusions, based on the examination of 2,711 men—about 96 percent of the number on the pay roll of three representative anthracite coal mining companies studied—the prevalence of anthrosilicosis among the entire group of employees was found to be about 23 percent, almost one-quarter of the total number. The mortality from respiratory diseases was found to be much greater among anthracite workers than in the general adult male population of the country. This important problem, which greatly affects the welfare of our miners, should be given some attention.

In considering safety in anthracite mining the following conclusions can be obtained from the publications of the Federal Bureau of Mines:

First. Accident rates—especially fatality rates—in anthracite mines from falls of roof and coal are higher than corresponding rates for other types of underground mining in the United States.

Second. Accident reports published by the Bureau of Mines indicate that where the number of accidents of all types in anthracite mines is being reduced gradually those caused by falls of roof and coal still are responsible for over 50 percent of the fatalities, and in 1 year were responsible for 140 deaths and almost 3,000 lost-time injuries.

Third. Statistics on roof-fall accidents reveal that anthracite mines have the highest death rate of all underground mines.

Fourth. The injury rate for handling materials, especially timber, is higher for anthracite mines than for any other type of mine. In fact, there are more lost-time injuries from this cause than from any other except roof falls and haulage.

Fifth. Accident rates for handling material in 1935 were three times as high for anthracite than for metal mines and almost three times as high for bituminous-coal mines.

EXPLOSIONS IN ANTHRACITE MINES

According to reports of the Bureau of Mines, there have been a total of 1,243 explosions in anthracite-coal mines from 1847 to 1937, causing the death of 2,252 miners.

Many of these explosions were due to the ignition of explosive mine gases and also explosions during placing operations. Although progress has been made in recent years in controlling mine explosions, this matter will always be of fundamental importance to the coal-mining industry.

Such matters as adequate mine ventilation, improved methods of lighting, safe blasting methods, and similar matters pertaining to mine explosions should be given further attention.

HEALTH IN ANTHRACITE MINING

Being a medical doctor, I am naturally interested in health conditions as they relate to anthracite mining. My experiences over a number of years on the staff of one of our hospitals in the coal regions has given me a first-hand picture of the conditions surrounding accidents, injuries, and health matters as they concern the miner.

The Bureau of Mines reports that the subject of health in mining has not been given the attention it warrants. This is particularly true as to the occurrence of dusts, high humidity, and other influences harmful to the health of the mine worker.

Although definite statistics are not and probably never will be available, it is almost a certainty that far more underground workers are incapacitated or die immediately from breathing excessive amounts of dusts than are killed by mine explosions and fires.

Air conditioning, now practically in its infancy in general industry, offers a possible fruitful means of safeguarding the comfort and health and, to some extent, the safety of the mine worker.

A few mining companies are making air-conditioning installations, although definite data on results are not at hand. Further research should be carried on to discover feasible methods of air conditioning coal mines.

The Bureau of Mines has done much work on ventilation of mines as well as on methods of reducing dust and heat humidity. These studies should be continued and expanded to include anthracite-coal mines.

Research work on health and safety in the mining and allied industries offers large remuneration in salvation of life and limb as well as in dollars and cents for dividends as well as capital investment.

Pertinent questions in connection with occupational diseases are harassing industry—both workers and employers—and the mining industry is very deeply affected.

Much work should be done on the subject of the effect of dust on the miner since thousands of workers are incapacitated annually by dust diseases and hundreds die of it. Suits involving many millions of dollars have been in court in connection with dust diseases in mines and tunnels.

The prevention of dust diseases in mining is a problem that unquestionably can be solved by further research, such as contemplated in the research laboratory provided for in my bill. The investigations of the Bureau of Mines should be expanded to include studies of dust conditions affecting the anthracite miner.

There are numerous other health and safety problems in the mining and allied industries that can be studied with a view to solution. While much progress has been made during recent years in safety in all kinds of mining, it has been estimated by the Bureau of Mines that accidents in the mining industry could be still further reduced from 50 percent to 75 percent below what they are now. This would amount to financial savings of millions of dollars annually to both workers and operators to say nothing of the admittedly great humanitarian and sociological benefits which would certainly occur to the entire Nation.

FIRST-AID TRAINING PROGRAMS

The anthracite-coal region has pioneered in first-aid training for mine employees.

As early as 1907 some of the coal companies in our section of the region began to develop plans for training their employees in both mine-rescue and first-aid work.

This first-aid-training work has given valuable returns and has provided well-trained first-aid organizations at many of our mines. Training work of this character should be encouraged and continued in every mining region in the United States. As a medical doctor I know its practical value.

The Bureau of Mines, in cooperation with the coal companies, has done very valuable work in first-aid-training campaigns in the anthracite region. In the period from January 1934 to September 1939 a total of 1,327 first-aid instructors had been trained with a grand total of 38,059 miners trained in first-aid work. Much of this work was done in my own district and I have been able to make first-hand observations as to its value.

RESEARCH IN ANTHRACITE LABORATORY

I have endeavored in this brief space to indicate the various kinds of research studies and investigations provided for in my bill, H. R. 5849, providing for the establishment of a research laboratory in the anthracite-coal region.

In my opinion the most practical way to study and investigate problems peculiar to anthracite-coal mining and utilization is to provide the necessary facility in the region where actual mining operations are carried on and where the problems affecting the life and safety of our people can be studied by direct contact with the people concerned.

The major problems that a research laboratory of this character could undertake would include the following:

First. Working out new industrial uses for the utilization of anthracite coal and its products.

Second. Improvement in mining methods with increased mining efficiency.

Third. Studies of facts contributing to surface subsidence and development of methods for control and prevention.

Fourth. Safety and health of anthracite miners and methods for protection during mining operations.

Fifth. Matters pertaining to problems peculiar to the anthracite coal industry.

Research of this character would be helpful to the people in our region. It would be the means of stimulating the entire anthracite-coal region and restoring the confidence of our miners.

It is my intention to devote every effort to secure the support of the Federal and State Governments in this undertaking, which is so vital to the welfare of our people. [Applause.]

REPORT FROM ACTING COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein two letters signed by public officials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, during the many years that I have been a Member of Congress, I have seen many Government reports but I can conceive of no more plain political bunk than the report which was submitted to the Speaker of the House under date of April 12 signed by Hon. R. N. Elliott, Acting Comptroller General of the United States, calling attention to certain schools and training courses which are being conducted in or by Government departments and independent establishments. This report was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which I am chairman.

The report contains 74 pages and Mr. Elliott seemed rather exercised to learn that in several instances fees and tuition are charged for the courses and that there has been accumulated a considerable sum over and above operating expenses, especially in reference to the school in the Department of Agriculture, the head of which is Dr. A. F. Woods, a retired Federal employee who was formerly connected with the Bureau of Plant Industry. It seems that this school has in its treasury at the present time a few thousand dollars. Mr. Elliott calls attention to the fact that no accounting is made to the Government of the money. Why should any accounting be made to the Government when no Government funds are involved? Mr. Elliott cites a statute of the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, section 312a, in support of his contention that it appears to him that many of the courses go far beyond the strict training of employees for the better performance of their official duties. If he would have cited the Deficiency Act of March 3, 1901, he would have found that the activities of the school do not go beyond existing law.

Under the leave granted me, it is my intention to place in the RECORD a letter addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture in 1931 by the then Comptroller General, Mr. McCarl, and the reply of the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. R. N. Dunlap, which is a complete answer to Mr. Elliott's fears. As Mr. Elliott knows, like himself, these officials are Republicans.

I noticed in the report that Mr. Elliott devoted a great deal of space to private organizations set up for the purpose of assisting ambitious young men and young women, which has absolutely no bearing upon the schools in question. Why waste public funds in making such foolish investigations and reports?

I am going to call the attention of one outstanding school which has been in operation and it so happens that only yesterday a new class was enrolled. It was the fourteenth session of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's National Police Academy conducted by Director J. Edgar Hoover. Police officials from all over the United States, nearly 500 in number, have graduated from this academy. The cooperation from the local authorities with the F. B. I. as a result of this school has proved to be of extreme value not only to the Government but to the various police organizations throughout the country.

I might add that the present school in the Department of Agriculture was started in 1921 upon the recommendation of the Honorable Henry C. Wallace, the then Secretary of Agriculture in President Harding's Cabinet. Mr. Wallace, a Republican, was the father of the present Secretary of Agriculture. This is the first time the school has ever been subject to any criticism. It is serving a useful purpose. [Applause,]

Mr. Speaker, the attached correspondence speaks for itself:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, September 3, 1931.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

SIR:

* * * * * * *

Under the Director of Scientific Work the Department conducts an educational enterprise known as the graduate school in connection with which courses are now being offered in the field of agricultural science, chemistry, economics, statistics, and languages. It is understood that these courses are conducted in the offices and laboratories of the Department, and that such supplies and equipment as are necessary in connection therewith are provided from official stocks or funds. The lectures, etc., occur after hours, and generally the classes are tutored by employees of the Department. Participating students are required to pay a fee of $25 for two semesters, and it is understood that such fees are paid as compensation to the respective lecturers. Advice as to the authority under which this school is conducted will be appreciated.

* * * * * * *

Respectfully,

J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

OCTOBER 8, 1931.

The honorable the COMPTROLLER GENERAL.

SIR: I have your letter of September 3, 1931, concerning certain practices of the Department, and while other matters mentioned will be taken up in separate communication, I am pleased to advise you herewith as to the matter of the graduate school referred to on the second page of your letter.

After mentioning certain details of the work of the school as you understand it to be conducted, some of which are not in accordance with the facts, you ask to be advised as to the authority under which this school activity is conducted.

By joint resolution of April 12, 1892 (27 Stat. 395), Congress provided as follows:

"That the facilities for research and illustration in the following and any other governmental collections now existing or hereafter to be established in the city of Washington for the promotion of knowledge shall be accessible, under such rules and restrictions as the officers in charge of each collection may prescribe, subject to such authority as is now or may hereafter be permitted by law, to the scientific investigators and to students of any institution of higher education now incorporated or hereafter to be incorporated under the laws of Congress or of the District of Columbia, to wit:

"1. Of the Library of Congress.
"2. Of the National Museum.
"3. Of the Patent Office.
"4. Of the Bureau of Education.
"5. Of the Bureau of Ethnology.
"6. Of the Army Medical Museum.
"7. Of the Department of Agriculture.
"8. Of the Fish Commission.
"9. Of the Botanic Gardens.
"10. Of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.
"11. Of the Geological Survey.
"12. Of the Naval Observatory."

By the Deficiency Act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1010, 1039), Congress provided as follows:

"That facilities for study and research in the Government departments * * * shall be afforded to scientific investigators and to duly qualified individuals, students, and graduates of institutions of learning in the several States and Territories, as well as in the District of Columbia, under such rules and restrictions as the heads of the departments and bureaus mentioned may prescribe."

This activity of the Department of Agriculture has been recognized and enjoyed for a number of years by the local institutions of learning. In the George Washington Catalog for 1931–32, on page 55, under the heading "Governmental institutions accessible to students," the joint resolution of April 12, 1892, is quoted with an explanatory statement that Congress has thus made the scientific resources of the Government accessible to students in order to promote research and the diffusion of knowledge.

The Department believes that in the conduct of this graduate school it is merely carrying out the expressed will of the Congress. The fees charged, which the Secretary has determined to be necessary to make the school a going concern, are very small; they are not "paid as compensation to the respective class lecturers," though they do go into the graduate-school fund (now amounting to about $7,000), which is used not only to pay the sum of $5 per lecture to each lecturer but to pay for all supplies and equipment necessary for laboratory and lecture work, except that the Department handles some of the mimeographing and routine correspondence necessary to make its facilities for study and research available to students.

Although it would seem to be plain, from the acts of Congress above quoted, that it would be proper to use supplies and equipment from official stocks in the work of the school, inasmuch as they are departmental "facilities" authorized by Congress so to be used, the school does not do so, but buys its own supplies and equipment, and if in the course of classroom or laboratory use any Government property is used or consumed, it is at once replaced from the school fund. No Government funds are used in the conduct of this school, the only Federal expense involved being the wear and tear in the use of the rooms or laboratories where the school work is conducted and the mimeographing and routine correspondence above referred to, which is believed to be contemplated and authorized by Congress in the acts above quoted.

Respectfully,

R. N. DUNLAP, Acting Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, I now include a statement prepared by the Graduate School of the Department of Agriculture:

The Graduate School of the United States Department of Agriculture in Washington, which was referred to more than any other in the report, is an unofficial institution of higher education, organized in 1921 to make available to Government employees systematic opportunities to prepare themselves for more efficient service in their present positions and also to prepare themselves for higher classifications.

Many Government employees are able to supplement their previous education by pursuing courses at local institutions. But in a number of special fields the desired courses are not available in these institutions, or they are given during the day, when Government workers cannot attend the classes, or for some other good reason the employee is not able to get the work desired in a local college. Hence the opportunity afforded by the systematic work organized to meet the special needs of Government workers is essential to the effective prosecution of the Federal services.

HISTORY

The demand for continued educational opportunity was first formally recognized in the Federal Government when the Bureau of Standards, in 1908, inaugurated a program of graduate study conducted outside of working hours. The results were so successful that a similar plan was finally adopted by the Department of Agriculture. This was done after careful consideration of the recommendations of the Joint Reclassification Commission and after consultation with deans of graduate schools and colleges of agriculture, with university presidents, and with other leaders in higher education throughout the country, who gave not only unanimous approval but cordial assurances of cooperation.

With the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, the graduate school was formally opened in 1921.

During the first year, 1921–22, some 213 students enrolled in the following courses: Statistical methods, genetics, crystallography, agricultural economics, statistical mechanics, mycology, plant physiology, and biochemistry.

The figures for the past year (1938–39) of a total registration of 2,361 students in 110 courses, not including special lecture courses, tells the story of a steady growth and interest in the opportunities offered.

ORGANIZATION AND ADMINISTRATION

Authority for the establishment of the school is derived from joint resolution April 12, 1892 (27 Stat. 395), and the act of Congress of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1010, 1039), providing that "Facilities for study and research in Government departments shall be afforded to scientific investigators and to duly qualified individuals and students under such rules and restrictions as the heads of departments and bureaus may prescribe." See also the organic act establishing the Department of Agriculture (Rev. Stat., sec. 520).

Under this authority the school is supervised by an administrative committee and by a director appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture. The members of the committee are heads of bureaus and other specialists in the Department.

Subject to this formal supervision by the Department, the school operates independently. Its financial operation is separate from governmental budgetary administration, for it was organized as an unofficial undertaking and has never received any congressional appropriation and its classes are held after official hours.

The director is assisted by six assistant directors designated by him, in charge of the following subject-matter groups: I. Mathematics and physical science; II. Social science; III. Biological science; IV. Economics; V. Personnel training; VI. Language and literature.

FACULTY

Most of the 140 instructors in the school are recognized specialists, largely in scientific fields, employed in the Government service. A large proportion of them have left university faculties to come to Washington; they are therefore seasoned classroom teachers, familiar with the best academic practice. Some are faculty members in nearby universities. An alphabetical list of instructors, showing degrees, institutions from which received, subjects taught, is available on request.

STUDENTS

About half of the students are employees of the Department of Agriculture. The rest are from over 50 Government departments and agencies, together with a small registration of men and women outside of the Government.

CURRICULUM

The curriculum includes in the current year (1939–40) the following divisions: Accounting, biology, chemistry, economics, engineering, geography, history, modern languages, public speaking, management, mathematics, meteorology, philosophy, psychology, sociology, soil conservation, statistics, and English composition, English literature, and editing. The curriculum is flexible and changes from year to year as the demands of the service require.

The majority of the current 110 courses are of graduate level. The rest are of the standard undergraduate character, needed by many employees, especially in languages and mathematics. In addition are provided a few courses of a clerical and secretarial nature.

FACILITIES

In no other city in the country is assembled a comparable range of educational facilities. The Library of Congress, unequaled in most major fields of knowledge, the numerous specialized departmental libraries, and the National Archives in a new building, the museums, such as the Smithsonian Institution, National Museum, art galleries, and the various collections and laboratories—all are available to the student. In the Department of Agriculture itself is housed a library of about 400,000 volumes, the largest in the world within several fields. One of the special divisions of this library is the social science reading room, open until 9 every evening.

Courses are conducted in nearly 50 class and lecture rooms and laboratories, most of which are in the South Building of the Department. Six other Government buildings, such as those of the Smithsonian Institution, provide space for courses requiring special facilities. The school has provided all necessary classroom equipment and apparatus.

GENERAL REGULATIONS

Graduate credit can be obtained only by person having a bachelor's degree from an accredited college. Whenever possible, students are required to arrange their program in advance with the college in which they are registered or plan to register for a degree. Except in certain upper undergraduate courses approved as a part of the program, undergraduate courses may be required without credit. Each student must file an official transcript of his collegiate record. The record must show the satisfactory completion of an undergraduate major in the subject chosen for specialization in the graduate school.

RELATIONS TO OTHER INSTITUTIONS

As emphasized in foregoing statements, the school aims not to compete but to cooperate with other institutions of higher learning. It has no authority to grant academic degrees. But, from the beginning, its certification of credits for certain courses has been accepted by universities in all parts of the country. Among these institutions are Columbia, Cornell, Harvard, Johns Hopkins, and Yale Universities, the Universities of Chicago, Michigan, Iowa, Oregon, California, Kansas, Missouri, and Louisiana, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Since 1926 semester certifications issued total 2,015; 1,647 of these are of graduate, advanced undergraduate, or highly technical grade, and 368 of definitely undergraduate level.

The school also certifies credits to the Civil Service Commission as prerequisite courses for taking certain civil-service examinations.

A list of courses available is published twice a year, in September and January, and is sent to all colleges and universities and the Civil Service Commission and to all Government departments and to individuals upon request.

UNDERGRADUATE COURSES

Such undergraduate courses as are found to be desirable are conducted separately from the graduate programs though under the same general administrative control.

Fifteen standard high-school units of work are required as prerequisite for undergraduate courses for credit. Those who have not completed undergraduate programs are urged to do so if possible at an available college.

Some of the courses offered are of a special in-service training nature designed for training on the job and are therefore not given for academic credit and are certified only on a non-academic basis; others are standard undergraduate courses and may be accepted at the discretion of the institution to which certified, when they meet its requirements. Under this system one semester credit is granted for 30 class hours of work plus the required reading and preparation.

PUBLIC LECTURE SERIES AND PUBLICATIONS

One of the most notable services rendered by the school is the series of public lecture courses given by leading authorities, attendance at some of which has taxed the capacity of the auditorium, seating over 600. Among these courses have been series on The History of Science, Public Health, Personnel Administration, Fundamentals of Democracy, Personality Adjustment, and Statistical Methods.

A number of these series have been published at cost and are in widespread demand by libraries, and particularly at colleges and universities, where they are used as regular texts.

These publications include the following: On Least Squares, Lectures and Conferences on Mathematical Statistics, On the Statistical Theory of Errors, Lectures on the Statistical Method, Administrative Management, Current Economic Problems, Elements of Personnel Administration, Understanding Ourselves: A Survey of Psychology Today, and The Adjustment of Personality.

In the revised edition of Introduction to the Study of Public Administration, by Leonard White, professor of public administration in the University of Chicago and former Civil Service Commissioner, is included a brief description of this graduate school, from which, by permission of The Macmillan Co. and Dr. White, two paragraphs are quoted (p. 364):

"Without question, the most elaborate and most successful in-service training institution is the Graduate School of the Department of Agriculture.

"The high standards of instruction and the breadth of training afforded by the graduate school mark it as one of the foremost training institutions of its kind in the world."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks which I will make in Committee of the Whole and to include two short articles on the Walter-Logan bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in two respects, one to include a radio address and the other to include some letters I have received.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the requests are granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a series of news articles published by one of the leading chains of newspapers in America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of other business and any other special orders that may have been entered, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REFUGEES FROM FINLAND

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain such a request. The Chair will entertain a request for the gentleman to address the House for 1 minute.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, this is an extraordinary occasion, and I just want a minute or two to say something about a couple of children that were rescued in Finland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman may address the House for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to be able to announce that there are two children in the gallery——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin will suspend. The Chair calls the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is a violation of the rules of the House for a Member on the floor to introduce anyone in the gallery.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I beg the Chair's pardon, but I am not introducing them. I just want to say that there are two children who were stranded in Finland in the war zone. They got out of there just before——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's remarks are still a violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the extraordinary occasion, the fact that the State Department interested itself——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RISK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short article by David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROSSER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

AMENDMENT TO MOTORBOAT LAWS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6039) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels, to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and to agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, strike out lines 16 to 18, inclusive.
Page 2, line 19, strike out "(b)" and insert "(a)."
Page 2, line 19, strike out "class 1" and insert "classes A and 1."
Page 3, strike out lines 24 and 25 and lines 1 to 6, inclusive, on page 4, and insert:
"(c) Motorboats of classes 2 and 3, when propelled by sail and machinery, or by sail alone, shall carry the colored side lights, suitably screened, but not the white lights prescribed by this section: Provided, however, That motorboats of all classes, when so propelled, shall carry, ready at hand, a lantern or flashlight showing a white light which shall be exhibited in sufficient time to avert collision: Provided further, That motorboats of classes A and 1, when so propelled, shall not be required to carry the combined lantern prescribed by subsection (a) of this section."
Page 4, line 7, strike out "(e)" and insert "(d)."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this agreeable to the minority members of the committee?

Mr. BLAND. This was brought up in a meeting of the committee this morning when there was one other Democrat present and four or five Republicans, including the ranking minority member, the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH]. It was agreed to by all present.

Mr. MICHENER. In general, what is the effect of the changes made by the Senate?

Mr. BLAND. They are very brief. In general the first amendment requires a combination white light to be carried and leaves the law as it is today. We had made some little change, but it was thought it would be better to leave the law as it is and require a certain additional light to be used on those smaller boats.

The other amendment came about as the result of a construction made by the Bureau of Navigation which was found not to exist. It has reference to the maintenance of white lights on certain classes of boats.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has any change been made in the regulations concerning motorboats on the Great Lakes?

Mr. BLAND. Not in the amendments. I do not recall whether there was in the original bill or not, but not in the amendment. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that these amendments are Senator VANDENBERG's amendments.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There has been no change in the bill except as the gentleman has explained?

Mr. BLAND. That is all.

The Senate amendments were agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE FEDERAL DEFICIT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am going to talk about a new subject this morning. [Applause.] It will be new to you New Deal Democrats who applaud, because I want to say to you that as of April 11 we are $2,924,956,701.14 in the red on this year's operations of the Government. Is not this new to you? Certainly it is.

I now want to call your attention to the fact that you cannot go on spending $8,000 a minute more than you take in. You have about reached the national debt limit. Something terrible is going to happen unless you come to realize your error. You Democrats have not thought of bringing in a new tax bill. You Democrats have not thought of trying to cut down these expenses. All you have done this session is to appropriate, appropriate, appropriate! Is that new to you? No; that is not new—these terrible extravagant appropriations. But where are you going to get the money? Not one of you can answer that question. You do not know and I do not think the new dealers care. It is a terrible position you have the country in; correct it at once before it is too late. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an editorial from the Washington Times-Herald.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by J. D. A. Morrow, of the Pittsburgh Coal Co., expressing the damaging effects of the National Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 on the bituminous-coal industry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the disposition of the order of business for the day and any special orders that may have heretofore been entered I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi, I presume, understands the situation?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. I will withhold the point of order and make it on the motion. I want a quorum present. If we are going to discuss this bill we want the Members to hear both sides. This is more important than the ball game.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can make his point of order now, then.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 71]

Arnold	Ditter	Kee	Sabath
Barton	Douglas	Keller	Sacks
Bates, Ky.	Durham	Kelly	Scrugham
Bates, Mass.	Engel	Kirwan	Seccombe
Beam	Fitzpatrick	Lea	Secrest

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 347 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PROMOTION-LIST OFFICERS OF THE ARMY

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (Rept. No. 1963), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 466

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 9243, a bill to provide for the promotion of promotion-list officers of the Army after specified years of service in grade, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

THE LOGAN-WALTER BILL

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6324, with Mr. KERR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss the bill under consideration in detail. I am not prepared for that. It has been fully explained by the able chairman of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. WALTER] and the other members of his subcommittee who bring the bill before us. I wish to go on record as favoring this much-needed and long-delayed reform and to submit a few general observations.

Administrative law has been developing in this country for a great many years, as the complexity of the Government has grown and new functions have been assumed. During the last 7 or 8 years dozens of new governmental agencies have been created in a desperate effort to cure our economic ills by bureaucratic control. Administrative law has mushroomed alarmingly and the harassed businessman has been driven frantic in his efforts to obey the multitude of rules, regulations, and orders promulgated by the inexperienced and dreamy eyed young men who have undertaken the task of "permanently readjusting many of our social and economic arrangements."

I have not forgotten that one of the high priests of the New Deal in its early days, who I believe is now in the molasses business, once said:

> We have a century and more of development to undo * * * and it may require the laying of rough, unholy hands on many a sacred precedent, doubtless calling on an enlarged and nationalized police force for enforcement.

Rough, unholy hands have indeed been laid on many a sacred precedent, and by this bill we propose to stop it.

Five or six years ago regulations were issued, revised, and rescinded, and reissued with bewildering rapidity and all without notice to the citizens affected thereby, and all with the force and effect of law. It was impossible for men in business to ascertain what was forbidden and what was permitted. This confused state of affairs was corrected by the passage of a law requiring that governmental regulations and orders be filed with the United States Archivist and published in the Federal Register before they became effective. This bill will make a longer and more important step toward orderly government by compelling the numerous Government agencies to adopt rules and apply them in accordance with the law of the land.

I doubt if there is a Member of this Congress who cannot cite from his personal knowledge many instances of autocratic, arbitrary, unreasonable, and illegal exercise of authority by our younger bureaus. In some cases this can be attributed to the fact that there are men in high places who are impatient of constitutional restraints and believe the framework of our Government has been outmoded. But for the most part, I believe the bureaucratic conduct we complain about is due to an excess of zeal. The attempts to obtain enlarged authority by departments and agencies and to usurp the functions of each other are familiar phenomena. It is natural for members of boards and commissions to feel that their objectives are of supreme and paramount importance. They cannot be criticized for that, but their activities must be kept within legal limits if we wish to avoid bureaucratic absolutism.

When commissions, boards, authorities, or bureaus are created by act of Congress to perform certain defined functions, they are given authority to make rules to effectuate those functions; and when they make such rules, they are acting in a quasi-legislative capacity. The proposed law would compel them to follow the legislative practice of Congress, which from the beginning has held open public hearings on proposed legislation of general public interest. Americans abhor star-chamber proceedings.

The bill provides that administrative rules shall be issued "only after publication of notice and public hearings." A right of appeal is given to those affected by any administrative rule, but—

> No rule shall be held invalid except for violation of the Constitution or for conflict with a statute or for lack of authority conferred upon the agency issuing it by the statute or statutes pursuant to which it was issued, or for failure to comply with section 2 of this act.

Section 2 requires publication of notice and public hearings before an administrative rule can be issued.

This provision does not permit the court to substitute its judgment for that of an administrative agency. It merely compels the latter to keep within the law. How can any man who believes in our system of justice complain about this feature of the bill?

When an administrative agency applies its regulations to individual cases, it acts in a quasi-judicial capacity, and the bill will require the agency to comply with the elementary rules of court procedure. Intra-agency boards are set up to hear and determine the complaint of an aggrieved person, who "shall have an opportunity at an early day for a full and fair hearing before such board." Written findings of fact, the right to subpena witnesses, and other incidents of ordinary court procedure are provided for. Here, too, a right of appeal to a circuit court of appeals is afforded, but a decision of an agency shall not be reversed unless—

> It is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court (1) that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous; or (2) that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence; or (3) that the decision is not supported by the findings of fact; or (4) that the decision was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded the aggrieved party for a full and fair hearing; or (5) that the decision is beyond the jurisdiction of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be; or (6) that the decision infringes the Constitution or statutes of the United States; or (7) that the decision is otherwise contrary to law.

The judgments of the circuit courts of appeals are made final, except for review by the Supreme Court on writs of certiorari.

These provisions do not interfere with the discretionary powers of the bureaus; they simply compel the bureaus to be law abiding; and they protect American citizens against bureaucratic tyranny.

This bill is not a hasty or ill-considered piece of legislation. It is the product of the best legal minds in the American Bar Association and other leading bar associations throughout the Nation, as well as of able members of the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and the House, after years of study. It has their strong support, and the support of important business, labor, and farm organizations throughout the country.

Its principal opponents are the bureaucrats themselves, who feel they are better qualified to pass on the legality of their actions than the courts. No reasonable man will agree with them.

Too often the men appointed to regulatory bodies are without experience in the private activities they are appointed to regulate. They are likely to be theoretical zealots ardently devoted to a cause. They are not elected by the people and are not responsible to the people as are the Members of Congress who enact the laws creating their jobs and prescribing their duties.

They are immoderately partisan toward the objectives they strive to reach, and the end often obscures the means. They cannot approach a question concerning their power and authority with the fair and impartial point of view of the court.

We have had some renegade judges, but they have been few. Any normal man appointed to the bench leaves his prejudices and predilections behind him and dedicates himself to the high principles of the code of judicial ethics. If we cannot trust our courts to do justice between man and man, and between bureau and citizen, our structure of government is doomed to collapse.

I have discussed the bill before us in its broadest aspects only as they appeal to me. Business in the United States is being strangled by Government interference and bureaucratic control and must be set free.

Let me conclude by quoting the words of a great American statesman, the late Senator Borah:

> Of all forms of government which have ever been permitted to torture the human family, the most burdensome, the most expensive, the most demoralizing, the most devastating to human happiness, and the most destructive of human values is a bureaucracy. It has destroyed every civilization upon which it has fastened its lecherous grip.

[Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to highly commend the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] and his subcommittee for the fine solution they have worked out for a very difficult problem. I also want to thank him and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] for the scholarly and lucid explanation of this bill. It was an effort on the part of the subcommitee to restrain any arbitrary powers that might be assumed by administrative agencies and bureaus.

It was not conceived and worked out in a partisan spirit or by any partisan organization. It was an honest, sincere effort to meet the rising tide of bureaucratic domination which has been threatening to grasp arbitrary power which seems to inspire bureaus and commissions regardless of their political fatherhood.

Abraham Lincoln, who, just 75 years ago this morning, was lying in state in the East Room of the White House, with the halo of martyrdom crowning his brow, never uttered a truer word than when he declared that it was never safe to entrust to any one man or body of men arbitrary power, because it was almost an irresistible tendency of human nature to abuse such power.

One thing that has rather fatigued me in this debate and in similar discussions is the loose statement that all this centralization of government that threatens us is a product of what many persons have referred to as the Hamiltonian idea of a strong, highly centralized government. This unrestrained centralization of power manifested in a few administrative agencies is just the opposite of what Hamilton pictured in the Federalist, which still remains the finest commentary upon the Constitution.

He did favor a government of more energy and centralization in the Executive, and every time we get in a tight place in war and this once in peace we prove he was right by putting into the hands of the Executive power not authorized by the Constitution. We did that in the War between the States with President Lincoln, and in the World War with President Wilson, and each, when the crisis was past, gladly yielded back that power to the Congress that granted it. We hope President Roosevelt will do likewise if we ever see the depression ended.

Hamilton, as shown by his commentaries in the Federalist, favored an Executive with those needed powers granted in the Constitution, but always restrained by a nonpolitical and impartial Supreme Court—which we cannot boast of today—and a Congress unimpeded by any rubber accessories; a Court independent and incorruptible; a Congress representing a people jealous of the sacred rights of the individual. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, at the outset of what I have to say, I wish to compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] on the splendid work he has done in presenting this praiseworthy legislation. [Applause.] I also wish to compliment my good friend the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] on the splendid remarks he made yesterday when he was speaking on the rule. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, to me this legislation is sound legislation. This bill seeks merely to create uniformity in the governmental agencies. The major agencies in our Government are 130 in number, and this does not embrace the bureaus and boards which are within the various agencies. We must remember when we are dealing with this particular question that we are dealing with those rules and those regulations which have to do with a government of approximately 900,000 people who are employed in those separate and several independent agencies and bureaus. These rules and regulations apply to all of our people. These department heads have been vested with power to create rules and to promulgate regulations for the implementation of the laws, and these rules and regulations have been promulgated and established by the several and various departments and agencies. These rules and regulations have the force and effect of law.

May I say in that connection, Mr. Chairman, that in the creation and establishment of these rules and regulations they have not been consistent. There has been a vast difference in the rules and regulations between departments and agencies, and not alone has there been a vast difference between departments and agencies but there has been a difference within the same department and within the same agency in respect of those rules and regulations that have been adopted. These rules have differed insofar as to create confusion within such departments. Some of these rules and regulations have been so confusing and so different that the people generally have not been able to ascertain what they really are or what their true meaning is.

At this particular time I wish to call the attention of the Members to some of the flagrant violations respecting the establishment and promulgation of rules and regulations. Not long ago there came to my personal attention—and I do not doubt that many Members of the House have had similar and like experiences—the fact that in a hearing before a Federal agency the trial hearer was met with a question of admitting certain evidence at the hearing. Objection was made to the admissibility of the evidence. The objection was based on legal grounds and should have been sustained, because the evidence was inadmissible. However, the agent of that Department finally stated, knowing that the law was in exact opposition to the admission of the testimony offered, "I will legislate for this particular case," and he immediately permitted the evidence to come before him. In other words, he legislated in one breath, and in the next he permitted inadmissible evidence to come before the hearing and go into the record. This is just one instance. There are thousands of them.

You recall, as I recall, that quite recently the Federal Communications Commission was forced by a mass protest made all over the Nation to rescind a regulation adopted by it for the sale of time on the air for controversial questions. There was no legal remedy. The mass protest itself was the only remedy; the law was inadequate to reach that particular question. The mass protest caused the rescission of the order.

A few months ago the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor proclaimed a very vicious regulation which would have had a very disastrous effect on small country-weekly newspapers. It would have meant that many of them would have been forced out of existence, had that regulation been imposed upon them.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I cannot; I have only a limited time.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The gentleman has made a statement that is not correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from California may obtain time, if he desires. However, the people made a mass protest from ocean to ocean and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, and the Members of Congress joined in that protest. By reason of it there was a rescission of that rule. There was no law respecting it, but the mass protest was the sole cause of the rescission of that rule and regulation.

In my own congressional district in Indiana there is now in progress an investigation over a grave error in the rules and regulations which were promulgated under the A. A. A. The farmer who was aggrieved was a subscriber. He was ordered by the local administrator of that authority to mow down 21 acres of his growing wheat before it ripened. The farmer protested because, he said, "That is too large an acreage for destruction, taking it in consideration with the total acreage of my crop." But the local administrator said, "That is the rule," and the farmer had no choice. He could but obey. He destroyed his crop, but now he cannot get pay for it because the local supervisor erred in the percentage of the crop that was ordered destroyed. This was in my district. What was the result of it? There was a mild reprimand to the administrator who had erred, but that was all. The farmer's crop was lost, and he had no recourse. There was no law to protect him.

This bill will tend to aid in cases of that particular character because the rules and regulations will be coordinated. They will be classified and published and the people will know what the rules and regulations are in these many and various departments. That alone is a complete justification for the passage of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, it is evident even from the remarks of the gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to the passage of this bill that the need for an administrative law is unquestioned. They have spoken not so much against the establishment of a method of control over the quasi-judicial activities of the various agencies as they have pleaded for the postponement of legislative action to create an administrative law. The President, in appointing the Attorney General's committee to report on such proposed legislation, undoubtedly realized that the need existed; yet he claims unfamiliarity with the Walter-Logan bill, and declines to comment on it other than to express a guarded request that action on an administrative law act be postponed.

Why in the face of this recognized need and why with the Nation-wide approval given this bill by bar associations—local, State, and National, and other organizations interested in the preservation of "government by law"—should legislative action be postponed? It is high time that some action was taken, and delay can but add to the cumulative evidence favorable to an administrative law. Delay prolongs the opportunity for government by men to spread its heinous tentacles and strangle our liberties.

Delay and caution were words unheard when the legislative action was taken to create the majority of the agencies over which this bill proposes to place a checkrein. The various agencies excluded in this bill were created by legislation so carefully and thoughtfully directed that the statute established in itself a method of control over the possible aberrations of those charged with its administration. Indeed it is to be regretted that all such creative statutes could not have had embodied in them the same protective provisions. Had such care and judgment been exercised there would not have been created the need for an administrative law with which we are now faced.

No, Mr. Chairman; I cannot countenance the cry for postponement and delay in this matter. "Justice delayed is justice denied" applies here with much forcefulness. The Walter-Logan bill is a carefully prepared foundation stone upon which we can build to insure justice to the individual—justice as guaranteed to the individual under the concepts of our constitutional form of Government.

Any objection that the bill proposes to set up a system which will swamp the judicial and delay administrative action cannot be rightfully upheld. The psychological effect of an administrative law would restrain the hasty actions of any agency, or official of that agency, in making regulations, or issuing rulings, and thus curtail the number of controversial decisions.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, that the tendency of great power is to exact more power. These agencies have come to the point where they may be classed by all of us as a giant bureaucracy. We must stop this theory of government by men and retain the basic policy in this Nation of government by law. There has been too much abuse of uncontrolled discretionary power in men to regulate and control. Under the present plan, when the rule or regulation is oppressive, then the masses are called upon to protest; or when the action of the agency is such as to meet with the universal disapproval of the people, a popular protest will tend to nullify it; but where a single individual or a single concern has been made to suffer, there is no mass protest to serve him. He is unable to enlist a sufficient number of people in his cause who would contact the department in his behalf and thus aid in securing a nullification of the rule or regulation which has caused the injury complained of. He must bear his burden as the forgotten man without the right of review or appeal under the present plan. This bill gives to the individual and to the masses the right to be heard without discrimination. This bill may not be a cure-all, but it is a step in the right direction, I am confident. It will aid in curbing the power which has been assumed and which has developed a condition which, if permitted to continue without restraint in this country, will eventually mean the loss of our constitutional rights and our liberties in America. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to use to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, known as the Walter-Logan bill, in my judgment is meritorious. One of the indictments against our present governmental activities is that through the years we have allowed to grow up many agencies, bureaus, and subordinate subdivisions of these agencies and bureaus, which carry on much of our governmental work.

Under the Constitution we have a division of the activities of government into the legislative, executive, and judicial. Our forefathers who adopted the Constitution, after long and laborious debate, and, in many cases, compromise, provided for this division of our governmental powers, so that there might be checks and balances, one against the other, and thus safeguard the possibility of permitting autocratic government to take the place of that established under the Constitution. Throughout the years we have zealously safeguarded these three branches of our Federal structure and have guarded against any one of the separate departments encroaching upon the functions or prerogatives of the other.

However, these governmental agencies which have grown up in recent years until they now number over 130, often assume the functions of all 3 departments under the Constitution. They not only lay down the rules and regulations through the authority delegated to them by the Congress, which in effect become laws, but they construe and interpret these rules and regulations and in so doing exercise quasi-judicial functions. Thereafter, they enforce them, thus occupying at one and the same time the 3 separate departments of our Government. Under existing law there is practically no opportunity for a citizen aggrieved by this procedure to appeal to the courts.

The purpose of this bill is to provide against this autocratic exercise of power by bureaus set up by the Congress. It will, to some extent, restore to the Congress the functions of legislation given to it by the Constitution. It will also permit citizens to appeal to the courts in the cases provided by provisions of the act, and thereby restore to the judiciary the rights lodged in it by the Constitution.

Aside from these very worthy objectives, it will also tend to curb the present tendency to permit these bureaus to become autocratic and gradually change our form of government from a representative democracy to that of a totalitarian state. It will preserve in our laws the fundamental purpose underlying our whole system of maintaining a government by law rather than a government by men.

Mr. Chairman, as a part of my remarks under leave granted by the House, I include a very apt discussion of this legislation in the Washington Post of this date by Mr. Mark Sullivan; also an editorial appearing in the Post of the same issue.

THE STATE AGAINST MAN

(By Mark Sullivan)

THE WALTER-LOGAN BILL

The House this week is debating the Walter-Logan bill. To try to explain this measure is to encounter one of the most frequent bedevilments that beset every writer of news from Washington. The bill contains some 4,000 words—and this dispatch is limited to some 800. Even if there were space enough to print the bill in full, its necessarily technical, legal phraseology would not be easily understood.

Yet the bill ought to be understood. It goes to the heart of what is troubling the country and the world—the conflict between the rights of man and the authority of government. It aims to protect the citizen against arbitrary power exercised by agents of government. It aims to save America from being brought under the type of government that has spread over Europe during the past 20 years. The purpose of the bill was stated by one of its original authors, recently deceased Democratic Senator Logan, of Kentucky:

"To stem and, if possible, to reverse the drift * * * which, if it should succeed in any substantial degree in this country, could but result in totalitarianism."

Let us be clear about just what the Walter-Logan bill attempts—and does not attempt. It does not attempt to limit the scope of government. It does not attempt to reduce the authority of agents of government. The Walter-Logan bill attempts only to provide this: That wherever an agency of government attempts to exercise power over a citizen, wherever it lays hands on the citizen's person or property—in every such case the citizen shall have an appeal to a court, a judicial body. That is the same as saying, and no more than saying, that every man shall be entitled to his day in court.

The bill has to do with departments of government, executive bureaus, such as triple A, the Labor Board, scores of others. These agencies are created by Congress. Congress, in creating an agency, gives it certain limited power to make regulations—because Congress cannot provide in advance for every situation that will arise. Congress can only confer the powers in broad terms and authorize the agency to make regulations. The regulations must—or ought to—be confined strictly within the limits of the power conferred by Congress.

But the Government agencies sometimes do not keep within the limits set by Congress. Sometimes they interpret their authority from Congress as authority to do whatever they deem desirable. When Congress wrote the census law it authorized only a limited scope of questions. But the Census Bureau wrote additional questions, and was indignant when anyone challenged those questions.

So Congress sets up the agencies. The agencies thereupon write regulations, thousands of regulations, which citizens are required to obey. And under the regulations, employees of the agencies issue orders, tens of thousands of orders, each requiring a citizen to do a certain thing or refrain from doing another thing. A farmer (in many situations) must plant what the agent of A. A. A. tells him to plant and only as many acres as the agent decrees. Again, just recently a corporation is ready to put television sets on the market, but F. C. C. forbids. There are hundreds of such orders every day. Often the orders are issued by minor employees of the agencies, distant from Washington. Often the orders and regulations are accompanied by penalties. The citizen must obey or run risk. A citizen must answer the questions asked by a census taker or be subject to fine or imprisonment, even though the legality of some questions, the very constitutionality of them, is seriously doubted.

Now, what the Walter-Logan Act provides is merely that every order, every regulation, issued by an executive agency shall be subject to appeal to a judicial body, a court. To put it the other way, if a citizen affected by an order or regulation wishes to appeal to a court, he shall have the right, and there shall be an appropriate court to which he can go.

It must be a true court, a truly judicial body. That is, the judicial body must be impartial, disinterested. It must be a court in which the Government official and the citizen stand exactly equal. This is elementary, but has come to be violated in practice.

Some Government agencies say, in effect, "We are a court ourselves." They say, "if the citizen feels an order or regulation does him injustice, we will give him a hearing." Such a hearing by the same body that issued the order is like saying to the citizen, "Before we compel you to do what we order we will let you talk if you want to." It is a case of the same body acting as both prosecutor and judge.

And that is contrary to the oldest and most fundamental conception of justice. As often put, no man may be a judge in his own case. And what the Walter-Logan bill proposes is that no Government agency shall be a judge in its own case. It proposes to set up a court outside the agency, an independent court, a court which has no more interest in the Government official than in the citizen.

The administration resists the Walter-Logan bill. After it had been endorsed by the Judiciary Committees of both House and Senate; after it had been actually passed by the Senate without a dissenting vote, the administration has held it up nearly a year. The reason? Senator Logan answered:

"The sole issue here presented to Congress is whether we shall have a government by men or a government by law. There are persons connected with the present administration who believe it ought to be a government by men, so they are rabidly opposed to this bill."

[From the Washington Post of April 16, 1940]

BUTTRESSING JUSTICE

The Walter-Logan bill, which is being debated in the House, has been properly singled out as one of the most important pieces of legislation pending before Congress. It would affect more than 100 Federal agencies and bureaus. More important, it would have a vital bearing upon the rights of citizens who come into controversy with those agencies.

The bill is not well understood by the public. This does not mean, however, that it has not been carefully prepared and widely discussed by lawyers and students of government. The House Judiciary Committee report approving the measure expresses doubt whether "there has been legislation proposed in a century which has had more extended and careful study than that given to this bill." It is the product of more than 3 years of work by a special committee of the American Bar Association and carries the endorsement of many organizations of both lawyers and laymen.

The simple purpose of the bill is to define more clearly the rights of the individual in dealing with the Government. Over a period of many decades Congress has created a varied assortment of agencies to enforce regulatory laws. In some instances it has defined the rights of citizens appearing before such authorities. But in many other instances the citizen has no clear-cut right to have his controversy with the Government properly adjudicated. The result, in the words of the House Judiciary Committee, is a "situation of indescribable confusion."

For example, there is no uniform requirement that all rules and regulations set up by governmental agencies be published. Citizens may be prosecuted for violation of rules they have never heard of and which they could not even find in print. The Walter-Logan bill would require publication of such regulations in the Federal Register before they go into effect.

Interested citizens would have an opportunity, moreover, to express their views as to what regulations would be proper and desirable. The bill would require all Federal administrative agencies to conduct public hearings before formulating their rules and regulations.

Ours is a government of laws and not of men. Yet in some instances citizens who have grievances against the Government cannot even demand a hearing. In other cases they find it impossible to appeal their grievances to the courts for proper adjudication. It can scarcely be said that we have "equal justice under law" when the right of appeal to the courts is thus withheld in one instance and granted in another.

The Walter-Logan bill does not attempt to transfer to the courts the functions of quasi-judicial regulatory bodies or other administrative officials. It is merely a means of requiring that these agencies themselves act only within the law. That is an eminently reasonable objective. In the language of the Judiciary Committee, "the law must provide that the governors shall be governed and the regulators shall be regulated, if our present form of government is to endure."

Some provisions of the bill may be found to be unwise. But the principle on which it rests is basically sound. If civil liberties are to be respected, no governmental agency can be permitted to raise itself above the law. As Federal regulation of human relationships becomes more and more extensive, some well-esablished means of buttressing this American concept of justice becomes imperative.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MONKIEWICZ].

Mr. MONKIEWICZ. Mr. Chairman, it has been my pleasure as a member of the Judiciary Committee to take part in the deliberations when this bill came up for consideration. It has also been my pleasure to vote to report it out favorably. Since that time I have given this matter more study and thought; I have listened to the learned arguments of the very able men who discussed this problem when the rule was under consideration. I have also listened diligently to the arguments used in general debate and nothing has taken place that would change my mind about it.

There is nothing alarming about this bill; it is not a reform bill; it is not a revolutionary proposition; it does not propose to introduce or inject anything strange or foreign into our system of government. It proposes to correct a problem or a situation that exists in our Government at the present time.

This problem did not arise over night. It did not come upon us suddenly. This situation had its inception a great many years ago. It continued to exist and it grew until it has reached the great proportions of today.

There is no effort being made here to place the blame for this situation upon this administration or any previous administration. The fault lies with us, the legislative branch of the Government, for allowing this situation to exist and to grow. For a great many years men have given this problem a great deal of time and study so that the measure before us today is the result of work of a long time and not something put together in a hurry.

There are two main sources of objection to this bill. Strange to say, they both admit the existence of the problem and both agree that something should be done about it. They are both in accord with the proponents of this measure that the present system is wrong.

One of these sources offers a solution. It proposes a special court to deal with administrative problems and disputes. This matter of the special court has received the attention of the leading lawyers of the country; most of the reputable bar associations of our country have given it thorough study and examination, and after long deliberation this solution was rejected by them. The matter of a special court has also been considered and studied by the Senate Judiciary Committee and that body, after hearings, rejected it. The House Judiciary Committee also had this court proposition under advisement, and after careful study found the solution to be impractical and impossible.

The other source of objection to this bill does not offer any solution although it admits the existence of the problem. This source merely suggests delay, explaining that in due time the various departments will work out their own problems and eventually set up their own rules.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is just what this bill proposes to do. This measure, outside of a skeleton procedure for appeal, does not intend to impose upon the various departments a fixed set of rules. It merely directs the various agencies to set up their own rules and instructs them to publish these rules so that the public at large will know what they are.

Our difficulty in the last number of years has been that we have endeavored to foist upon American business methods foreign to the American interpretation of fair play and justice. Business is the American way of life. American business for years has enjoyed the highest position in the world. American business, when treated in the American way, will thrive; but just as soon as we begin to impose foreign methods upon it, it will become stinted. Autocratic methods and American business just will not mix. I predict that the enactment of this legislation into law will serve to free our business from the cramped position of recent years. American business wants rules. It wants to play the game according to prescribed rules. Let us give it a fair chance.

Mr. Chairman, I most sincerely hope that this bill will pass. Many of my colleagues taking part in this debate have stated that this is the most important measure under consideration during this session. I agree with them. It has the endorsement of almost every reputable bar association in the country. It has the approval of business and industry. During all the time that this matter was before the Judiciary Committee I received a great many letters, telegrams, and oral appeals in behalf of this measure and not one word of opposition to it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, when I hear gentlemen arise, as did the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] and invoke the name of Abraham Lincoln, I am inclined to paraphrase an expression by a great martyr of the past and say, "O Lincoln, what blunders have been committed in thy name."

Abraham Lincoln was warning then against a concentration of power into the hands of the courts, as this bill would do, which Thomas Jefferson said was the most dangerous thing that could ever happen to this Republic. I believe Jefferson said that if this Republic was ever destroyed, it would be destroyed by the courts.

The gentleman from Kansas goes on to say that Alexander Hamilton believed in the concentration of power, but he wanted to give it to the Chief Executive. Alexander Hamilton never went as far as this bill does to concentrate the powers of the Government into the hands of the courts.

The distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] spoke about some farmer in his district who has been imposed upon by his acreage allotments. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that this bill is striking directly at the heart of the Rural Electrification Administration that has done more for his district than all the other governmental agencies combined have for the last 20 years.

Let me also remind the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], who on yesterday intimated that it was communism that was opposed to this bill, that communism and fascism are merely symptoms of the same disease, one of them is the fever and the other is the chill of the dying liberties of mankind. This bill is backed by the utilities fascisti, the most deadly enemy to economic democracy this country has ever seen.

What this bill would do if put into effect would be to increase the facilities of the utilities system to impose the most corrupt Government this Nation has ever seen.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman point out some of the rights that some of these companies would have that they have not got now?

Mr. RANKIN. I certainly will. They would drag every agency that interferes with their nefarious conduct into court by spurious litigation and string it out from year to year. The gentleman's memory cannot be so short as to forget what they did or tried to do to the T. V. A. time after time. They dragged the Tennessee Valley Authority into court with spurious litigation and strung it out for years.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. WALTER. Was it not possible to string out that litigation because of the present law?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; but this makes it possible to string it out again after all legitimate issues have been settled. Let me tell you what is behind it. In the first place, this law was first proposed by the American Bar Association, a super aggregation of corporation lawyers, who as a rule are dictated to by the railroad companies, the power companies, and other utilities.

Why did you leave out the Interstate Commerce Commission that is today an accessory to the thievery within the law or within their own regulations, that robs the people of the South and the West by discriminatory freight rates that no other country on earth would tolerate? Why did you exempt them?

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. COX. What agencies would the gentleman put in and which ones would he take out?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, we are not going to put in any, because this bill will never become a law, at least in its present form.

Mr. COX. There is no doubt in the gentleman's mind, is there, that this bill will pass this House by an overwhelming majority?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly there is doubt about its passage in its present form.

Why did you leave out the Interstate Commerce Commission, that is passing regulations now and robbing the people of the South and the West through discriminatory freight rates, while you have put in the R. E. A., the greatest agency for the benefit of the farmers that this Government has ever seen?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so that I may answer that question?

Mr. RANKIN. No. I will give the gentleman plenty of time to answer it.

Mr. WALTER. I shall yield myself some time.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] yesterday, when speaking on this subject, evidently had not read a news article that came out of Washington and was published this morning in the New York Times.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. COX. I confess that I never read it, but the gentleman himself admitted yesterday that he had never read the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, I looked over the bill carefully, and, as far as that is concerned, there is enough evil on page 15 to kill a dozen such bills. Mr. Chairman, right down in Georgia, the Georgia Power Co. is now in trouble. The utilities would kill the Security and Exchange Commission. Why? They want to go back to Wall Street, with their skulduggery. The Security and Exchange Commission is demanding that they come up and comply with the holding company law. Do you know what is in that holding company law? Listen to this.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Let me finish my statement. Listen to this. I am reading from the holding company law:

It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, to make any contribution whatsoever in connection with the candidacy, nomination, election, or appointment of any person for or to any office or position in the Government of the United States, State, or any political subdivision of a State, or any agency, authority, or instrumentality or any one or more of the foregoing, or to make any contribution to or in support of any political party or any committee or agency thereof.

Down in Georgia today they are having another Georgia "cakewalk." The Georgia Power Co., owned by the Commonwealth & Southern, presided over by Mr. Wendell Willkie, who is trying to induce the Republican Party to nominate him for the Presidency, is now being called to account for violation of this law.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman mention my name in connection with the Georgia Power Co.?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. COX. Or mean to intimate that I have the slightest interest in that company?

Mr. RANKIN. None whatever. I said the gentleman did not even know about this.

Mr. COX. I have been as violent in my attacks on that company as has the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, I cannot admit that. I do not believe that they would charge the gentleman with that. So far as this House is concerned they regard me as Power Trust enemy No. 1.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman indicate just how this bill will destroy the Securities and Exchange Commission?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. Or destroy the Rural Electrification Administration?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEEFE. I would like to have the gentleman state it.

Mr. RANKIN. I will tell you exactly. By stringing out litigation. They would bring an injunction suit and try it over here a thousand miles from your city. Then when they got beat they would come back and take another hold. They would string this litigation out until they could browbeat the people as they are trying to do in Portland, Oreg., now into submitting to their domination.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman answer this question?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. Is there anything in the law today that prevents them from carrying on litigation in the courts and stringing it out?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes. They do not have any right to go in and run the agency itself.

Mr. KEEFE. They do not have any right. Will they have any right to go in and run the agency under this bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes. They will claim that right, and they will litigate for it until doomsday.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman think that an agency which can be run by some power company should have the attention of the Congress, as is attempted in the pending bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, they should have the protection of the Congress, and they do have it. They have the protection of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Out here in St. Louis—this is what they are afraid of—listen to this:

Officials denied that there was anything personal in any intimations from some of Mr. Willkie's associates that the S. E. C. favored the North American Co. As a matter of fact, the North American Co. owns the Union Electric Co. of Missouri.

And today the Securities and Exchange Commission is bringing that corrupt outfit to justice and indicting the officials it has corrupted all over that country, Democrats and Republicans. [Applause.]

Oh, Mr. Chairman, this bill would paralyze the S. E. C. and permit to continue this gigantic octopus known as the Power Trust—these utilities holding companies that are today robbing the people of Georgia in overcharges for electric lights and power amounting to $11,000,000 a year; that are today robbing the American people from one end of the country to the other, including Indiana of $24,000,000, Wisconsin of $20,000,000; robbing the American people, the consumers of electric power and lights, of a billion dollars a year and denying to the average individual the use of those electrical appliances that go to make it possible for them to live in this modern electric age and enjoy the comforts and conveniences of modern life.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. CELLER. This bill makes no distinction between trivial matters and important matters. Every trivial matter can be brought into court.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I have said that already. I pointed that out.

Mr. CELLER. And the S. E. C. would be tied up for months.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. I pointed that out.

Now, why do they subject the Rural Electrification Administration to all this annoyance at the hands of a bunch that is carrying on through the holding companies, with six or eight billion dollars of water in their capital structures, robbing every man that turns an electric switch, except in a few isolated areas? Why turn the Rural Electrification Administration over to them, when they have been spending money by the millions to try to cripple it, building "spite" lines into communities, disturbing farmers, and trying to kill the greatest movement that has ever been set on foot for the benefit of the farming people of this Nation? Why, oh, why do they subject the Federal Power Commission to all these indignities and put them at the mercy of this gigantic octopus that sprawls over the Nation and winds its tentacles about every enterprise and every home that uses electricity, that it may strangle and destroy the Federal Power Commission that is today rendering the greatest service in its history, saving for the American people the water power of this Nation, the greatest natural resource in all the world outside of the soil from which we live? Why, oh, why do they want to turn them over to this bunch of corporation lawyers, some of whom are drawing fees that almost make the salary of the President of the United States look like a tip to the waiter?

No, Mr. Chairman, this bill is not in the interest of the American people—and I say that with all deference to my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]. This bill will do infinitely more harm than good.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] said he might support this bill. But I am sure he will not support it in its present form. Right at his very door today the people of Portland, Oreg., are struggling with this octopus known as the Power Trust, this superutility, that is trying to impose upon them its will and fasten upon them a policy that will enable that outfit to suck the economic lifeblood from the people of that great northwest country and prevent them from enjoying the benefits they should derive from Bonneville and from Grand Coulee.

A few years ago I stood on the banks of that great stream. No man outside of the West has worked harder for Bonneville than I have. I stood on the banks of that magnificent Blue Danube of the West and I saw down the years to come a prosperous country, happy homes, thriving enterprises that this very outfit that is pushing this bill from the outside would now destroy and rob those people of the benefits of the great natural resources with which God has blessed them. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, my friend the gentleman from Mississippi has made a great contribution to the setting up of regulatory measures which have operated upon the power trusts of this country, and for that I applaud him. But he misses the whole point of this bill.

It has been demonstrated on this floor that one of the primary purposes of the bill is to prevent the further intermingling of the powers of government; and I would like to say for the benefit of the gentleman from Mississippi that "the doctrine of separation of powers, of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the Federal Government is fundamental in the American theory of constitutional government. One branch is not to encroach upon the other except insofar as authorized by the Constitution. Essential functions of the legislative are not to be usurped by the Executive nor by the judiciary. Similarly, the legislative is not to interfere with the other coordinate departments of the Government except where the intermingling of spheres of action is authorized or contemplated by the Constitution." In reference to the Securities and Exchange Commission I would like to quote from a decision of the Supreme Court which was briefly referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania on yesterday. In reply to an attack made upon the courts of this country by the present dean of the Harvard law school, who at one time was a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, I quote from this decision, as follows:

> The action of the Commission finds no support in right principle or in law.

Now, mind you, this is the Commission about which so many Members of this House have manifested great solicitude. Continuing, the Court said:

> It is wholly unreasonable and arbitrary. It violates the cardinal precept upon which the constitutional safeguards of personal liberty ultimately rest—that this shall be a Government of laws—because, to the precise extent that the mere will of an official or an official body is permitted to take the place of allowable official discretion or to supplant the standing law as a rule of human conduct, the Government ceases to be one of laws and becomes an autocracy. Against the threat of such a contingency the courts have always been vigilant, and, if they are to perform their constitutional duties in the future, must never cease to be viligant, to detect and turn aside the danger at its beginning.
>
> The admonition of Mr. Justice Bradley in Boyd v. United States (116 U. S. 616, 635) should never be forgotten: "It may be that it is the obnoxious thing in its mildest and least repulsive form; but illegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing in that way, namely, by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of procedure. * * * It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen, and against any stealthy encroachments thereon. Their motto should be 'obsta principiis.'"
>
> Arbitrary power and the rule of the Constitution cannot both exist. They are antagonistic and incompatible forces; and one or the other must of necessity perish whenever they are brought into conflict. To borrow the words of Mr. Justice Day: "There is no place in our constitutional system for the exercise of arbitrary power." Garfield v. Goldsby (211 U. S. 249, 262). To escape assumptions of such power on the part of the three primary departments of the Government is not enough. Our institutions must be kept free from the appropriation of unauthorized power by lesser agencies as well. And if the various administrative bureaus and commissions, necessarily called and being called into existence by the increasing complexities of our modern business and political affairs, are permitted gradually to extend their powers by encroachments—even petty encroachments—upon the fundamental rights, privileges, and immunities of the people, we shall, in the end, while avoiding the fatal consequences of a supreme autocracy, become submerged by a multitude of minor invasions of personal rights, less destructive but no less violative of constitutional guaranties. Jones v. Securities and Exchange Commission (298 U. S. 1, 33; 80 L. ed. 1025.)

[Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, the passage of the Logan-Walter bill is of unusual importance. The men who wrote the Constitution believed that the freedom which had been won upon the battlefields of the Revolutionary War could best be preserved by keeping separate the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the Government. It was their considered judgment that a system of checks and balances was the method best designed to keep government in the hands of the people and to prevent any abuse of power.

In keeping with this policy Congress, for more than a century and a quarter, refrained almost entirely from any attempt to delegate its lawmaking authority. It was not until 1887 that the first permanent Government bureau was created—the Interstate Commerce Commission. Between the years 1789 and 1932 but 13 major commissions and regulatory bodies were created. Between 1933 and 1938, however, 50 have been added. Within these bureaus other agencies have developed and additional minor departments created, to say nothing of the many Government corporations that have come into being, until today we face the startling fact that approximately 130 Federal agencies have the authority to make, administer, and enforce rules and regulations which have the binding force of law. We have witnessed the spectacle of Government bureaus, none of the members of which have been elected by the people, making a law and then acting as its own judge, jury, and executioner in the enforcement of it. Such autocratic power was never intended to be conferred by those who drafted the Constitution.

President Roosevelt sensed the danger of government through irresponsible bureaucracies when, in his annual message to Congress on January 3, 1936, he said:

> * * * In 34 months we have built up new instruments of public power. In the hands of a people's government this power is wholesome and proper. But in the hands of political puppets of an economic autocracy such power will provide shackles for the liberties of the people. Give them their way and they will take the course of every autocracy of the past—power for themselves, enslavement for the public.

The businessman, both large and small, the workman in the factory, even the housewife, have felt in varying degrees the lash of bureaucratic government and a tightening of the shackles upon their liberties. Even the States and their political subdivisions are not exempt.

The extent to which an entire State may be affected was disclosed by the action of the Chairman of the Social Security Board in refusing to pay to the State of Ohio the sum of $1,338,160.92 lawfully due the old-age pension fund of the State. A more disgraceful abuse of power has probably never been witnessed. Merely because ex-Governor Davey of Ohio engaged in a petty political quarrel with the administration in Washington a power-drunk bureaucrat imposed the equivalent of a fine of $1,338,160.92 upon the State of Ohio and its more than 6,000,000 people.

Those who live in Ohio are not the only ones who have felt the tyranny of government through bureaucracy. A few weeks ago the Federal Communications Commission issued an order which postponed the starting date of television programs because that Commission had decided that television needed more research and because the rapid strides in television will make the sets of today obsolete in a year or two. It has been our privilege to watch the development of the automobile and the radio. Does anyone believe that the automobile industry would be where it is today if Henry Ford, for example, had been told that he could not market his first model on the ground that it might be obsolete in a year or two? Does anyone believe that the radio would have reached its high state of perfection had the public been barred from purchasing instruments during the experimental stages of its development? While the Federal Communications Commission is exempt from the provisions of the Logan-Walter bill, the action of the Commission in this instance is a striking illustration of the far-reaching effect of bureaucratic power.

Before the policy of government by bureaucracy came into being this was strictly a government of laws. It was not difficult for any person to familiarize himself with the law. A lawyer had no trouble in advising his clients as to the law. Today we are lost in a maze of rules, regulations, orders, and edicts which emanate from Washington in an ever-increasing volume. The rule of today may be changed by the regulation of tomorrow, and it requires nothing more than the whim or caprice of a department head to do it. No attorney can safely advise his clients today as to their rights, as no compilation exists of the great mass of rules and orders which have been made for the regulation of their lives and property. The Government, in order to bring some order out of chaos, is now undertaking the codification of all bureau-made laws. Before the job is completed it is estimated that those already in effect will fill 23 volumes of 1,200 pages each, but as they are all subject to repeal or change overnight, the code will be of but little value. Truly we are fast becoming a government of men through a fourth branch of government, against which the constitutional system of checks and balances does not operate. Orders, rules, and regulations harass us all. The filling out of forms has become a part of our daily life. In many cases, particularly so far as the small business is concerned, additional help has been necessary solely to supply the data requested by Government agencies.

On the subject of legislation and government by men let me again quote Mr. Roosevelt, who observed:

> The doctrine of regulation and legislation by "master minds," in whose judgment and will all the people may gladly and quietly acquiesce, has been too glaringly apparent at Washington during these last 10 years. Were it possible to find "master minds" so unselfish, so willing to decide unhesitatingly against their own personal interests or private prejudices, men almost Godlike in their ability to hold the scales of justice with an even hand, such a government might be to the interest of the country, but there are none such on our political horizon, and we cannot expect a complete reversal of all the teachings of history.

This utterance was not made by Mr. Roosevelt while he was President; it was made on March 2, 1930, when he was Governor of New York.

No one will deny that certain administrative agencies are essential to the proper administration of government, nor will it be denied that some rules and regulations, within reasonable bounds, are necessary. The Logan-Walter bill will not affect these, but it will do much to free the American people from the tyranny of departmental government. For a number of years Congress has been delegating to the executive department and to Government departments more authority than was ever intended under our form of government. Much of this authority must be recaptured by Congress if we are to continue as a government of laws. Until that can be done the Logan-Walter bill will be a means toward curbing excessive abuse of power on the part of those to whom such authority has been delegated.

The Logan-Walter bill represents years of study by the American Bar Association and by Congress. It seeks to more clearly define the rights of the individual in his dealings with the Government. It provides for uniform procedure in Government departments, and, if citizens desire it, public hearings may be had before rules and regulations become effective. If this bill should pass, citizens may no longer need to fear that they will be prosecuted for rules they never heard of and which they could not find in any publication. While it cannot be expected to correct all of the abuses of power so prevalent under our present departmental system of government, it will go a long way toward protecting personal and property rights. Through the creation of bureau upon bureau, Washington has become a wilderness of alphabetical agencies, representing a type of government quite popular in some parts of Europe, but not in keeping with American ideals. The Logan-Walter bill will at least apply American principles to the system. [Applause.]

(Mr. ELSTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is only human nature that the bureaucrats should object to this bill. I was talking to one of them recently and asked him how he could justify the fact that the law provided no effective review for the decisions of his agency. He said: "It is not necessary in our case, for our decisions are always fair." That is what he thinks, of course; that is what they all think. They would not decide the way they do unless they thought they were deciding wisely. On the other hand it is just as fundamental in human nature for a citizen to feel that a decision against him is unfair unless he has at least a chance to have it reviewed and have its fairness considered by someone other than the person who made the decision.

The very fact that the bureaucrats claim that this natural, reasonable, and human requirement will paralyze their work shows their inability to understand the functioning of freedom and the ways of free men. If the bureaucrats were all-wise, they would have no fear, for they would be upheld so uniformly that appeals would be discouraged; for we must remember that even under this law appeals will cost time and money. On the other hand, if the bureaucrats are so all-wrong that appeals will paralyze their work, then it is in the public interest that their work should be paralyzed. But they say, and we have heard it expressed here today, that their regulations will be tied up not because they are unwise or unjust but merely for delay and for embarrassment, merely because of the sheer cussedness of the people they deal with. I submit to this House that this reveals the wholesale contempt of many bureaucrats for the good sense and good faith of their victims and is one good reason for this legislation.

We have heard surmises as to the attitude of the President toward this legislation. I do not think we have any hope of securing his approval. An Executive who would destroy the independence of a body which had functioned as satisfactorily as the Civil Aeronautics Authority, who would destroy entirely the independent Air Safety Board, and would, without warning, throw our air commerce back under Executive domination, as the President has done in his third and fourth reorganization plans, can be expected to be the foe of the Logan-Walter plan for the independent review of administrative laws and orders.

The bill exempts "any matter * * * relating to the internal revenue." This must be because it is presumed that the Board of Tax Appeals provides independent review of internal-revenue matters. It could not be because no independent review is needed in tax matters, for certainly there is no function of Government where the citizen needs protection against unfair regulations or orders as much as in tax matters, where his property may be taken away from him unjustly.

It is very hollow comfort to say that he must pay, regardless of the justice of the tax-gatherer's demands, and then bring suit and if successful, hope that some day Congress will reimburse him. The Board of Tax Appeals, however, has jurisdiction over only gifts, inheritance, and income taxes, and the rest of the broad field of Federal taxes are collected without any chance for independent review.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Why are matters affecting the Internal Revenue Department taken out of the bill, but matters affecting the Coast Guard, which sometimes refers to national defense, are included?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. There is one class of exemptions that I think clearly depend on the fact that independent review is provided. My suspicion is that some of the exemptions were put in here merely to gain votes for the bill and I am opposed to a number of the exemptions.

Mr. CELLER. Why have any exemptions then?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I have no time to yield further for this line of inquiry. Mr. Chairman, I want to give you an example of what happens under the social security situation.

In Ohio a taxpayer has had the collection of his Ohio share of the unemployment compensation tax, in the amount of approximately $12,000, enjoined by the Ohio courts as being contrary to law, but although the Ohio law has been approved by the Social Security Board as in conformity with the Federal law, on the same set of facts the collector of internal revenue has required this taxpayer to pay his Federal tax, and from this decision there is no appeal which will stop payment.

We have seen in the past year a refusal of the Social Security Board to make payments to the State of Ohio under circumstances which this House thought were contrary to law, but the State of Ohio was helpless to recover the tax or to have its case effectively reviewed in court.

This bill would correct this evil, and a small amendment, which I shall propose tomorrow, would give the taxpayer under social security and other taxes the chance to have his case receive an independent review.

The bureaucratic objection to such review is that the Government needs the money so badly and so promptly that there is not time to determine before payment whether payment is being properly required.

I would answer that I hope my Government has not reached a state where it must rely upon unjust taxes in order to exist.

The Logan-Walter bill is, in my opinion, the most significant measure we have considered at this session. If it passes and is wisely and efficiently administered, there is hope for preserving the democratic process in a complex world. If it fails, if as its enemies say, there is no longer any place for this principle in our Government, then the hope for the preservation of democracy is gone.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, almost a month ago the Senate passed and sent to this House S. 3046, which amends the original Hatch Act and extends the provisions of that law to employees of States and other political subdivisions, who are paid in full or in part from the funds of the Federal Government. Since that time the House Committee on the Judiciary has had this bill under consideration.

I have no way of knowing what the intentions of the Committee on the Judiciary may be in regard to this measure, but it is my feeling that there can be no valid reason why there should be longer delay by the committee in reporting it out for consideration by the membership of this body. That feeling, I have been assured, is shared by the majority of the Members of the House.

I recognize fully the fact that some Members still fail to realize that the people whom they represent are, almost without exception, favorable to this legislation and are demanding its enactment into law. I recognize equally the further fact that a few politicians of the boss type are strenuously opposing the bill because they see in it the death knell of their cherished loot or spoils patronage system which has enabled them to perpetuate their political control. I realize they are doing everything in their power, exerting all the pressure they can, to kill this legislation.

Certainly no one who believes in clean politics, efficiency, and honesty in government, can have any objection to the Hatch Act and the proposed amendments. Happily the vast majority of the people of this Nation do believe in clean politics, honesty, and efficiency and do favor the Hatch Act. It is the manifest duty of the representatives of those people to accept their mandate and support the legislation they want regardless of pressure by political bosses.

The time has arrived to strip all the camouflage from consideration of this bill, to brush aside the smoke screen of petty political ambitions, and determine whether we are to have honesty and efficiency in government or not.

Public approval of this legislation has been echoed by virtually the entire press, the radio commentators, and other media of public expression. It is difficult for me, in view of that, to condone the attitude of those who seek to scuttle this bill.

Let those who oppose this legislation have full opportunity to speak out and state candidly, if they will, their reasons for opposition.

The proponents of the bill, confident that the majority of the Members of this House will be governed only by the wishes and welfare of those whom they represent, are not fearful of the outcome. We do, however, enter a most vehement protest against the use of dilatory and obstructionist tactics to prevent S. 3046 from being given full consideration by the membership of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself a half minute.

Mr. Chairman, I did not know that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] was going to talk about something other than the bill under consideration. I feel, however, that an explanation is necessary because of what he said.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I will not yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is not stating the facts.

Mr. WALTER. The bill that the gentleman has mentioned was referred to a subcommittee last month. The subcommittee held two or three hearings on the bill, and the full committee has been considering this very important legislation twice a week at the regular meetings for 3 weeks. There is a very serious question involved, and certainly the statement that our committee is not acting as promptly and expeditiously as it possibly can is not entirely correct.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

(Here the gavel fell.)

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not share the faith of my friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] in the infallibility of commissions and bureaus; neither do I have, as he has, more faith in the bureaucrats of the Nation than I have in the courts. I would rather my rights be passed upon by the courts than by the bureaucrats.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a second?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I do not want to get into this Hatch bill matter here.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am not going to take the gentleman into it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Well, the gentleman will take me into it. I may say to him that I am very strong for the Hatch bill. I think the committee should report it out promptly for the consideration of the House, and I certainly want our committee to act now.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is not what I was going to speak on.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi is worried about dilatory suits and delays. On page 14 there is this salutary provision in the bill:

> The courts shall have jurisdiction and power to impose damages in any case where the decision of the agency or independent agency is affirmed and the court finds that there was no substantial basis for the petition for review.

Yes; anybody who brings one of these dilatory suits may be punished by the assessment of damages and costs. Now, this measure comes not as a passing thought of someone. This measure grows out of several years of careful and painstaking investigation by many able men. It was sponsored in the Senate by the late distinguished Democratic Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Logan, who for many years was attorney general for the State of Kentucky and for many years sat on its highest court and was chief justice of that court. I am sure that no Kentuckian was ever more concerned about the rights of the people and the orderly carrying out of the acts of Congress than Senator Logan himself.

The sponsor of the bill in the House is our own able and distinguished Democratic colleague from Pennsylvania; so this is not a case of a Republican minority fighting any of the agencies of the Government. This bill is sponsored by able and distinguished Democrats. It received almost unanimous approval of our Judiciary Committee.

I was very much impressed with an editorial appearing in the Washington Daily News on April 11, 1940. We have built up, perhaps, 137 bureaus, commissions, and other agencies of this Government and they have hundreds of thousands of officials and employees. In the last 7 years we have added bureau upon bureau and commission upon commission, and we have added about 400,000 Federal officeholders.

This very able editorial reads, in part:

> The agencies make rules, which in effect are laws. They interpret and enforce their own rules. And they sit in judgment on those accused of violating the rules. In them, then, are combined the three powers—legislative, executive, and judicial—which the Constitution undertook to keep separate in order that Americans might be free from the tyranny of government.

So it is that the records of many of these agencies are filled with examples of abuse of bureaucratic power.

Congress has conferred upon these bureaus and commissions extraordinary powers. It has given to them legislative, judicial, and executive power. We have conferred no such power upon any other group or agency in this Government.

There is another very illuminating statement in this editorial:

The purpose of the bill is to curb a fatal tendency as old as the history of governments—the tendency of bureaucracy to abuse the power it has and to grasp ceaselessly for more. Specifically, the proposal is to check and balance the lawmaking, the law-interpreting, and the law-enforcing activities of Federal administrative agencies.

I believe one of the ablest speeches I ever heard on this question was made before some town meeting in Massachusetts a few years ago. It was not a political meeting or political speech. That speaker said that the thing that all of us had to fear all the time was power—not merely power in the hands of Republicans or Democrats, but political power in any man's hands—because, as this editorial points out, the tendency is to abuse power and to seek ceaselessly more power. They often justify themselves by urging the desirable purposes and ends they seek to serve.

In this bill, what do we seek to do? To give American citizens who feel themselves aggrieved by some rule or decision of a commission, bureau, or board the right to go into the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and have the facts and the law passed upon by an unbiased court. No one ever heard of courts destroying any country. They have neither the purse nor the sword. Nations are destroyed and the liberties of people are taken by executives with the sword in one hand and the purse in the other hand. The courts hold neither the purse nor the sword. They have no power except the influence of righteous and just decisions in protecting the rights of the people. [Applause.]

Speaking further about this bill, the editorial continues:

It is designed to expedite administrative processes, to reduce their cost, and to insure that ours shall continue to be a government by law, with the part men must take in it increased in real effectiveness but safeguarded against abuse.

Thus we will protect the liberties of the American people. If we cannot entrust our liberties to the courts, with only one function to perform—judicial—how can we trust them to these bureaucrats, in whom have been vested legislative powers, judicial powers, and executive powers to pass on acts of Congress, and at the same time to make their own rules, regulations, and orders having the effect of laws, and then pass upon their own rules, regulations, and orders, and then execute them? If you are going to put the halter on anybody, on whom will you put it—the group that has the three great powers or the group, the courts, that are able, free from politics, and free from bias? The courts do not make or execute the laws. They merely interpret them. If you cannot trust the courts, the judicial branch of our Government, where can you safely rest the liberties and the rights of the American people? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, the issue which the Walter-Logan bill presents is whether the Congress is to be placed in a position of abject and servile subjection to numerous governmental boards, commissions, and agencies, or whether the Congress will resume its functions as a legislative body.

I firmly believe that the present usurpation of power by the bureaucratic agencies, if not restrained, will of necessity result in a species of despotism, which will become so firmly entrenched that it will be difficult to dislodge.

There is ample evidence that in many instances these instrumentalities have not hesitated to trample on the most sacred rights of citizens. It is surely known to every Member of Congress the extent to which businessmen have become the victims of political appointees, who, clothed with delegated power, have assumed to rule because of their self-admitted superior excellence and superlative genius.

The vigor with which this bill is opposed by the Government bureaucracy, now entrenched here, is in and of itself a threat to free government. It is obvious that the increasing power of a growing administrative organization is always accompanied by a decreasing power on the part of the rest of society to resist its further growth and control.

Are we not fully aware that throughout the world today liberties are being destroyed by those who are displacing government by law and substituting government by men? I believe that free men and women in this country are looking to the Congress to remove every vestige of this totalitarian technique from our system of government. [Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD] such time as he may desire.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, if I understand this bill it proposes that general rules and regulations be based on hearings, in advance of their promulgation.

That would certainly be a very undemocratic—aye—unjust proceeding. It would in the end mean—and I believe that is the end sought by the outside interests that are supporting this bill—that the great and powerful groups, who are interested only in their own particular and limited interests, could employ batteries of high-priced lawyers who, by interposing unlimited objections, could thus block all restraint while the rank and file, in whose interest the rule was designed to operate, would be barred from being heard. As a matter of fact section 2 (c) of this bill, according to a study made by the Brookings Institution, "seems not only to permit, but almost to invite, tactics which would in effect prevent the administration of any law opposed by a well-financed pressure group."

It may be remarked here that the fear of administrative absolutism is the motivating force behind this bill. At least that is the straw man set up by those who wish to conduct their business without any sort of regard for the general welfare.

In commenting on the doctrine of judicial formula, the Brookings Institution has this to say at the conclusion of its study:

The desire to extend a judicial form of procedure, with judicial review, to legislative and discretionary action on the part of the administrative authorities, is based upon a trust in the judicial formula, combined with a distrust of administrative experience, both of which are carried so far as to cause forgetfulness of the constitutional separation of powers. Not the administration alone, but the courts as well, interpret the Constitution as meaning that there is a sphere of administrative action over which the constitutional courts have no control except as to the question of regularity. To call this sphere "absolutism" is to forget that the separation of powers is designed explicitly to prevent one branch of government from becoming absolute and usurping the functions of the others. No progress would be made by seeking to substitute a real and all-pervading judicial absolutism for the imaginary administrative absolutism, which is charged but not proved by supporters of the judicial formula.

Finally, the doctrine of the judicial formula is wrong in its fundamental objectives. Even if its doubtfully constitutional features and its most rash departures from the established system of constitutional and administrative law were eliminated, its animating purpose, the desire to subject every possible disagreement between the individual and the administration to complete control by the courts, is opposed to the inevitable, necessary, and useful evolution of administrative procedures and administrative and judicial controls that have been a notable feature of Federal Government during more than half a century. The theory is based on the moribund conception that law cannot prevail or justice be done except through the courts. It fails to accord to administrative authorities and procedures the degree of power and of finality which the courts themselves, applying the laws under the Constitution of the United States, have recognized as belonging to those authorities and procedures. Because it looks backward and tries to revive the very system of judicial regulation of business and industry which proved so impossible as to lead to the establishment of administrative regulatory bodies, it should be discarded. Because it destroys and does not construct, because it offers no real protection to the citizen but does menace effective administration; because it rests upon dead theory instead of evolving reality, the doctrine of the judicial formula should be rejected.

The National Labor Relations Act itself provides for judicial review by the circuit courts of appeals of every final order made by the Board. See section 10 (e) and section 10 (f).

Until the order is approved by the court it is unenforceable and carries no fines or penalties. The Supreme Court of the United States has several times reviewed the provisions of the statute and has pointed this out. For example, in the well-known case of National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation (301 U. S. 1), the Supreme Court, speaking through Chief Justice Hughes, said:

> The act establishes standards to which the Board must conform. There must be complaint, notice, and hearing. The Board must receive evidence and make findings. The findings as to the facts are to be conclusive, but only if supported by evidence. The order of the Board is subject to review by the designated court, and only when sustained by the court may the order be enforced. Upon that review all questions of the jurisdiction of the Board and the regularity of its proceedings, all questions of constitutional right or statutory authority are open to examination by the court. We construe the procedural provisions as affording adequate opportunity to secure judicial protection against arbitrary action in accordance with the well-settled rules applicable to administrative agencies set up by Congress to aid in the enforcement of valid legislation. It is not necessary to repeat these rules which have frequently been declared. None of them appears to have been transgressed in the instant case. Respondent was notified and heard. It had opportunity to meet the charge of unfair labor practices upon the merits, and by withdrawing from the hearing it declined to avail itself of that opportunity. The facts found by the Board support its order and the evidence supports the findings. Respondent has no just ground for complaint on this score.

These provisions of the statute have been constantly availed of to obtain judicial review of Board orders. There have been more than 100 cases of this one character in the circuit courts of appeals and the Supreme Court of the United States. Attached hereto is a list of the cases in which Board orders have been reviewed by the Supreme Court. In only 2 of these cases—Sands Manufacturing and Columbian Enameling & Stamping Co.—was a Board order entirely set aside. In 2 the orders were modified—Fansteel and Consolidated Edison Co. In the other 15 cases the Board order was enforced in toto. In addition to these Supreme Court cases there have been about 100 final cases in the circuit courts of appeals.

Although the findings of the Board as to the facts if supported by evidence are conclusive upon the court, the Supreme Court has construed this several times to mean that there must be substantial support in the evidence for the Board's findings. This is the same rule which applies to all administrative agencies, including the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission. The procedure of the National Labor Relations Act was modeled upon the Federal Trade Commission Act. There is no more reason to exempt the Federal Trade Commission than the National Labor Relations Board. Indeed, the records before the Smith committee investigating the National Labor Relations Board show that its litigation record in the Supreme Court is far superior to that of either the Federal Trade Commission or the Interstate Commerce Commission. If this is true, there seems to be no reason why the Federal Trade Commission or the Interstate Commerce Commission should be exempted when their procedure and orders have not stood up as well as those of the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY] such time as he may desire.

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to express my approval of H. R. 6324, a bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

The tremendous growth of Federal bureaus and agencies with the attendant power given them has resulted in a peculiar situation in the Federal Government. Under our Constitution there are three specific and distinct departments of government, the legislative, executive, and judicial, but this separation of power does not hold true with reference to many Federal bureaus and agencies. Usually they are given the power to make such necessary rules and regulations as they deem advisable in the enforcement of the particular law. This is an executive power. Then this same bureau or agency makes application of these various powers, which is executive power. Finally, if dispute arises over these rules or regulations, the same agency or department that made the rules and executed the rules now becomes the court that decides those rules. Thus we see that these agencies have legislative, executive, and judicial power. This is not in keeping with the theory of American government as exemplified by the Constitution. Therefore, demands have been made upon Congress to protect the public from arbitrary and extralegal rules of these Federal bureaus and agencies by means of the Walter-Logan "bill of rights."

Many prominent societies, institutions, and citizens favor the passage of this bill: The American Coalition, representing more than 100 patriotic societies with membership of 1,500,000 have enlisted in the fight for this measure; the National Grange, with 800,000 farmers; the American Federation of Labor, with its 4,000,000 union members; the American Federation of Investors; the American Bar Association; the National Association of Women Lawyers; and the bar organizations of the leading States have all expressed approval of this measure.

This bill has been approved unanimously in Congress by the Judiciary Committee of both the House and Senate. The Rules Committee, with one dissenter, voted to give it a right-of-way over other legislation in the House.

Opposition to this bill arises from the Federal departments and agencies whose authority would be curtailed and also from the National Lawyers' Guild, which had an internal row last summer over the stand it should take on communism.

The American Bar Association declares that the Walter-Logan measure is a necessary supplement to the Bill of Rights in the Constitution.

The present provision of the bill which gives new rights to the people and imposes certain restrictions on Federal bureaus are:

First. Any person who believes he has been treated unfairly or unjustly by the decision of any officer or employee of a Federal department, board, or commission may appeal this case to the United States circuit court in the district where he lives or does business. The bureaus themselves now are final arbiters of most controversies that result from their decisions.

Second. The decision of Federal agencies will be set aside by the courts for any one of six reasons:

(a) If the facts on which it is based are clearly erroneous.

(b) If the findings of the agencies are not supported by substantial evidence.

(c) If the decision is not supported by proven facts.

(d) If a full and fair hearing was not provided.

(e) If the decision goes beyond the lawful authority of the agency.

(f) If it infringes upon other Federal laws or the Constitution.

Third. Within a year after a law is passed, all necessary rules and regulations must be issued by the agency charged with enforcing it. The United States circuit courts will review any rule if the persons who are affected believe it goes further than the law or the Constitution permits. At present there is no provision for controlling these rule-making powers of Federal bureaus.

The decisions made by quasi-judicial administrations—often actuated by partisan feelings—need to be checked and balanced by wholly judicial officials in much the same way as the decisions of trial judges are checked and balanced by courts of appeal.

The agencies which would be check-reined by the Logan-Walter bill are: The National Labor Relations Board, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the revamped Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and the Department of Agriculture, the Wage and Hour Division, and other branches of the Department of Labor, the Bituminous Coal Commission and the Department of the Interior, the Social Securities Board, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Federal Alcohol Administration.

With the tremendous growth of bureaucracies in the United States it is high time that restrictions be placed upon the powers and prerogatives of the various boards and agencies thus created.

We must still preserve the American system which provides for legislative, executive, and judicial departments of Government.

In the interest of America and in the interest of American people I hope that this bill passes. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS].

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, in our consideration of H. R. 6324, the bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, I believe it is perfectly sound for us to consider statements of others who have been compelled in the past to view this subject with considerable alarm.

I refer particularly to a report of the Committee on Ministers' Powers, presented by the Lord High Chancelor to Parliament, in April 1932. There are two or three paragraphs in that report that may be quoted:

But disqualifying interest is not confined to pecuniary interest. In Reginald v. Rand ((1866) L. R. 1 Q. B. 230) the Court of Queen's Bench laid it down that wherever there was a real likelihood that the judge would, from kindred or any other causes, have a bias in favor of one of the parties, it would be very wrong in him to act. In Rex v. Sunderland Justices ((1901) 2 K. B. 357) this rule was applied by the court of appeal in the case of certain borough justices, who were also members of the borough council and adjudicated in a matter arising out of a proposal which they had actively supported in the council, although their pecuniary interest as trustees for the ratepayers was held insufficient in itself to raise the presumption of bias. "It is hardly necessary to point out," said the master of the rolls, "how very important it is that persons who have to exercise judicial functions with regard to any matter should not lay themselves open to any suggestion of bias on their part."

Indeed we think it is clear that bias from strong and sincere conviction as to public policy may operate as a more serious disqualification than pecuniary interest. No honest man acting in a judicial capacity allows himself to be influenced by pecuniary interest: if anything, the danger is likely to be that through fear of yielding to motives of self-interest he may unconsciously do an injustice to the party with which his pecuniary interest may appear to others to identify him. But the bias to which a public-spirited man is subjected if he adjudicates in any case in which he is interested on public grounds is more subtle and less easy for him to detect and resist.

We are here considering questions of public policy and from the public point of view it is important to remember that the principle underlying all the decisions in regard to disqualification by reason of bias is that the mind of the judge ought to be free to decide on purely judicial grounds and should not be directly or indirectly influenced by, or exposed to the influence of, either motives of self-interest or opinions about policy or any other considerations not relevant to the issue.

We are of opinion that in considering the assignment of judicial functions to Ministers Parliament should keep clearly in view the maxim that no man is to be judge in a cause in which he has an interest. We think that in any case in which the Minister's department would naturally approach the issue to be determined with a desire that the decision should go one way rather than another, the Minister should be regarded as having an interest in the cause. Parliament would do well in such a case to provide that the Minister himself should not be the judge, but that the case should be decided by an independent tribunal.

It is unfair to impose on a practical administrator the duty of adjudicating in any matter in which it could fairly be argued that his impartiality would be in inverse ratio to his strength and ability as a minister.

I believe that this subject of bias, which has not been brought out by this debate so far, should be seriously considered by the Committee. Certainly it has a very definite bearing upon the subject of judicial functions as applied to administrative activities; and that, of course, is the real sense of this bill. It is an effort to maintain constitutional government by recognition of the legislative, administrative, and judicial branches of our Government.

The executive function of planned economy is always delegated to an ever-expanding bureaucracy. There is no tendency in the life of our country that is so antagonistic to the spirit which has always animated us, the spirit responsible for our growth and development; no tendency, let me repeat, so antagonistic as the clutching, deadening hand of bureaucracy. That it is a clutching, deadening hand all history testifies; our own experience of the past 8 years adds its weight to history's verdict. The bibliography is too long for recital here—it carries us back beyond recorded history, without a triumph to relieve the catalog of its disastrous consequences.

There is nothing new in this contest with the forces of bureaucracy. The struggle for freedom from tyranny in thought and speech, from tyranny in religion, in government, and in industry is one of the greatest achievements of the human race. It is a battle that must be waged over and over, it is a conflict of the ages, a struggle to be free. The victories won have been the crowning glory of mankind.

There is no intention to discuss here the history of the foundation of our country; we know the care taken to surround each repository of power with our system of checks and balances. It needs to be said here, in plain words, that good citizenship includes loyalty to that system; and those who do not cherish such loyalty, who do not believe in that system of checks and balances, should find no place in our Government service. There is the shoe, let whom it fits wear it. It is a part of our heritage to maintain through the years the same care that was exercised in our national beginnings.

One would be blind not to recognize the increasing complexities of the life of today. The horse and buggy is gone and we have the automobile, the truck, the bus, the tank, the bomber, the radio, television, and we use a naval destroyer to go fishing. Who could feel any pang for the days that are gone, when we have so many modern gadgets and so many utterly unproductive ways of being busy.

The lawyer of today spends his time piloting his corporate clients through unavoidable mazes of routine—what one of my friends, engaged in a long-drawn-out reorganization the other day, called rigmarole, expressing his wonder that anything in such field is ever accomplished finally.

It is in the atmosphere of rigmarole that bureaucracy proliferates.

If the delegation of some degree of power is unavoidable for the dispatch of public business, the greater the degree in which this is true, the more rigidly must the lines for its exercise be drawn; and the more stern the prohibition against any effort at expansion, encroachment, the creation of more and more rigmarole, and more especially against any confusion as to what is public business and what is not. Here is the crux. Forget it not. Here is the crux: It is our talk, here in the Congress; we must not ask or expect the courts to fight this battle for us.

It is human nature that power tends to consolidate its position, to build bulwarks against every question raised as to possession or its exercise. Unrestrained, this tendency leads to disaster, to the point where society becomes everything, the individual nothing, and freedom evaporates. Encroachment is the very watchword of bureaucracy.

The other day I ran across a purported soliloquy set up to sum up the essence of the faith of the ardent bureaucrat. It parallels so exactly what we have seen develop in the past 8 years that I want to give it to you right here:

1. The business of the Executive is to govern.
2. The only persons fit to govern are experts.
3. The experts in the art of government are the permanent officials, who, exhibiting an anxious and too much neglected virtue, "think themselves worthy of great things, being worthy."

4. But the expert must deal with things as they are. The "four-square man" makes the best of the circumstances in which he finds himself.

5. Two main obstacles hamper the beneficent work of the expert. One is the sovereignty of Parliament, and the other is the rule of law.

6. A kind of fetish worship, prevalent among an ignorant public, prevents the destruction of these obstacles. The expert, therefore, must make use of the first in order to frustrate the second.

7. To this end let him, under parliamentary forms, clothe himself with despotic power, and then, because the forms are parliamentary, defy the law courts.

8. This course will prove tolerably simple if he can:

(a) Get legislation passed in skeleton form.

(b) Fill up the gaps with his own rules, orders, and regulations.

(c) Make it difficult or impossible for Parliament to check the said rules, orders, and regulations.

(d) Secure for them the force of statute.

(e) Make his own decision final.

(f) Arrange that the fact of his decision shall be conclusive proof of its legality.

(g) Take power to modify the provisions of statutes.

(h) Prevent and avoid any sort of appeal to a court of law.

9. If the expert can get rid of the lord chancelor, reduce the judges to a branch of the civil service, compel them to give opinions beforehand on hypothetical cases, and appoint them himself through a businessman to be called Minister of Justice, the coping-stone will be laid.

This quotation is from the New Despotism by Lord Hewart of Bury, Lord Chief Justice of England. It fits the argument so well, I have wondered if it might not be that our new agencies have used it to direct their own lines of procedure. Was not legislation passed in skeleton form? Have the gaps not been filled—to overflowing—with rules, orders, and regulations; and are we not now engaged in the struggle to preserve the rule of law, to see that some of these regulators shall no longer consider themselves above the statutes, and shall no longer show contemptuous disregard for the Congress and the courts.

We confront the question: Can our Republic save itself from the serious faults and dangers which threaten it? Can the people as a whole be trusted to choose wisely their leaders and policies?

We have been told that we were to act as guinea pigs in an economic laboratory, with the promise, never fulfilled, that errors would be frankly acknowledged. We can only make the comment that intelligence is a great time-saver when compared with trial and error, and that the test tube has not shown a single success.

We hear it repeated again and again that we are engaged in making democracy work. Sometimes many of us think the avowal is heard, where is fact it is only lip service, and comes with an ill grace from those who would substitute for democracy the rule of the bureaucrat in appointive office.

The strength and stability of democracies are in direct ratio to their inclusiveness, their breadth of base. Bureaucracies are inverted pyramids, and we have not yet reached the point in this country where we are ready to build, or tolerate, the inverted pyramid resting only upon the governmental agency—delegated power—as its apex.

No person or class, autocrat or bureaucrat, is wise enough or good enough to run the business of everybody in this country, either in the form of open tyranny or under the insidious cloak of delegated power.

You may gather from what I have said, that I am no friend of economic planning or the bureaucracy to put such plans into effect. The planners and the bureaucrats have never understood that it is as useless to attempt to subvert or flout economic law. The historian Taine wrote:

> The economic world, like the physical world, has its laws. We may misunderstand them, but we cannot escape them. Sometimes they act with us, sometimes against us. They may please us, but they never consider us. It is for us to consider them.

When business assumes too large a place and usurps the field of political action, it invites disaster, but it does not extinguish the state. When the state or politics usurps the place of business, of free enterprise, business dies and bureaucracy is the mortician. History records many such funerals.

Let this be remembered when we hear discussions about the iniquities of the economic oligarchy. It is important, more important than appears until given second thought.

The basis of the destruction of democracy has always been the redistribution of wealth. It has been attempted many times. The only result of such would-be crusades has been the destruction of wealth, not its redistribution.

It is essential, then, that we keep our eyes wide open to the persistent drive for centralized control with government by Executive decree. We must be increasingly alert and aggressive in our determination to curb usurpation of the judicial function by Federal bureaus and agencies. We have, in haste, clothed them with power far too sweeping to be placed in the hands of any irresponsible agency.

Turn, if you will, to section 21 (a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, whereby there was established the Securities and Exchange Commission, read it, and try to bear in mind that we are a republic, a republic made up of 48 States, a Nation firm in its faith in the rule of law. If you can read the first sentence without a shudder, it will only mean that you read with the eye alone, seeing the words on the printed page without grasping what they mean.

The first sentence reads:

> The Commission may, in its discretion, make such investigations as it deems necessary to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, and may require or permit any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise as the Commission shall determine, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the matter to be investigated.

Since when has it been possible to bring within the grasp of the law any one—person—believed, by an impersonal agency, to be about to violate some rule or regulation known only to the accuser? If such reading does not call to the mind stories of the tyrannies of the Gestapo of Germany, or the Russian Ogpu, it should. What means the permission granted to—> any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise * * * as to all the facts and circumstances.

Can you read that as anything but a welcome to informers, despised throughout all history?

Read further and comprehend the unlimited power of an investigator conferred to follow up suspicion, not to gather the evidence where a crime has admittedly been committed, but, if you please, to convict John Doe of the determination to transgress some rule or regulation. The decision, obviously, is not based on the state of John Doe's mind and his intentions, but, upon that of some examiner, some nosey boy who was all set before he started. Read further and find out about that vast power to compel attendance and the production of records, which may, in turn, be delegated to any Johnny-come-lately of an officer designated by it—the Commission—whose jurisdiction covers the entire Nation. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State, at any designated place of hearing.

Have we, as a people, forsaken our faith in the rule of law, and transferred our allegiance to a despotism minus any benevolence?

Let me digress here, just a moment, to say that it is utterly beside the question, what use may have been made of such power, we are not going to tolerate despotic power, whether abused, or most benevolently used. It was a great Democrat who said:

> The way to success in this great country, with its fair judgments, is to show that you are not afraid of anybody but God and His final verdict.

I am directing your attention to, and asking you to ponder, the Securities and Exchange Act, because it is as a part of the law of the land, a subtle and dangerous threat to our liberties, and I say it does try to impose its rule by fear. I point to the so-called consent decree.

I might also call your attention to the abuses of power by the National Labor Relations Board, the R. E. A., and other governmental agencies set up in direct competition with American citizens engaged in industry. Time will not permit details.

I have discussed this matter in its broader sense, and have tried to keep it on a rather high plane. I believe the framers of this Walter-Logan bill have given conscientious and serious thought to their fundamental constitutional government, and as one of the authors, the deceased Senator Logan, said:

The sole issue, here presented to Congress, is whether we shall have a government by men or a government by law. There are persons connected with the present administration who believe it ought to be a government by men—so they are rabidly opposed to this bill.

[Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. KERR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill, H. R. 6324, to provide for the more expeditious settlements of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the Presidential address before the Pan American Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a statement of the Democratic national committeeman and the Republican National committeeman, Messrs. Farley and Hamilton.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein an editorial from the Los Angeles Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement of certain farm leaders in opposition to the bill, H. R. 8748.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from a constituent regarding the Townsend plan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain editorial comments concerning the plan of the President for the reorganization of the Safety Board and the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CONNERY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1918. An act relating to the retired pay of certain retired Army officers;

S. 2348. An act relating to allowances to certain naval officers stationed in the Canal Zone for rental of quarters;

S. 2599. An act to amend the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (Public, No. 732, 52 Stat. 1175);

S. 3174. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept, without cost to the United States, a fee-simple conveyance of 16.4 acres, more or less, of land at Floyd Bennett Field in the city and State of New York; and

S. 3528. An act authorizing the adoption for the Foreign Service of an accounting procedure in the matter of disbursement of funds appropriated for the Department of State.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 17, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold hearings on the following resolution on Wednesday, April 24, 1940:

House Joint Resolution 509, to suspend section 510 (g) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, during the present European war. Hearings will be held at 10 a. m.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold hearings on the following bill on Tuesday, April 30, 1940:

Hearings on boards and courts of appeals bills will begin on Wednesday, April 17, 1940, at 10 a. m., room 246, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds Wednesday, April 17, 1940, at 10 a. m., for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 487. Important. The hearings will be held in room 1501, New House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization Wednesday, April 17, 1940, at 10:30 a. m., for the consideration of private bills and unfinished business.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Indian Affairs on Wednesday next, April 17, 1940, at 10:30 a. m., for the consideration of H. R. 3048, H. R. 5674, House Joint Resolution 243, S. 1450, and S. 2523.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the bridge subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m., Wednesday, April 17, 1940, for the consideration of H. R. 7864, to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Perry County, Ind.

COMMITTEE ON INSULAR AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Insular Affairs on Thursday, April 18, 1940, at 10 a. m., for the continued consideration of H. R. 8239, creating the Puerto Rico Water Resources Authority, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1552. A letter from the secretary of Hawaii, transmitting copy of the Journal of the Senate of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, regular session of 1939; to the Committee on the Territories.

1553. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain officers and enlisted men or former officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy for personal property lost in the hurricane and flood at New London, Conn., on September 21, 1938; to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XXII,

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 466. Resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 9243, a bill to provide for the promotion of promotion-list officers of the Army after specified years of service in grade, and for other purposes, without amendment (Rept. No. 1963); referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CROSSER:

H. R. 9406. A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, title 49, chapter I, section 1, by adding two paragraphs after paragraph 11 of said section to be known as paragraphs 11a and 11b, pertaining to the supervision of sleeping cars and providing penalties; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. EDELSTEIN:

H. R. 9407. A bill to prohibit the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of nonkosher meat represented to be kosher meat, and to provide a penalty for its violation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MALONEY:

H. R. 9408. A bill to amend section 601 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. O'CONNOR:

H. R. 9409. A bill to amend the Pittman-Robertson Act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. WEAVER:

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, April 8, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord of all power and might, in whose hands are the lives of men and their true destiny: Grant unto us, Thy servants, the pardoning grace of Thy forgiveness, and cleanse us from our sins, for we have made resolves in sacred moments of reflection that have not borne fruit in our relations with each other; neither have we paid our vows in the presence of all Thy people. Help us to realize more and more that, while man looketh on the outward appearance, God looketh on the heart, and that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. We beseech Thee, therefore, so to purify our hearts that we may see clearly that our own deepest need and that of our world is for moral order, personal integrity, social justice, and human unselfishness. So, we cry out for the birth, the growth, the manhood of love; its ascendency, its sovereignty, its endless and cloudless reign, and do Thou crown us with its high and holy attributes, that, as we behold the image of our God, we may grow up into His likeness. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the legislative proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, April 16, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on public business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1918. An act relating to the retired pay of certain retired Army officers;

S. 2348. An act relating to allowances to certain naval officers stationed in the Canal Zone for rental of quarters;

S. 2599. An act to amend the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (Public, No. 732, 52 Stat. 1175);

S. 3174. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept, without cost to the United States, a fee-simple conveyance of 16.4 acres, more or less, of land at Floyd Bennett Field in the city and State of New York; and

S. 3528. An act authorizing the adoption for the Foreign Service of an accounting procedure in the matter of disbursement of funds appropriated for the Department of State.

LAWS COVERING CERTAIN VESSELS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to apply laws covering steam vessels to certain passenger-carrying vessels, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE JOURNAL, TWENTIETH LEGISLATURE, HAWAII

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Hawaii (through the Governor of Hawaii and the Department of the Interior), transmitting, pursuant to law, copy of the Senate Journal of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, regular session, 1939, which, with the accompanying document, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of Ogden, Utah, and vicinity, praying that Government construction work be performed by construction companies rather than under the W. P. A., which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRESERVATION OF PEACE: WAR PROPAGANDA

Mr. HOLT presented a letter written by him relative to the preservation of peace, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR FRIEND: War seems far removed to many but if the United States gets in, it will mean the boys and young men of your community will be called upon to go to battle, probably to be killed, wounded, or shell-shocked. It may mean someone close to you.

Now is the time to work for peace while we are at peace.

Never before in the present war has there been a greater need for vigilance than now. The issue of our involvement comes more and more to the front every day.

A headline in Monday's Washington Post says: "British growing impatient over neutrality of America." The story then proceeds to set out a speech by an English major stating why the United States should get into the conflict now. The attorney general of Ontario, Canada, has said that Canada should do everything possible to get the United States into active participation.

American columnists and American busybodies are again calling for America to go forth to save democracy, a cry many remember twenty-odd years ago. These busybodies and international meddlers won't go to save democracy. They want your son and your friend to do the saving. Propaganda to involve us is flooding the country. Every attempt is being made to use our sympathy and our prejudice to get us active or at least get us ready to enter.

I am proud to list myself in the antiwar group. I believe in strong national defense here but not an expeditionary army over there.

I am one who believes we should "save America first" instead of sending soldiers abroad. I am an isolationist. I want to isolate every American boy from being sent across the ocean to fight in foreign wars.

My record is clear. Speech after speech by me has called for our staying out of these European wars. I have opposed every move that I felt was in the direction of war.

Members of the Senate and House finally determine whether we go. My vote and my voice will be raised against participation in the wars of Europe.

Remember, now is the time to work for peace while we are at peace.

Sincerely,

RUSH D. HOLT.

INVOLVEMENT IN WAR—EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW ULM DAILY JOURNAL

[Mr. McCARRAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New Ulm (Minn.) Daily Journal on the subject How We Go to War, which appears in the Appendix.]

AIR SAFETY BOARD

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am about to make a request for unanimous consent.

For the purpose of giving point to my request I desire briefly to state the setting for the documents I intend to ask to have inserted in the RECORD. They pertain to the President's message, recently read in the Senate, relating to the fourth plan of Government reorganization. They particularly bear upon section 7 of that plan, in which the functions of the Air Safety Board are consolidated with the functions of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, which, according to the plan—

Shall hereafter be known as the Civil Aeronautics Board, and which shall, in addition to its other functions, discharge the duties heretofore vested in the Air Safety Board so as to provide for the independent investigation of aircraft accidents.

Of course there is more to section 7. I am not pretending to read the whole of it; but I call attention to enough of it to show that it is the purpose of this part of the plan to abolish the independence of that particular Board, the Air Safety Board, which is now functioning free from the interests and the cross-currents which are created by being tied up with the rules-making body in the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

One of the obvious reasons why the Air Safety Board has been so effective in being a part of the cause of an unequaled record relating to safety is its independence from adventitious interests affecting its investigation of the facts and then affecting its recommendation not merely with respect to the rules but also with respect to the operation of aircraft and with respect to the mechanism itself. After the investigations it has made, there have come forward recommendations growing out of what the Board has ascertained as to the causes of accidents, and as a result we have had a new type of wing and a new type of propeller which have helped to save human life.

If the only cause for this change should turn out to be that mentioned in the President's message, namely, this—

In addition to the effective and coordinated discharge of accident-investigation work which this transfer will facilitate, economies in administration will be possible.

I say, if the only real cause for this change, which amounts to an abolition of the Board, is economy in administration, we ought to pause before we make such a radical change.

What I ask the Senate to do is to give consent to the insertion in the RECORD at this point of a statement which I released yesterday relating to this matter, and which was published in part in the New York Herald Tribune of Wednesday, April 17—that is, this morning—and in part in many other newspapers throughout the United States, but not published in full. I desire to give publicity to the full statement, and I wish to take responsibility for it. That is why I, myself, offer it.

I also include in this request publication of a telegram received this morning from the Air Line Pilots' Association, David L. Behncke, president. Obviously, this is the particular body of men in all the United States that is vitally affected by this proposal of change. These are the birds of the air, as it were. They are the men whose lives are protected by the activities of the particular Board which would be abolished if this recommendation were carried out.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD this release by myself, the column from the New York Herald Tribune, and the telegram from the Air Line Pilots' Association.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator advise me if I am correct in believing that of the two gentlemen whose positions would be abolished, one was formerly a writer on aviation subjects for the New York Herald Tribune, a clipping from which newspaper the Senator now offers, and the other gentleman whose appointment is to end was vice president of the association whose resolution the Senator also offers?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not know to what the Senator refers. It is a very strange inquiry.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator offers for insertion in the RECORD a clipping or editorial from the New York Herald Tribune. My information is that one of the gentlemen whose jobs will be abolished by the reorganization order was formerly a writer for the New York Herald Tribune. The Senator offers a resolution from the Air Line Pilots' Association. My information is that the other man whose job is abolished is a former vice president of that association whose resolution is now offered by the Senator. I merely want to know if I am correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. The form and substance of the question is now different from that first asked. I was not aware that Mr. Behncke was a member of this Board. In fact, the only person I know on the Board personally is Mr. C. B. Allen, who formerly was a special writer for the New York Herald-Tribune on the subject of aeronautics, and to my certain knowledge is one of the best-informed men in the United States on civil aeronautics, an expert pilot himself, and a man who knows the theory as well as the practice of piloting airships, and therefore is eminently qualified to be on this Board. I have never before supposed that the Board consisted only of the two men mentioned by the Senator from South Carolina. Does the Senator from South Carolina claim that that is the situation?

Mr. BYRNES. No; I do not. I understood, and I am merely asking for information, that Mr. Allen, one of the gentlemen on the Board which the Senator said would be abolished, was a writer on the Herald Tribune, and the other was—is it Mr. Hardin? Is a man of that name a member of the Board?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know whether Mr. Behncke is on the Board or not.

Mr. BYRNES. I was just asking if another member of the Board which the Senator said would be abolished was not the vice president of the association whose resolution the Senator offered.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am saying that I do not know as to that.

Mr. BYRNES. That is all I asked the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. However, Mr. President, if the purpose of the two questions is to cast any reflection upon these gentlemen or their statements, it is a futility to try that sort of thing with me anyway, for I have heard this man David L. Behncke testify in several committees. It happens that I have been on several subcommittees which dealt with the subject of aeronautics, especially civil aeronautics, and I heard Mr. David Behncke testify. I know him by his appearance in committee. He is an expert pilot. He is president of the Air Line Pilots' Association. His testimony would carry great weight with me respecting devices and rules of flying, requirements of statistical information which must be obtained by a pilot before he leaves the ground, and all those things which are necessary for the preservation of human life in transportation by air. He is a man of character.

As to C. B. Allen, I will defend him to the end as a man of high character, of great intelligence, of disinterested public service. He left a gainful employment to come here and to give the public of America who fly the skies the benefit of his special training and skill and experience. These men ought not to be reflected upon. If they show any interest in this matter, they speak with authority—not the authority of office but the authority of experience and judgment. I offer their testimony, sincerely believing in it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont to have printed in the RECORD the matters referred to by him? The Chair hears none.

The matters referred to are as follows:

RELEASE BY WARREN R. AUSTIN, REPUBLICAN SENATOR FROM VERMONT, RELATING TO CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY AND THE AIR SAFETY BOARD AS AFFECTED BY THE PRESIDENT'S PLAN FOR REORGANIZATION

A careful study of the fourth plan on Government reorganization submitted by the President of the United States to the Congress on April 11, 1940, makes it evident that aviation is about to be subjected again to the destructive forces of political domination.

The activities of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board since their organization on August 22, 1938, have earned the plaudits of the President of the United States, the public, and the aviation industry, as well as of Members of the Congress. This universal acclaim is in sharp contrast to the vituperation and abuse which was hurled at its predecessor, the Bureau of Air Commerce, and which in the past resulted in numerous expensive investigations on the part of the Congress.

The period from 1933 to August 22, 1938, was marked by a series of "blitzkrieg" assaults upon the aviation industry by the various political bureaucrats who desired to control this new industry of far-reaching and growing importance.

As a minority member of the Special Committee to Investigate Air and Ocean Mail Contracts, I protested the unfair cancelation of the air-mail contracts in 1934. It is interesting to note that no legal justification has yet been found for the Government's action, and that, although several compromise settlements have been made on the suits pending before the Court of Claims, there is still one unsettled suit.

As a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce during the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, I participated in extensive hearings on bills then pending to provide for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by aircraft and to promote the safety of scheduled air transportation. Those hearings clearly brought out the desire on the part of the Post Office Department and the Department of Commerce for a continuance of their political control and the retention of the vindictive provisions of the Air Mail Act.

As a result of the aircraft accident in which our colleague, Senator Cutting, lost his life, the late Senator Copeland conducted an investigation of the Bureau of Air Commerce and its activities. This clearly brought out the inefficiency and mismanagement of the Department of Commerce in handling aeronautical regulation and development.

I warmly supported the creation of an independent agency charged with the encouragement, development, and proper regulation of an air transportation system properly adapted to the present and future needs of the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service, and of the national defense. The true value of the Civil Aeronautics Authority has been demonstrated by its activities.

The independence of the Air Safety Board, in its accident investigations, has been the outstanding factor in creating a safety record unparalleled in the history of any form of transportation. Sincere and honest effort deserves a better reward than that now proposed by the President. Accident investigations have been conducted by expert technicians employed under the nonpartisan competitive requirements of the Civil Service Commission. The investigators, directed by an independent board whose members are recognized as outstanding in the field of aeronautics, have conducted investigations and made impartial findings, free from any trace of political pressure. In view of the achievements of the Air Safety Board as presently constituted, it is unthinkable that this vital safety function of independent accident investigation should be abolished. No matter how fair the present members of the Authority may be, they are the rule-making body and under the reorganization plan, with their personnel and budget controlled by the Secretary of Commerce, they could not possibly be as free from the charge of bias and prejudice in the conduct of accident investigations as the present independent Air Safety Board.

Aeronautical development under an independent agency whose sole problem is its proper accomplishment will be much more rapid and efficient than under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of Commerce charged with a multitude of additional and distracting duties. The vital importance of progressive aeronautical development in the United States, under conditions existing throughout the world today, is clearly recognized by every American citizen. I am confident the American public will not consent to the return of American aviation to the status of a political football. I will vigorously oppose Reorganization Plan No. IV.

The issue is not a party issue; it is a matter of public safety which should transcend all selfish partisan considerations. It is a challenge to the constructive forces of democracy.

On March 22, 1939, in the debate on the exemption of the Civil Aeronautics Authority from the terms of the reorganization bill, I was particularly concerned about the independence of the Air Safety Board, and stated, "I should like to see it (the exemption) agreed to unanimously, if possible. I know of no reason for transferring or abolishing the functions of a brand-new agency of government, intended to be an independent agency, having charge of probably the most important aspect of transportation with which we are concerned today * * *. I think it would be a great blunder to put this institution at the hazard of any man's whim or any man's notion that he may bring about some economy by transferring or transforming this new agency right in the midst of a very successful and progressive beginning." I still feel as I did then, especially in view of the splendid record that the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board have made.

We were assured at that time by the proponents of the reorganization plan that exemption was unnecessary due to the fact that any change in the new organization was unthinkable. Now that it has proved its value the proposed transfer is even more unthinkable.

In a letter to the National Aviation Forum, dated January 24, 1939, the President stated:

"Civil aviation is clearly recognized as the backlog of national defense in the Civil Aeronautics Act which set up the effective machinery for a comprehensive national policy with respect to the air.

"Underlying the statute is the principle that the country's welfare in time of peace and its safety in time of war rests upon the existence of a stabilized aircraft production—an economically and technically sound air transportation system, both domestic and overseas—an adequate supply of well-trained civilian pilots and ground personnel.

"This new national policy set up by the Congress views American aviation as a special problem requiring special treatment. Aviation is the only form of transportation which operates in a medium which knows no frontiers but touches alike all countries of the earth. One fact which stands out is that hardly another civil activity of our people bears such a direct and intimate relation to the national security as does civil aviation * * *."

The Congress was in agreement with the President on that date, but if special treatment means placing civil aeronautics back under political control, I am sure the Congress will disagree.

In view of the numerous messages sent to the Congress by the President dealing with civil aeronautics, the message of transmittal of the fourth reorganization plan and the plan itself reach the height of inconsistency.

Every one of the 2,000,000 air travelers in the United States must resent, as I do, this attack on the safety of air transportation.

AUSTIN TO FIGHT UNITED STATES AIR BOARD REORGANIZATION—SENATOR CALLS ROOSEVELT'S PROPOSALS ATTACK ON SAFETY BY POLITICIANS

(By Ansel E. Talbert)

WASHINGTON, April 16.—An open nonpartisan battle in the Senate against President Roosevelt's proposal to reorganize the Civil Aeronautics Authority by making it a board of the Department of Commerce and abolish the Air Safety Board was made certain tonight when Senator WARREN R. AUSTIN, Republican, of Vermont, announced his intention of joining Senator PAT MCCARRAN, Democrat, of Nevada, in opposing the changes.

Senator AUSTIN, senior minority member of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, and a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, called the reorganization plan an issue which had no connection with party issues. He said that it was a matter of public safety which was a challenge to the constructive forces of democracy. Senator AUSTIN added that he would oppose the reorganization plan, which will go into effect June 14 unless defeated by a concurrent resolution of the House and Senate, "with every ounce of strength I possess."

SEES ATTACK ON SAFETY

"Every 1 of the 2,000,000 air travelers in the United States must resent as I do this attack on the safety of air transportation," Senator AUSTIN asserted. In a reference to his fight against the administration's action in 1934 in canceling without warning the air-mail contracts—which resulted in the death of 11 Army pilots forced to take over the job of flying the mail without preparation in midwinter and a number of others on familiarization flights—Senator AUSTIN pointed out it was "interesting to note that no legal justification has yet been found for the Government's action on that occasion."

"The period from 1933 to August 22, 1938, when the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board were organized, was marked by a series of 'blitzkrieg' assaults upon the aviation industry by the various political bureaucrats whose desire to control this new industry of far-reaching and growing importance," Senator AUSTIN charged. "A careful study of the fourth plan on Government reorganization submitted by the President of the United States to the Congress on April 11, 1940, makes it evident that aviation is about to be subjected again to the destructive forces of political domination."

Senator AUSTIN asserted that the independence of the Air Safety Board in its accident investigations has been the "outstanding factor in creating a safety record unparalleled in the history of any form of transportation"—a reference to the year of perfect safety which the air lines of the United States completed March 26. On that date President Roosevelt, in a letter to Robert H. Hinckle, Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, extended heartiest congratulations to the personnel of the C. A. A. and the air lines. Mr. Hinckley, who was not informed in advance of the proposed reorganization, is reported authoritatively to be ready to resign his post if the C. A. A. is put under the Department of Commerce.

DESERVES BETTER REWARD

"Sincere and honest effort deserves a better reward than that now proposed by the President," Senator AUSTIN continued. "Accident investigations have been conducted by expert technicians employed under the nonpartisan competitive requirements of the Civil Service Commission.

"This independent Board, whose members are recognized as outstanding in the field of aeronautics, have conducted investigations and made impartial findings free from any trace of political pressure. In view of the achievements of the Air Safety Board as presently constituted it is unthinkable that this vital safety function of independent accident investigation should be abolished."

It was recalled that during the congressional debate which preceded the passage of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, Representative CLARENCE F. LEA, Democrat, of California, who tonight was reported to be studying the proposed reorganization plan, on which as yet he has not committed himself, made a particular point of the benefits in setting up an independent agency for fact finding on airplane accidents. He stressed that if the Civil Aeronautics Authority were allowed to appoint the personnel of the Air Safety Board, this would hamper the Board in making any reports which might be adverse to the Authority. It might be necessary, he pointed out, for the Board to blame the C. A. A. itself for a particular air-line accident because of unreasonable regulation.

Because of Representative LEA's insistence, the Air Safety Board, although nominally under the C. A. A., was made to consist of three members appointed directly by the President. Its funds do not come out of those appropriated for the C. A. A., but are separate funds appropriated directly for Congress.

Tonight it became known that the Air Safety Board, which received $380,000 from Congress for the fiscal year ending on June 30, was turning back between $50,000 and $70,000 of these funds unspent. The reason given by President Roosevelt for abolition of the Air Safety Board was that such a move would save the salaries of its members and increase the "efficiency and economy" of government. David Behncke, president of the Air Line Pilots' Association, called attention tonight to the fact that, by all the standards of evaluation, the Board had a 100-percent record of efficiency to date and a "splendid record" of economical operation.

It was pointed out by aviation leaders that since the middle of 1933 the number of employees in the executive branch of the Government had increased from 565,432 to 939,015, and that therefore the President's proposed cutting down of employees in the case of the Air Safety Board was against the trend during his entire administration. It was noted that the Department of Commerce, under which it is proposed to place the Civil Aeronautics Authority, was one of the five Government agencies having the largest employment increases during the early part of this year. From January to February the Department's employment jumped 373 persons, more than the entire field force, office staff, and other employees of the Air Safety Board.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16, 1940.

Hon. WARREN R. AUSTIN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

In this day and age so many startling things are constantly happening that we have become accustomed to the unusual, and we are not easily startled or aroused. The air-line pilots, due to the nature of their work, are not easily excitable, yet only a few days ago when the President announced his fourth reorganization plan, abolishing the Air Safety Board and stripping the new Air Authority of its identity and independence and proposed that air-accident investigation and civil air regulation generally be placed back under the Department of Commerce, the pilots were not only startled but they were utterly flabbergasted. The regulation of air transportation and civil aviation by the Department of Commerce is something that the pilots and in fact most everyone in the industry look back upon with abhorrence. It is not even a pleasant story to recount. Crash upon crash, needless sacrificing of human life. During this dark period the pilots lost 146 of their number by reason of crash deaths. And a startling total of 473 persons lost their lives in air crashes.

Everyone, especially Congress, fought long and tirelessly to free the industry from this era of chaos and create an independent agency to give the industry the kind of regulation and air-accident investigation procedure that it so sorely needed. The pilots pointed out that safety was vital to the success of the industry and that accident investigation would have to be done by an independent air safety board free from all influence and control by those who made the industry's regulations. This Congress did when it passed the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. We all know the results. Crashes were cut to a minimum. There have been no fatalities in the past 12 months. When Congress established the Air Safety Board it restored public confidence in air travel with one stroke. If the President's reorganization plan is approved to place regulation and air-accident investigation back under the Department of Commerce, public confidence will be destroyed, because where humans' own lives are involved they have a long memory. The line pilots to a man plead with you that you do everything possible to prevent this. I am explaining further in a special-delivery letter today. Your cooperation is respectfully and earnestly solicited.

AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION,
DAVID L. BEHNCKE, President.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, nothing in what I said reflected on the ability of either of the two gentlemen to whom the Senator referred, or of any gentlemen connected with the Air Safety Board, as technicians or as experts on the subject of aviation. Nothing in my question indicated any reflection upon the character of either one of those two gentlemen, or of any other gentleman. But asking a man for his advice upon the technical construction of an airplane or the operation of an airplane is entirely different from asking him and accepting his advice as to whether or not his job should be abolished. The question here is not as to the ability of the individual, the gentleman referred to, the former writer on the Tribune. He may be one of the ablest or the ablest man in the United States upon that subject. The question is whether his advice is entirely disinterested, and whether he has absolutely no interest in offering advice to the Congress as to whether or not his own job should be abolished. On that question I submit we can exercise our own judgment.

If the Board should be abolished, we can believe that every man upon it is not only a man of character but a man of great ability in his line. The sole question is the wisdom or the lack of wisdom in a mere organization matter. It involves no reflection upon the character of the gentlemen concerned.

While I am on my feet, let me say, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that we have quite a different view of the organization from that held sincerely by the Senator from Vermont. In the Committee on Appropriations we have found a divided board, a board divided in its opinion of its own jurisdiction, different members clamoring for the power to spend the money appropriated by the Congress, going so far on one occasion as to require us to tell them to withdraw and reach an agreement among themselves as to who had control and was authorized to administer the functions of the Board.

I merely wish to say to the Senator from Vermont that I asked the question at this time because a resolution has been offered on the subject. As chairman of the committee to which it was referred I would have immediately arranged to call a meeting to consider it, but the Member of the Senate who offered the resolution had requested that I should not call the meeting for about 10 days, inasmuch as he was to leave the city. So soon as he returns a meeting will be held, and the Senator and all others who are interested will have equal opportunity to present their views. At that time we will go into the question, and ascertain some of the reasons for the divided opinion of the Board itself as to jurisdiction, and whether or not there is any justification for the statement made by newspaper writers that if an organization is placed in a different building in this city some pilot may have an accident in Michigan or Maine. It is merely a question of determining a matter of organization, as to whether it would be wise or unwise to transfer a branch of the Government.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate long. I merely wish to say, briefly, that if I were to assume what is assumed by the Senator from South Carolina, namely, that the two men to whom he has called attention are interested in retaining the positions they hold because of the compensation they receive—if I were to assume that, I would say make the most of it. If it is possible to discredit those men on account of a charge of venal interest, do it if you can. That does not affect my opinion of them. I know they are men of such character that they will not try to sway or influence the judgment of the Senate because they happen to be in positions in which they are drawing salaries which might be discontinued. So far as Mr. Allen is concerned, I think the United States will be very lucky if it is able to keep him in this job. I doubt whether we can keep him there. We cannot offer him so much as he can earn somewhere else.

I do not think this attempt to reflect upon the value of these two men and their credibility is a worthy attempt. As a matter of fact, I cannot quite perceive the import of the inquiry about C. B. Allen. I am not offering C. B. Allen as a witness. I have put in my statement, together with the comment of a column writer by the name of Ansel E. Talbert, and a telegram from the president of the Air Line Pilots' Association.

CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT—ADDRESS BY THE LATE SENATOR BORAH

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, in February 1937 the people of the United States faced a crisis in their Government which has had no parallel since the Civil War. It was then that the President proposed to make the United States Supreme Court and the Federal judiciary subservient to the will of the Executive and of Congress. Both to men learned in constitutional law and to the millions more to whom the Constitution is a guaranty that they will be permitted to continue living and working under the rule of a free government, it seemed that the very foundation of the Republic was threatened.

A few days before the President's plan was revealed to Congress and a shocked nation, Senator Borah had thus warned the people of the United States in a radio address:

To establish the precedent of making vital changes in our national charter without the authority of the people expressed in the manner pointed out by the Constitution may seem expedient for today, but may torment us on many and many a tomorrow.

The Supreme Court occupies a central position in assuring us the enjoyment of our constitutional guaranties. Of the Court he said in this speech:

* * * When its worth is measured by the service it has rendered to the cause of human liberty, to the advancement of human happiness, and to the maintenance of a government of law rather than a government of men, that it stands among the foremost institutions of the world seems true beyond peradventure of a doubt.

During the months that followed this faith in the principles of constitutional government, which Senator Borah shared with millions of his fellow Americans, was to meet one of its severest tests. An administration which had just been elected by an overwhelming vote, and which was almost unopposed in either House of Congress, seemed destined to have its way at the expense of the Constitution, the Supreme Court, and whatever guaranties of human liberty stood in its path.

The story of how the voice of the American people made itself heard from every section of the country to encourage and support those men in Congress who opposed the administration's will is one of the most inspiring chapters in American history. It is a living refutation of those who would have us believe that the Constitution is an obsolete document surviving from "horse and buggy" days, inapplicable to the conditions of our times. It was the voice of the American people speaking through the majority report of the Judiciary Committee which declared:

It is a measure which should be so emphatically rejected that its parallel will never again be presented to the free representatives of the free people of America.

In September, following the disposal of the plan to pack the Supreme Court, Senator Borah addressed a meeting in Washington which had gathered to celebrate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Constitution. The press speculated that he would denounce the administration, that he would lash those who had so recently attempted to undermine the courts and the Constitution. Instead, his address was a tribute to the principles of American government. It exhibited a quiet faith that the enduring foundations of our democracy will be strengthened through all of the attacks by those who would destroy them. Senator Borah had spoken with conviction when he said in February:

It would be a serious error, if not a fatal mistake, to regard these questions touching the integrity of the Constitution and the independence of the courts as party questions or to seek to treat them as such.

At this time, when freedom has lost its meaning in practically every country save this, when civilization itself seems to totter on the brink of destruction, it seems particularly appropriate that we should read again the words of Senator Borah and recapture his faith in the permanence of our democracy.

His speech in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Constitution, on September 16, 1937, has never previously been published in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have this address by Senator Borah printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, it sometimes seems to make but little difference to those so fortunate as to possess influence or to enjoy power, economical or political, what kind of a government you have. It may be a matter of some importance to them, but it is not vital. They fare reasonably well under any kind of government. The industrial leaders in two of the most despotic governments of Europe are said to be entirely content with their security and satisfied with their profits.

But no kind of government has yet been devised—and both reason and experience teach none can be devised—which offers opportunity and insures liberty to the average man or woman, which preserves and protects the rights and privileges of those whom Lincoln called the common people, except a government of law with independent tribunals of justice. There is no such thing as security for the masses or protection for minority groups, political, racial, or religious, never has been—and in the nature of things never can be—under any form of government save government where the people through their representatives make the laws and uncontrolled courts construe them.

This is the kind of government for which the Declaration of Independence declared and for which American patriots waged a 7 years' war. This is the kind of government which on September 17, 1787, was submitted to the people for approval.

The story of the writing of the Constitution, its submission and its adoption, and, finally, the launching of a free Nation, needs to be reread and retold again and again. The boldness of that enterprise, the overmastering spirit with which it was carried forward, the unselfish devotion of the leaders to the cause of human liberty, and, above all, the comforts and the blessings which this plan of government has brought to the average man or woman, lifts the story into the realm of sacred history. Perhaps you would expect me to retell that story tonight, but I have other things which it seems I ought to discuss. Before doing so, however, let me pause for one observation which seems relevant in connection with the adoption of the Constitution and relevant to the happenings and duties of our own immediate time.

It is often said, in recent years, that the Constitution of the United States is not a sacred document. This is one of the assumptions constantly advanced by those who would change the Constitution as you would change a statute, bend it or twist it to every political breeze, or tear it up altogether. Of course, the Constitution, as it exists at any particular time, is not sacred as against the right and power of the people to amend it in the manner provided in the Constitution. The people may make over our Government in any manner which seems to the people proper and wise. The means, and the method, are always at hand to adjust the powers of government to the tasks of government, not the powers which individuals, or groups, may insist the Government should have, but the powers which all the people may determine the Government shall have. And therein lies the whole difference between democracy and autocracy.

But, until the people speak, until the people make known their desire, the Constitution is sacredly binding upon the people, upon officials, upon the Congress, the Executive, and the courts. In the language of the Father of his Country, "The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government—but the Constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all."

Certainly, it must be so regarded by all who take a solemn oath to maintain and support it. It is sacred against the rights or power of Congress or the Executive or the courts, or of all combined, to change or modify it through unwarranted, forced, or strained constructions. Such changes are usurpations—none the less vicious because not openly avowed. If that were not true, constitutional government would be a mere trap with which to ensnare the peoples' support to accomplish their own enslavement.

Will those who contend that the Constitution is not sacred go so far as to say that the right of the people to determine the form of government under which they live is not sacred, that liberty is not sacred, that to be free from arbitrary arrests and the torture chamber is not sacred, that the right to live your faith and worship your God unmolested is not sacred? If they will not go so far as to say these things are not sacred, then let us remember that upon the exclusive power of the people to make their Constitution and to keep it as they make it, or amend it, as they choose, all these sacred things depend. When the people lost control of their Constitution, they have already lost control of their Government. It is an old story that when the people lose power, they lose liberty.

I may have a wrong conception of the word "sacred." But I feel that an instrument of government, purchased by years of sacrifice and bloodshed upon the field, by weeks and months of arduous effort in counsel, which has held together people of all climes, races, and faiths in ordered liberty, which gives freedom to all who come within its jurisdiction, which makes the people sovereign and public officials their agents, is sacred by every rule which measures the worth of human progress or human freedom.

Mr. Chairman, it has often been stated there was not much new, or original, in the Constitution of the United States. Its simplicity and its strength and durability lie in the fact that the framers were content to be guided by experience and to place in our scheme of government no more than experience had revealed as expedient and wise. It may well be—indeed, one might say it must be—that, in dealing with new problems, experience will again call for such changes as may be deemed expedient and wise. Widespread poverty in the midst of wealth, the concentration of economic power, the unquenchable thirst of a progressive people for the better things of life, have brought, and will continue to bring, to the Government matters for consideration. And the people, as I have already said, have the power, and I doubt not will have the intelligence and the patriotism, to meet all such exigencies and to grant to the Government whatever powers are necessary.

But some of the experiences embodied in our framework of government had been so bitter and searching, so unerring in the truths revealed, so profoundly a part of the scheme of freedom, that they can never be changed without a surrender of the whole scheme of freedom itself. In the way of illustration, no one will contend that the right of the people to amend the Constitution should ever be taken away from the people or that through subterfuge they should be cheated of that right. And it seems equally beyond question that, if the people are to write the fundamental law, incorporating therein the pledges and guaranties which keep them free, and to prescribe the limits beyond which their agents and servants may not go, in interfering with or disregarding its terms, then there must somewhere be set up an umpire, impartial and final, to judge between the people and their agents and servants. No one familiar with the history of the Constitutional Convention or familiar with the thought of the day outside of the convention will doubt that the framers, without division, recognized the necessity of creating such an umpire. And they will have no doubt that this idea met with the approval of the people of those times. Looking upon the pure and impartial administration of justice as the highest achievement of government and the surest bond of national union, they, with practically one accord, sought to set up a tribunal of justice free and apart from the storms of politics.

In this vital matter the framers were working again by the light of experience, for the idea of an independent tribunal of justice did not originate, in the first instance, in the councils of state or among those of great influence. It had originated with the humble and persecuted, with those who had suffered from political opinions or religious beliefs, and the sanctity of whose homes and the security of whose families had often been violated by those in power. The demand for tribunals, uninfluenced by and unafraid of, political power, came from the people of Old England, was carried across the sea by those seeking security in a new world, was kept alive throughout the Colonies, gathered up and incorporated by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence, and, finally, came to majestic completeness in the Constitution. No institution of ours has its roots deeper down in the elemental passions of a free people.

We enjoy in this country what a distinguished churchman has called a modern miracle. Men of all races, English, German, Italian, Norwegian, Irish, Greek, and all, with their varied and conflicting views and ways of thinking and living, representing all faiths, all creeds, and all religions, Protestant, Catholic, Jew, Scientist, and those with no belief, all living in peace and security under one flag. It seems no less than a miracle when we recall rivers running red with human blood shed in racial and religious warfare, and when we now look abroad and see great nations tortured with racial and religious controversies, torn with internecine strife, visiting on each other cruelties which find few parallels in all the history of persecutions. Let us pause in our service this evening and make inquiry why it is we are so richly blessed.

We shall find it is not because divine Providence has sought us out for special favor, for He "hath made of one blood all nations of men," not because we are altogether different from other peoples in our likes and dislikes, our prejudices and our passions. We shall find that our peculiarly good fortune and our rare blessings are due primarily to the fact that we have had a Constitution guaranteeing liberty and protection under the law to all, and a Supreme Court which for 150 years has never, when appealed to, permitted that guaranty to be disregarded.

There have been times when political forces have sought to disregard some or all of the guaranties of the Constitution—freedom of speech, of the press, freedom from arbitrary arrests, freedom of priest or minister to administer to his people—and there have been times when political forces have sought to close the courts. But when national feeling has run high—as national feeling at times inevitably will—when great leaders have swayed with the storm—as great leaders sometimes do—the supreme tribunal created by the fathers has remembered the Constitution and thrown its shield about all who sought its protection. When in the haste or zeal of some great effort those in control of the political forces of the Nation have looked upon the Bill of Rights as an obstacle to their aims, the Court has proved to be, as James Madison expressed the hope and belief it would prove, "an impenetrable bulwark against every assumption of power in the Legislature or the Executive," and has furthermore resisted "every encroachment upon the rights" which the people had stipulated in the Constitution should never be disregarded or surrendered. This modern miracle of ours is constitutional government, with its checks and balances, its laws and courts, in practical operation. It is democracy working.

The marvel of those men who stood about the birth of this Nation is not that they met the exigencies of the immediate hour—other leaders in other times had done that only to see their work perish with them—but that they could, and did, outline principles of government applicable to all times. They saw in their clear vision a great republic deriving all power from the people and designed solely to serve the people. They were familiar with the tragic efforts of the people in the past to set up such a government and they could see, or thought they could see, some of the vicissitudes of the future, and they built not for their own day but for all time. They understood well that occasions would arise when the people themselves, as well as their leaders, might grow restless under those constitutional restraints upon which all the rights of the people rest, and they sought to guard against that day. May I quote here the words of Thomas Jefferson: "An elective despotism was not the Government we fought for, but one which should not only be founded on free principles, but in which the powers of government be so divided and balanced among several bodies, * * * that no one could transcend their legal limits without being effectually checked and restrained by the others."

Since the Great War the world has seemed more or less topsy-turvy. That event came near banishing moral forces from public affairs. Consciously or unconsciously, leaders and peoples alike have ever since felt the baneful influence of the theory that force is the sole, as well as the supreme, arbiter in all matters, domestic or foreign, touching the affairs of government. Logically, therefore, before the wounded were hardly off the field and while the hospitals in practically all countries were crowded with the maimed and the insane, preparations were begun for other wars. Huge programs for increased armaments on the one hand, with tax burdens without precedent imposed upon the already harassed and broken citizen on the other hand. All this in the face of a fast approaching economic break-down, devastating and world-wide. The sanctity of treaties and the solemn obligations of nations gave way under the weight of the war passion, while the people were asked to carry heavier and heavier burdens, which they have done with a fortitude and a martyrdom unparalleled in the history of mankind.

Is it any wonder that under such circumstances the whole theory of democratic government should be placed under challenge by its enemies and often left to function under suspicion by its friends? Need we be surprised that during this period practically every principle vital to the existence of popular government has either been assailed or doubted? Could we expect that during the reign of this saturnalia of force and the mad aftermath the system of government which depends for its highest achievement upon peace and for its very life upon the liberty and self-helping, self-governing capacity of the individual should go unscathed? But the attack calls for action, not surrender—not even a compromise of the principles embodied in our Constitution. We are not to take up the role of cowards fleeing before a revolution, but to retain the role of American citizens conscious of the worth of the heritage left for a time in our keeping and conscious also of our duty to transmit the heritage unimpaired. The people in this country believe in constitutional government. They have given evidence of that too often to leave the matter in doubt. Great emergencies may call for exceptional exertions of power upon the part of government, but that does not establish principles and should not be permitted to establish precedents. The principles of free government are the chief concern of the American people. This they have many times demonstrated, and there is no reason to feel they will fail to do so again.

Here I desire to digress long enough to take notice of a statement made recently by a high official of a foreign government, and undoubtedly, by authority of his government. His statement was to the effect that the emissaries from his country coming here to preach their doctrine must be protected by our Government, that they must enjoy, as it were, immunity in their efforts to sow the seeds of religious intolerance, race hatred, and arbitrary power among us. It seems to me this high official has a very inadequate understanding of the workings of constitutional government and a strange misconception of the American people. It seems worth while to explain. The orderly procedure in such matters under constitutional government would be about as follows: These emissaries will be protected by the guaranteed right of assemblage, of free speech, of free press—vital liberties long since murdered in the land from whence the emissaries came. The people of this country are fairly well informed already of the teachings and practices in that country by news which has long since reached our shores. But they will listen—in patience if not respect. So long as these emissaries observe the laws of the land, they will receive the protection of the laws. If these emissaries are so willful, however, as is their wont, as to violate the laws of the land, they will have a trial, not in the puppet courts of their homeland, but in independent courts where justice is administered without fear or favor and without price. If they should be found guilty, they will be punished regardless of the country from which they came. And if their crimes are of such a nature as to call for such action, constitutional government will probably electrocute these evangels of discord and leave arbitrary power to take care of the implied threat already given. This, it seems to me, would be the orderly procedure under constitutional government. The advice is given freely but with little hope it will be understood.

Many believe that constitutional government is approaching its severest test. The supposition is that the intricate and complex problems growing out of modern industrial life cannot be dealt with successfully through the slow-moving machinery of constitutional government. But while the task of government in these extraordinary times is very great, the patience, the energy, the resourcefulness, and the patriotism of these 130,000,000 people are also very great—immeasurable, incalculable. Never has education been so widespread, never the means of transmitting knowledge to all and upon all subjects been so universal and perfect. Thomas Carlyle, in his life of Robert Burns, comparing the modern era with former times, said: "Man stands, as it were, in the midst of a boundless arsenal and magazine, filled with all the weapons and engines which man's skill has been able to devise from earliest time; and he works accordingly, with a strength borrowed from all past ages." And while the citizen in these days stands in the midst of all kinds of questions calling for greater and graver responsibility, what reason have we to suppose that the American citizen will not be equal to the task? Certainly there has been no evidence either of incompetency or unreliability in these frightful years through which we have just passed.

There seems to me something decidedly un-American in these doubts and fears touching the inability of democracy to cope with the problems of modern life. Let's leave these doubts and fears to those who openly decry our system of free government and who hate the very principles upon which it rests. Why should we doubt that system of government which has brought so much of happiness to the individual and so much of power to the Nation? If fate should be against democracy it will be time enough to grapple with that tragedy when it comes, but let's not commit the crime of encouraging it. Under that self-discipline which national exigencies always suggest and which a great people always accepts, there is no reason why the achievements of our Government and the success of our people in the past should be anything more than the prelude to still greater achievements in the future.

And may I say to the youth of this country, those who will have most to do in directing the affairs of the Nation in the near future, that the more they study the history of our country, the more they will realize that success in public affairs, as in all other things, comes, not to those who doubt but to those who believe. Those whom this Republic has placed among her immortals were not those who staggered through in unbelief, but those who believed that what constitutional government had promised constitutional government would perform.

The best illustration of this pessimistic political philosophy is the theory so often advanced that personal liberty has become incompatible with economic security, that the time has come when if the masses would make sure of shelter and food they must surrender freedom. The things to be done, it is argued, are so big, so vast, that they must be done by the Government, and the citizen must yield up all discretion, all judgment, together with most of his ancient privileges and his personal liberty. If that is true, of course, we began wrong 150 years ago. If that is true, Washington and Jefferson were wrong and Mussolini and Hitler are right. This theory would write "lie" across the Declaration of Independence and "obsolete" across the Federal Constitution. But the theory itself is false, and has been proven to be false by all human experience. Personal liberty, the discretion and judgment of the citizens are not incompatible with, but are essential factors in, economic security. In those countries where the people have been induced to give up their rights as free men and free women under the promise of economic security, they have lost both. There has been greater advancement since the Declaration of Independence and the adoption of the Federal Constitution in all those things which contribute to the moral and physical well being, to the happiness and dignity of the man in the factory, in the store, on the farm and in the mine, to make it possible to own homes and to dwell in them in security, than in the 3,000 years preceding. Our work is by no means complete. But that which has been accomplished demonstrates we are on the right road. No, no! Liberty, in its full and true sense, is an indispensable part of economic security. Political liberty and economic freedom are allies, not enemies.

In considering these gloomy theories and the reason why these views are among us, we must keep in mind the experience of the last 25 years—the Gethsemane through which humanity has passed. They have been mad, confusing, discouraging years. They spread far and wide the seeds of distrust and despair. The Great War and the world-wide depression which followed naturally left their wounds upon the body politic and exacted their toll of human suffering, but as this long night of agony draws to a close and the dawn of a new day breaks, this outstanding, inspiring fact remains: It is in those countries, and those countries alone, where men and women are still free, free to choose their own calling or profession, free to live their own lives, free to worship their God as they conceive their God, that material recovery has been greatest and economic security most pronounced. The exacting years of the war, the devastating years of the depression, have demonstrated that constitutional government is the only government which, in restoring the economic welfare of the people, at the same time preserves their rights and their liberty. While caring for the material interests of the citizen, it does not barter away his spiritual freedom.

This Government and what it stands for, this Constitution and what it means to the happiness and to the advancement of the people, not only to those so fortunate as to find shelter under its terms, but as a steadying, stabilizing force for all humanity, is the priceless heritage which has been entrusted for a brief time to our keeping, and as a people we know its worth and as a people we will preserve it and pass it on unimpaired to our children and our children's children.

In conclusion, this anniversary will call forth many words of praise for our great charter of Government. But after all is said that may be said about our Constitution, it all seems inadequate and vain compared with the irrefutable facts and the living truths which testify to its worth. Its measure of worth is revealed and confirmed, not by words but by experience. We cherish and value it, not because of what may be said of it but because of what it has done for us as a people. It has given us peace among ourselves and between 48 sovereign States. It has guaranteed alike the welfare of the individual and of the public. Beyond any frame of government yet devised, it leaves room for that individual initiative which is the crowning characteristic of our people, while it affords complete opportunity for unity in all that concerns the Nation as a whole. While mindful of human infirmities and of individual wants, its ultimate objective is national power and national glory. Finally, the strongest assurance of its perpetuity is the fact that it affords perfect machinery for gathering up, as it were, and formulating into laws and policies the reserve common sense of a great people. And it is common sense that rules the world.

We have not lived, we are not to live, in the republic of Plato, but in the Republic of Washington and Jefferson, Jackson and Lincoln, fitted for the storm as well as the calm. We will have our differences, our contentions, and our controversies, even our seasons of bitterness and discord. We will make mistakes and sometimes grope long for the right way. At times we will fight harder for party than for country, for political power rather than public welfare. But such is the nature, such the glory of democracy, that ultimately all such things are lost in the depth of devotion for that constitutional system which, in a world all but terrified with intolerance and oppression, keeps us independent, united, and free.

A few evenings ago, in calling upon a friend, I passed by that monument to Abraham Lincoln, which stands in Lincoln Park, the monument representing Lincoln with the kneeling slaves and their broken shackles.

I thought again over the life of Abraham Lincoln and tried to comprehend its greatness. I saw the awkward country boy in his cabin home in the forests of Kentucky. I saw him as he covered his mother's new grave with autumn's withered leaves and went back to his humble home to enter the race for fame. I saw him as he walked near the auction block in the slave market of New Orleans and heard him utter his curse upon the institution of slavery. I saw him in after years when, as one of the greatest rulers upon this earth, he walked with patience and compassion the paths of power. I heard men denounce him as a tyrant and a usurper. I listened for the answer, but he quietly submitted to it all. I saw him in the storm of civil strife as he steered the ship of state into the Union harbor. At last the storm began to clear, the light break through the rifted clouds, and I saw Abraham Lincoln walking in the morning of a new day with 4,000,000 human beings unloosed of their fetters striving to walk by his side.

I said to myself, this all happened in our democracy. It could not have happened anywhere but in a democracy. No tyrant's hand to crush the unfolding genius, no bureaucratic power to assign him his place in society or in government. My friends, this is the scheme of human happiness, of ordered liberty, whose one hundred and fiftieth anniversary we celebrate tonight.

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8668) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement relative to the items in the pending bill, House bill 8668, the War Department civil functions bill.

This bill covers the nonmilitary activities or civil functions of the War Department. It carries funds for taking care of our national cemeteries. It carries funds for the Alaska communication system under the Signal Corps; likewise for the maintenance and new construction of rivers and harbors. It carries funds for continuation of work on existing projects for flood control, and for continuing work upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

The bill also carries funds for the Fort Peck hydroelectric plant and for the Bonneville Dam. It carries funds for the making of topographical maps. It likewise carries funds for the maintenance of the Soldiers' Home. It provides funds for carrying on the work in the Panama Canal Zone, and likewise for initiating or starting construction of a new canal embracing a third set of locks in the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. President, the bill, as it reached the Senate from the House, carried the sum of $203,000,000. The Senate committee has added, in the way of a recommendation, an additional sum, so that now the bill before the Senate, if enacted, will carry $223,000,000. The increases in the main are for two items. One is for the initiation and construction of a new canal across the Canal Zone. The other is for additional funds for the Corps of Engineers.

The amount recommended for the construction of the new canal is $15,000,000. If that amendment is agreed to by the Senate it will necessitate an amendment of existing law by way of legislation, and if the $15,000,000 item is agreed to, I shall at the proper time offer the additional authorizing language.

The bill adds some additional money to be expended by the Corps of Engineers. It increases the amount for maintenance by approximately $1,287,000. It likewise increases the amount for some repair work on the Sacramento River in California caused by recent floods. The amount of this increase is $642,000. It likewise recommends that the sum appropriated for speeding up construction on the Bonneville Dam be increased in the sum of $2,600,000.

So, Mr. President, consent having been granted that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and likewise that the committee amendments be first considered, I ask that the committee amendments be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Corps of Engineers—Rivers and Harbors," on page 6, line 22, after the words "by law", to strike out "$66,721,510" and insert "$68,009,110", so as to read:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation; for survey of northern and northwestern lakes and other boundary and connecting waters as heretofore authorized, including the preparation, correction, printing, and issuing of charts and bulletins and the investigation of lake levels; for prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City; for expenses of the California Débris Commission in carrying on the work authorized by the act approved March 1, 1893, as amended (33 U. S. C. 661, 678, and 683); for removing sunken vessels or craft obstructing or endangering navigation as authorized by law; for operating and maintaining, keeping in repair, and continuing in use without interruption any lock, canal (except the Panama Canal), canalized river, or other public works for the use and benefit of navigation belonging to the United States, including maintenance of the Hennepin Canal in Illinois; for payment annually of tuition fees of not to exceed 50 student officers of the Corps of Engineers at civil technical institutions under the provisions of section 127a of the National Defense Act, as amended (10 U. S. C. 535); for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors; for printing and binding, newspapers, lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, and office supplies and equipment required in the Office of the Chief of Engineers to carry out the purposes of this appropriation, including such printing as may be authorized by the Committee on Printing of the House of Representatives, either during a recess or session of Congress, of surveys authorized by law, and such surveys as may be printed during a recess of Congress shall be printed, with illustrations, as documents of the next succeeding session of Congress, and for the purchase (not to exceed $197,700) of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motorboats, for official use: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for any preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate not authorized by law, $68,009,110.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Flood control," on page 10, at the end of line 7, after "50 Stat. 849)", to strike out "$600,000" and insert "$1,242,000", so as to read:

Flood control, Sacramento River, Calif.: For prosecuting work of flood control, Sacramento River, Calif., in accordance with the provisions of acts approved March 1, 1917, May 15, 1928, and August 26, 1937 (33 U. S. C. 703, 704; 50 Stat. 849), $1,242,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Hydroelectric power", on page 10, line 18, to strike out "$800,000, no part of which shall be available for obligation for any expense incident to the installation of more than six electrical power units" and insert "$3,400,000", so as to read:

Power plant, Bonneville Dam, Columbia River, Oreg.: For continuing the construction of the hydroelectric power plant at Bonneville Dam, Columbia River, Oreg., as authorized by the acts approved August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1038), and August 20, 1937 (50 Stat. 731), $3,400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 20, to insert:

SURVEYS AND MAPPING

For topographic surveys and mapping as proposed in Senate Document No. 54, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, to be applied to the same objects (but not limited to the amounts specified for such objects) enumerated in the Interior Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, under the heading "Geological Survey" and the subheading thereunder "Topographic surveys," $1,210,350, to remain available until June 30, 1942: Provided, That this appropriation shall be devoted to mapping in strategic areas, in accordance with priorities to be determined by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "The Panama Canal", on page 11, line 15, after the name "Canal Zone", to insert "and construction of additional facilities,"; on page 12, line 5, after the name "Panama Canal", to insert a comma and "and construction of additional facilities"; and on page 13, line 5, after the name "Panama Canal", to insert "and construction of additional facilities,", so as to read:

For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the maintenance and operation, sanitation, and civil government of the Panama Canal and Canal Zone, and construction of additional facilities, including the following: Compensation of all officials and employees; foreign and domestic newspapers and periodicals; lawbooks; textbooks and books of reference; printing and binding, including printing of annual report; rent and personal services in the District of Columbia; purchase or exchange of typewriting, adding, and other machines; purchase or exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles; claims for damages to vessels passing through the locks of the Panama Canal, as authorized by the Panama Canal Act; claims for losses of or damages to property arising from the conduct of authorized business operations; claims for damages to property arising from the maintenance and operation, sanitation, and civil government of the Panama Canal, and construction of additional facilities; acquisition of land and land under water, as authorized in the Panama Canal Act; expenses incurred in assembling, assorting, storing, repairing, and selling material, machinery, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased or acquired for the construction of the Panama Canal which are unserviceable or no longer needed, to be reimbursed from the proceeds of such sale; expenses incident to conducting hearings and examining estimates for appropriations on the Isthmus; expenses incident to any emergency arising because of calamity by flood, fire, pestilence, or like character not foreseen or otherwise provided for herein; travel expenses, when prescribed by the Governor of the Panama Canal to persons engaged in field work or traveling on official business; not to exceed $2,000 for travel and subsistence expenses of members of the police and fire forces of the Panama Canal incident to their special training in the United States; transportation, including insurance, of public funds and securities between the United States and the Canal Zone; purchase, construction, repair, replacement, alteration, or enlargement of buildings, structures, equipment, and other improvements; and for such other expenses not in the United States as the Governor of the Panama Canal may deem necessary best to promote the maintenance and operation, sanitation, and civil government of the Panama Canal, and construction of additional facilities, all to be expended under the direction of the Governor of the Panama Canal and accounted for as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 23, after "(50 Stat. 478)", to strike out "$8,861,367" and insert "$8,011,367", and in line 7, after the words "in all", to strike out "$27,861,367" and insert "$27,011,367", so as to read:

For maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal: Salary of the Governor, $10,000; contingencies of the Governor, to be expended in his discretion, not exceeding $3,000; purchase, inspection, delivery, handling, and storing of materials, supplies, and equipment for issue to all departments of the Panama Canal, the Panama Railroad, other branches of the United States Government, and for authorized sales; payment in lump sums of not exceeding the amounts authorized by the Injury Compensation Act approved September 7, 1916 (5 U. S. C. 793), to alien cripples who are now a charge upon the Panama Canal by reason of injuries sustained while employed in the construction of the Panama Canal; and relief payments authorized by the act approved July 8, 1937 (50 Stat. 478), $8,011,367; for continuing the construction of special protective works, $19,000,000; in all $27,011,367, together with all moneys arising from the conduct of business operations authorized by the Panama Canal Act, and, in addition, the Governor of the Panama Canal may, when authorized by the Secretary of War, enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1941, for or on account of the construction of special protective works, Panama Canal, to an amount not in excess of $4,500,000, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 8, to insert:

Construction of additional facilities—Panama Canal: For construction of additional facilities for the improvement and enlargement of the capacity of the Panama Canal, in accordance with the act approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1409), including reimbursement to the appropriations "Maintenance and operation, Panama Canal," "Sanitation, Panama Canal," and "Civil government, Panama Canal," in such amounts as the Governor of the Panama Canal shall from time to time determine to be additional costs incurred for the objects specified in said appropriations on account of the prosecution of the work; in all, $15,000,000.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question. I refer to line 13 on page 14. The language to which I refer occurs in the pending committee amendment. After providing for the construction of additional facilities, it says:

Including reimbursement to the appropriations "Maintenance and operation, Panama Canal."

And so forth, to the total amount of $15,000,000.

Calling the Senator's specific attention to line 13, I ask whether the sum of $15,000,000 previously has been spent, and has been withdrawn from the appropriations listed in lines 14 and 15, and for which reimbursement is now sought?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the answer is no. This is a new item.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator please explain to us why we are now undertaking to include a reimbursement to previous appropriations which are specifically listed, and we thereupon say that we are going to give $15,000,000 back to funds which have not been exhausted or depleted? What do we mean then by the use of the word "reimbursement"?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the item covered on page 14 beginning with line 9 and ending with line 19, is an appropriation to start construction of a new canal across the Canal Zone. It is for the purpose of starting the ditch, so-called. The first money will be spent on the excavation. There is no money in this item for the construction of locks. That will come later. At a later date, if this amendment shall be agreed to, it will be necessary to modify existing law somewhat so as to give the authorities permission to enter into contracts for future work, that is for making the plans and specifications and contracting for the construction of the locks themselves.

The bill passed last year by the Congress authorizing the construction of the third set of locks, which embraces a second canal, totals something like $277,000,000. The department desires a contractual authorization of some $99,000,000, and they desire to start work with the sum of $15,000,000. So those three items are bound together, and the item in question is for the initiation of the work. The first work, of course, will be digging the ditch, and later on there will be the construction of the locks. But future Congresses will make available the money as the money may be requested by the Department and approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. Let me pursue the matter for a moment more. I may say to the Senator that it is true that when the bill providing for additional locks for the Panama Canal was before us we authorized a total expenditure of $277,000,000, and we also provided that not more than $15,000,000 should be spent in the first year. I am now informed that when this very bill was before the House, the House refused to appropriate $15,000,000, in accordance with the authorization contained in the act approved August 11, 1939. It is my information—and I will say that, as I recall, it has come to me only through the press—that work had actually been started, that the money had been expended, that some $15,000,000 had been contracted for, notwithstanding the fact that the actual appropriation had not been made. I assumed, therefore, when I looked at the committee amendment on page 14, that the work had been paid for out of the appropriations mentioned in lines 14 and 15. I therefore interpreted the words in line 13, "including reimbursement", to mean that we were restoring to those appropriations money which had been expended therefrom. Am I not correct in my deduction, let me ask the Senator?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I was in Panama during the month of November 1939, at which time I was permitted to inspect fairly well the work going on in the Canal Zone. I was shown nothing in the way of work on the new canal; I discovered nothing along that line, and at this time I know of nothing.

I refer to the hearings on this bill before the Senate Committee on Appropriations. If the Senator will take his copy of the hearings and turn to page 2, he will find under the heading "Panama Canal—Maintenance and Operation," the following:

PANAMA CANAL—MAINTENANCE AND OPERATION

(1) At page 10, line 26, after the words "Canal Zone", add "and construction of additional facilities."

(2) At page 11, line 14, after the words "Panama Canal", insert "and construction of additional facilities."

(3) At page 12, line 13, after the words "Panama Canal", add "and construction of additional facilities."

Here is the explanation as given in the hearings, and it is placed there by the authorities:

Explanation: The addition of this clause in the general provisions relating to Panama Canal appropriations is very desirable in connection with the amendment proposed authorizing an appropriation for the construction of additional facilities at the Panama Canal. The existing language refers to the three main appropriations of the Panama Canal, and reference should be made to this additional appropriation when it is included in the Appropriation Act.

As to whether or not any money has been spent on the Canal, I refer to page 36 of the hearings. I read as follows:

AMOUNT SPENT TO DATE ON PREPARATION OF PLANS

Under authority of the joint resolution of May 1, 1936, the Panama Canal has for the past 2 years been engaged in making plans for the proposed lock project, and approximately $263,000 has been expended for this purpose. The work is still in progress, and considerably more will be accomplished by the end of this fiscal year. As a result, we are assured that the detailed plans will be ready by the time contracts must be made to complete the project within 6 years.

That is the record in the hearings upon this particular item.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say further that had this language in the committee amendment provided for an appropriation in accordance with our previous authorization I never would have raised the slightest question about it. I believe the work ought to be commenced; I believe it ought to be undertaken; I am perfectly willing to see it go forward; but, Mr. President, when we write a bill, and talk about reimbursement to appropriations, the word "reimbursement" means, according to my understanding of it, that we now make appropriations totaling $15,000,000 so as to leave the former appropriations intact. If that is not the purpose of the word "reimbursement," then, Mr. President, I think the amendment ought to be corrected to state the facts and what the real intention is. Will the Senator further comment on the word "reimbursement"?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this amendment was submitted to the committee by the Canal Zone authorities. The committee takes it for granted that the language is such as to provide for the work which the authorities desire to have done. For that reason the committee is not prepared to suggest an amendment. If the Senator has an amendment, I am sure the Senate will be glad to consider it.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me make clear to the Senator what I am driving at. I do not want to see the Panama Canal authorities, or any other authorities, undertaking work which they think they need in advance of Congress actually making the appropriations. The mere fact that we make an authorization by no means authorizes them to go ahead with the expenditure. As I understand, we must thereafter appropriate. The word "reimbursement" implies that the work has been undertaken and that the money has been spent and has been taken out of these items, and now we are being asked to restore it. If that is the purpose, and we all understand it and are willing to ratify that type of procedure, very well.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask the Senator whether or not the War Department or the Canal Zone authorities presented the same request to the House Appropriations Committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The House record shows that the matter was presented to the House committee. The House committee did not recommend the item, and the House itself did not insert it. So it is inserted by the Senate committee virtually as a new proposal so far as the Congress is concerned. Of course, there is a Budget estimate for the item.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the Senator familiar with the reasons why the House objected?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think I am.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator state the reasons? I am asking purely for information. I am curious about the matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. At the present time there is a rather complete canal across the Canal Zone. The Canal is serviceable, and there is no complaint, save that it is narrow. Some existing ships cannot go through the Panama Canal as it is now constructed. The locks are too narrow. Some British ships cannot go through. We can send any of our ships through the Canal. However, some of our airplane carriers will barely go through. They will not go through without scraping the sides, and damage has been done both to ships and to the Canal.

It is the plan of the Navy Department to increase the width of some of the navy ships by adding to them what are called blisters. A blister is a protection on the side of the ship which renders the main parts of the ship immune to attack by torpedo or something which might destroy the blister, which is a protrusion on the side to prevent injury to the ship. If blisters are installed, the Canal will be too narrow to permit the passage of the larger ships having blisters on their sides.

That is one reason, but that is not the main reason for the starting of the new canal. Something might happen to the present Canal, such as an earthquake. Of course, even if we had two or three canals, an earthquake might conceivably destroy all of them; but if an enemy should come over the existing Canal, or go through the Canal and do damage to the locks, of course the Canal would be rendered unserviceable. That is possible.

I will say to the Senator from Michigan that the greatest danger is through the destruction of a vessel in the locks themselves. Of course there is no sure way to prevent such a thing. If we should become involved in some kind of trouble, and a ship should start through the Canal, and in going through some of the locks it should be blown up, or through sabotage or otherwise a ship carrying high explosives should be destroyed in the Canal, of course the damage to the locks could not be foretold. It might put them out of commission for weeks or months, in which event the Canal would be dead.

So it is the opinion of the Canal Zone authorities, the War Department, the Navy Department, and all the departments interested, that a new set of locks should be constructed to provide a new canal across the zone. The new canal, if constructed, would be located very nearly parallel to the existing canal. In some places it would be two or three hundred yards from the existing Canal. In other places it would be a third of a mile, and in one place perhaps half a mile, or a little more than half a mile, from the existing Canal.

At the present time the main part of the Canal is through and across Gatun Lake. If the new canal were built, it would still use Gatun Lake for such distance as the lake is available, but a new ditch on the Atlantic side and a new ditch on the Pacific side, with corresponding locks would be necessary. The present Canal has two sets of locks. The new canal would have only one set of locks, so it is referred to as a third set of locks.

As to whether or not we need the new canal now, the record is very clear that we do not need it now for commercial purposes. The present Canal is taking care of all the trade which it is desired to send through the Canal at the present time. The testimony in the record is clear that for commercial purposes the new canal would not be necessary for 20 years, or prior to 1960. By that time it is thought that if the world should return to sanity, and trade relations should expand as they have expanded in the past, the Canal would probably be too small or too narrow to accommodate the traffic.

So the authorities are very clear that for the present the new canal is not necessary for commercial purposes. It is necessary only in the event larger ships are built, or in the event of trouble due to war. That trouble would come about by reason of the existing Canal being destroyed by bombs, by ships in the Canal, or by some other agency.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I was asking the able Senator is whether or not he knows why, in the face of this very persuasive set of circumstances, the House of Representatives declined to include the item in the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not a member of the committee, but I happen to have come into possession of certain information.

There was some confusion in the House committee growing out of the testimony of the engineers as to whether or not the work could be begun in this fiscal year; and because the committee was not certain that it could be begun, it did not include the item. However, since the bill passed the House the matter has been cleared up by the engineers of the Panama Canal Zone and the War Department, who have stated that they can begin the work within this fiscal year; and for that reason I understand the item is now included.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I wish to read a sentence or two from the House committee report. In this connection I ask that page 9 of the House committee report be included in the RECORD at this particular point, down to the line reading "Limitations and legislative provisions."

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW LOCKS

In addition to providing protection for the existing Canal establishment, the Budget includes provision for embarking upon a new set of locks, to cost $277,000,000. The project was authorized by the act approved August 11, 1939 (Public, No. 391, 76th Cong.), and is presented at this time as an urgent defense measure, although its completion is not planned until 6 years hence, at the earliest. The need for additional locks for shipping, it is estimated, will not occur before 1960. Investigation and planning of the project thus far relate principally to the foundation and the general outline of the lay-out of lock structures. Detailed plans have not been started and will take 2 years to complete.

The Budget proposes an initial appropriation of $15,000,000, and contractual authorization of $99,300,000. The proposed uses are indicated generally in the table at the top of page 42 of the hearings. Included in the $15,000,000 is $1,591,900 for the preparation of the detailed plans and specifications for the structural features.

The committee believes this project is being pushed too rapidly. The proposition is to commit the Government to a vast and costly undertaking 2 years in advance of the time when detailed plans and specifications will be ready for accomplishing the structural features. In the absence of such plans and specifications the ultimate cost must largely be conjectural. The project is urged at this time as a defense measure, but a project that cannot be completed for 6 years has questionable standing as an urgent defense measure. Moreover, we are now engaged in building protective works around existing Canal facilities at an estimated cost of $39,570,000. If this work does not give the sought protection, an auxiliary waterway closely paralleling the present one and similarly protected would be of doubtful value. Both would be equally vulnerable.

After viewing the proposition from all angles, the committee is unwilling to recommend an appropriation or contractual authority for initiating work upon a new set of locks at this time. It may be all right to proceed with the preparation of detailed plans and specifications, since such work, it is said, will take 2 years. They will be needed ultimately to do the work as shipping approaches the capacity of the present facilities. The committee, therefore, instead of the Budget proposal, has added $850,000 to the regular appropriation for maintenance and operation of the Canal toward the preparation of such plans and specifications. The resultant reduction is $14,150,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The particular portion which I desire to read for the benefit of the Senate is as follows:

The Budget proposes an initial appropriation of $15,000,000 and contractual authorization of $99,300,000. The proposed uses are indicated generally in the table at the top of page 42 of the hearings. Included in the $15,000,000 is $1,591,900 for the preparation of the detailed plans and specifications for the structural features.

More directly, in reply to the question of the Senator from Michigan:

The committee believes this project is being pushed too rapidly. The proposition is to commit the Government to a vast and costly undertaking 2 years in advance of the time when detailed plans and specifications will be ready for accomplishing the structural features. In the absence of such plans and specifications the ultimate cost must largely be conjectural. The project is urged at this time as a defense measure, but a project that cannot be completed for 6 years has questionable standing as an urgent defense measure. Moreover, we are now engaged in building protective works around existing Canal facilities at an estimated cost of $39,570,000. If this work does not give the sought protection, an auxiliary waterway closely paralleling the present one and similarly protected would be of doubtful value. Both would be equally vulnerable.

That is the reason the House committee gave for failing to include the item of $15,000,000 and failing to start actual construction of the third set of locks in the second canal.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has referred to building a new canal. It is referred to in the press as a new canal. I think it is considered by most persons a new canal. However, I should like to ask the Senator whether or not that is true?

The Panama Canal consists of several sections. One is Gatun Lake, and another is the Culebra Cut. Then at each end there is a canal on lower ground, one going into the Pacific and the other into the Atlantic.

As I understand—and I am asking the Senator for information about it—the so-called new canal does not include the digging of another Culebra Cut, for instance, across the divide, where it was necessary to go to very great expense, even after the Canal was finished, to take care of the slides which occurred. The Culebra Cut will be used by the so-called new canal, just as Gatun Lake will be used by the new canal. Is not that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As I understand, Culebra Cut is on a level with Gatun Lake.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. And if the new canal is authorized, Culebra Cut will be used in connection with Gatun Lake. That combination accounts for a very large part of the distance across the top of the ridge between the Atlantic and the Pacific sides.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

I think we authorized something over $200,000,000 to build the so-called new canal; but if we were to build a new canal and have another cut through the divide, it would certainly require much more than $200,000,000. The construction of an entirely new canal would cost in the neighborhood of $400,000,000 or $500,000,000. As I understand, the only part that is new is the building of a canal from Gatun Lake to the Atlantic Ocean, and the building of another canal on the Pacific side, commencing near the Culebra Cut and extending to the Pacific Ocean. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is my understanding.

Mr. President, Governor Ridley, of the Canal Zone, appeared before our committee and testified on this specific point. The testimony will be found on pages 39 and 40 of the Senate committee hearings. I shall read very briefly from his testimony.

I asked Governor Ridley:

I would like to have it so that the members of the committee can see it—

I was asking for a map, and Governor Ridley exhibited a map on the wall. Then from the map he gave the explanation as follows:

Now, this project affects only the portions of the Canal at either end of Gatun Lake. This is the Pacific Ocean [indicating] and this is Balboa Harbor [indicating], and this shows the present Canal and locks [indicating].

He had the map before him.

Now, for the new project we expect to take off with a bypass channel from Balboa Harbor along this colored line [indicating] and put in a set of locks at this point [indicating], which will raise the vessel two-thirds of the way up to Gatun Lake level. And then it enters the Miraflores Lake, which exists now. Then it starts another bypass around the Pedro Miguel locks along this line [indicating] and requires another lock opposite the existing Pedro Miguel locks to raise the vessel up to the level of Gatun Lake at this point [indicating]. This is the Culebra Cut [indicating].

Senator TRUMAN asked this question:

Are those new locks big enough to let the Queen Mary and the Queen Elizabeth go through when the work is completed?

Governor RIDLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator HAYDEN. Then the exceedingly heavy work that was done in the Gaillard Cut does not have to be done over again? Do you utilize that?

Governor RIDLEY. No, sir; it starts here [indicating] after you pass through the Gaillard Cut.

Senator HAYDEN. You can avoid doing anything in the range of higher mountains that was cut through at Culebra or the Gaillard Cut?

The portion on the top of page 40 I will ask to have placed in the RECORD down to the point where it says "investment during construction." It simply affords a little further detail in the description of the location of the Canal on the map by the Governor of the Canal Zone.

ATLANTIC OCEAN SIDE

Governor RIDLEY. Yes, sir; all the slide area is in there [indicating]. Now, the Atlantic side—this is Limon Bay and the Atlantic Ocean [indicating], and this is Gatun Lock [indicating]. The present Canal is here [indicating], and these are the present locks [indicating]. We are going over here about a half mile away and cut a channel down from Gatun Lake to this point along that colored line [indicating]. The locks will be in here [indicating]. There are three chambers in one flight there, dropping from 85 feet to sea level.

Senator LODGE. How far away is that one from the other?

Governor RIDLEY. About half a mile away from one lock to here [indicating]. I can leave these maps with you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator THOMAS. I think it would be advisable. The secretary will take charge of them so they will not be misplaced.

INVESTMENT IN PANAMA CANAL

For the record, will you please state the cost of the existing system at Panama Canal and locks; in other words, how much has been expended in Panama on the locks and the Canal?

Governor RIDLEY. The total cost of the Canal capitalized on our books is approximately $543,000,000. In that capital cost there is a one hundred and twenty-nine million theoretical interest on the investment during construction.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not correct to say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Nebraska, that the greatest single danger to the Panama Canal is not bombardment from the air; it is not an earthquake; it is not an accident happening to some ship in one of the locks or in one of the large bodies of water forming a part of the Canal; but the greatest single danger that could happen to the Canal is that a ship might be sabotaged or exploded within one of the locks. That is the greatest danger; and the construction of an extra set of locks would completely protect against that danger. At the present time we cannot protect ourselves against it at all, because, to protect ourselves against it would require unloading every single ship before it goes through the Canal, and making a search for hidden explosives and hidden compartments in the ship, which would be equivalent to unloading the ship. If we have a third set of locks, we need never open them to commercial traffic at all if we do not want to, and we could thereby completely and utterly prevent any sabotaging of the locks.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has correctly interpreted the testimony before the committee, as I understand the testimony.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to say a word or two in my own time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Very well.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate should hesitate a little before embarking on this tremendous expenditure of approximately $300,000,000. It is true that only $15,000,000 are provided in the bill, but there is to follow an authorization for a contract of $99,000,000. Having started it, it must be completed. It is conceded that the additional set of locks is not needed for commercial purposes; there is no question as to its not being necessary for commercial purposes. The only argument is that it is needed for national defense.

We are going to spend $300,000,000. Why? Because of the conjuring up of imaginary possibilities. First, we must find someone who is going to war with us. To listen to the arguments which were made before the committee, one would think we were now at war or had potential, imminent enemies. I know of no enemy of this country; I know of no hazard of war; I know of no nation in the world that wishes or dares to make war upon us. Even assuming we were at war, then we would have to conjure up dangers to the Canal from the enemy, although no enemy nearer than 3,000 miles is even to be thought of, and we are more often told of an enemy that may be 6,000 miles away.

We are spending many millions of dollars to protect the Canal. There is included in this bill, I think, the sum of $27,000,000 for protective work. Why are additional locks needed? What is the imaginary instance of some enemy running a ship inside a lock and then exploding the ship and destroying the Canal? In other words, it is intimated that the American Navy and the Governor of the Canal Zone are not going to be sufficiently vigilant to keep an enemy ship from going through the Canal right into the locks of the Canal. I cannot conceive of a greater reflection upon the capacity of the Navy and those who are in charge of the Canal.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LEE. Could the Senator conceive of the almost unbelievable betrayal of Norway and the passage of a German troop train right under the very guns of a Norwegian fort? That has just happened.

Mr. ADAMS. I should be very glad to say to the Senator that I draw a distinction he does not draw. There are no Americans who would sell out their country; there are no Americans in the Navy who would permit such things to happen. I have no apprehension that the things which are reported to have occurred in Norway will occur here.

Mr. LEE. There was once a Benedict Arnold, was there not? The Senator is imputing to me an accusation which I did not have in mind to make. There is much more evidence of intrigue and deceit than there is of bribery in the selling out of Norway's own officials. The Senator, I think, is mistaken if he thinks it is absolutely impossible to deceive anybody in the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no; it is demonstrated every day that it is not impossible to deceive people in the United States.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. May I invite the attention of the Senator from Colorado to page 14, line 13, of this bill, and ask him, please, to interpret for me the word "reimbursement"?

Mr. ADAMS. I am not concerned about that; that is a minor matter. I am talking about $300,000,000 involved in a new venture.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator say he is not concerned in——

Mr. ADAMS. What I mean is that, in the argument I am trying to make, I am not concerning myself about what the Senator suggests.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator say he is not concerned if it shall develop that somebody went ahead and undertook this Canal venture and undertook to lay out the work and to begin the development of it without an appropriation?

Mr. ADAMS. Whether that has been done or not, it does not persuade me that we should go ahead and spend $300,000,000 additional money to build locks which are not needed, at a time when the condition of the finances of the United States is threatening us with disaster far greater than any war.

The danger to the United States today is internal and not external. Today the national defense can be more securely protected by protecting the internal finances of this land than by spending $300,000,000 in building useless locks in the Panama Canal. We speak of the debt limit; we speak of the national debt. We will see a deficit of $3,000,000,000 this year; we saw a deficit of $4,000,000,000 last year. We know there will be deficits next year. We know that the national debt will exceed the $45,000,000,000 limit. We do not know what day the credit of the United States may show impairment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I propound a question in view of the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. Probably I misinterpreted it; I hope I did. I assume from his statement that some person or persons, or some official agency, without authority, is undertaking, in part, at least, the construction or the preparation of plans for another set of locks or for an expenditure of several hundred million dollars without authority. I was about to ask the Senator whether that is the case; whether or not there is any evidence before the committee that officials of the Government have contracted obligations or incurred expenditures based upon the assumption that Congress would appropriate at this session or in the near future several hundred million dollars for the construction of additional highways across the Isthmus of Panama. I ask the Senator whether there is any evidence before the committee that that has been done, for I understood from the observation of the Senator from Connecticut that it had been done.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know, Mr. President. The word "reimbursement," which disturbs the Senator from Connecticut—I think justly—is a word which obviously has its natural meaning; and if appropriations have been expended, I shall be glad to have them reimbursed and have that much less spent on the Canal. So I am not objecting to that, even though it is founded upon a disregard of the statutes as to the appropriation of funds; but I simply have in mind the one fact that we are being crowded by unfounded apprehensions into a dangerous and, I think, a needless expenditure of $300,000,000 for an extra canal.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. It occurs to me that the Congress settled that matter a year ago when it authorized this canal. It has been authorized, and, regardless of the bookkeeping which may result in this $15,000,000 expenditure, it strikes me that that is a modest beginning on a third set of locks which Congress a year ago authorized. If it did not want the canal built, it should not have been authorized.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the argument very often presented on the floor. A bill comes up, and it is said, "This is merely an authorization. It does not involve an expenditure, and the Appropriations Committee and the Senate may subsequently consider whether they will expend the money authorized."

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield at that point, on an enormous item such as this—the construction of a third set of locks in the Panama Canal—I think Congress could not be said to have had any doubt that the money would ultimately be spent. Congress would not simply authorize the appropriation of $277,000,000 in the hope that it never would be spent; and we know that we could never build another canal or a third set of locks without an authorization in the beginning.

It is true that frequently bills in which Senators are interested pass with an authorization, and the argument is made that it is only an authorization and the money may never be appropriated; but I very much doubt if anybody had that notion in regard to the authorization for this canal.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky is one of the outstanding instances in this body of men who can learn from experience. That is, the Senator is a man who has never permitted himself to be bound by a previous error if he found he was wrong, and certainly the Congress could well follow the Senator's example. If we were wrong in deciding that we were going to build the Canal—if the last session decided that it should be built and this session decided that that decision was a mistake—certainly we should correct our mistake.

Mr. BARKLEY. Congress has not decided that it was a mistake.

Mr. ADAMS. It would decide that perhaps it was a mistake if we should refuse to appropriate the money, or we could let the authorization stand.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of all the authorizations ever made by Congress, certainly one so important and so large as this one was not made with our tongues in our cheeks and with our fingers crossed. It was, of course, understood when the authorization was made that Congress would appropriate the money as it was needed to construct the third set of locks, regardless of what may have happened as to other authorizations.

I appreciate the compliment the Senator pays to me, which I regard as a genuine compliment——

Mr. ADAMS. It is genuine.

Mr. BARKLEY. That I am not bound by any mistakes of the past. I hope I am sufficiently liberal and broad-minded that if I decide I have made a mistake I change my course.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not want the Senator to construe my remark as meaning that I think he has made many mistakes; I mean a very limited number.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have made many. I am willing to concede that I have made many, and I hope I have sometimes profited by them; but I do not think this is one of them. I voted to authorize a third set of locks because I thought they were needed. I still think they are needed, and for that reason I am going to support this appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. I am surprised.

Mr. President, I recall the first time the bill authorizing these locks came upon the floor. It was sent back to the committee. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was responsible for its being sent back, by reason of certain amendments which were offered. The next time it came up it passed while bills on the calendar were being considered by unanimous consent; and I do not have to tell Senators how much consideration frequently is given on the floor to bills which come up when measures on the calendar are being considered by unanimous consent. It may be that only the same amount of consideration will be given to this appropriation. I merely wanted to make my own position clear—that we are disregarding far greater dangers within our country in order to protect against imaginary, hypothetical, conjured-up dangers from outside.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, further replying to the inquiry raised by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], I ask permission to place in the RECORD, at this point, the language found on page 54 of the House hearings. Summarizing that language, I will state to the Senator that the words referred to are placed in the bill in order to satisfy the Comptroller General; and by referring to the page I have indicated in the House hearings, that statement will be verified.

Mr. STARNES, a member of the House committee, made this statement. After having the language interpreted, he said:

> You maintain—
>
> He was talking to Mr. SMITH—
> that it is necessary to include that language in order to meet the possible objections which the Comptroller General might raise?
> Governor RIDLEY. Yes; these provisions have been added from time to time in our regulation appropriation bill in order to meet objections of the Comptroller General in connection with the expenditures which we have to make in our regular operations.

I think the facts are clear, that the authorities have spent some money heretofore appropriated for starting this canal. They admit that they have used something like $200,000 in preparing plans. If they have used more, this language will authorize them to take money from the $15,000,000 to reimburse the fund from which money has been drawn. I think that is a fair inference, and I think the facts are as stated.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. Governor Ridley also testified, on page 54 of the House hearings, as follows:

> In other words, it is authority to do these things in connection with that particular work. Those things are necessary to have in this bill, in order to meet the Comptroller General's restrictions on the special authority to do things. You will find all these things in our regular Panama Canal Act, but since this has been separated this year into a separate item, contrary to the policy followed last year, we are just repeating that language.

The point is that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has very aptly and very properly called attention to the mounting national debt. He has very properly called attention to the fact that the $45,000,000,000 debt-limit is likely to be exceeded. He has called attention to the fact that deficit after deficit has been incurred by departments, only to have them come here and ask us to make additional appropriations each year to meet those deficits. So, Mr. President, I was directing attention to the fact that, while it is true that in August of 1939 we authorized an addition to the Panama Canal, we never appropriated the $277,000,000 then authorized. Therefore we have always meanwhile had control of whether we would or would not appropriate the $15,000,000 which we were told last August would be needed during the first year to commence the work on the canal.

Let me say to the Senator from Colorado that I grant that, if we are going to have a new canal, it is necessary to have transportation, living quarters, and all the other things which normally are provided for in the Panama Canal Act. Governor Ridley is absolutely correct about that; but when the ordinary revenue appropriated under the Panama Canal Act to these several subdivisions has been depleted because the money has been used to pave the way in anticipation of a new Panama Canal, and we are now being asked to make reimbursement, I point out that someone under the Army Civil Functions Authority anticipated that the Congress necessarily would approve the new canal. The press is replete with the story that after the President took his spring fishing trip to the Cocos Islands, when he came back only to discover that the House had stricken out this $15,000,000 item notwithstanding all the work that was being done and already had been done in the Panama Canal Zone, a very curious and a very odd situation developed. That is why we now are being asked to reimburse funds which have in part been depleted to the extent of $15,000,000, we are told, in anticipation of appropriating the $277,000,000.

That is all that is involved; and the word "reimbursement" was designedly and intentionally put in by the committee, or whoever drafted the language, in order to mean that funds which had been used are now to be restored to their original appropriation. Of course, the Comptroller General requires it. Of course, he will not approve the accounts if we do not make this reimbursement. Because I assume that we shall go forward with the additional locks, and that we shall appropriate for them, I assume that the reimbursement necessarily, as a matter of accounting and as a matter of law, should and must be made. I do, however, direct attention to the continued practice, year in and year out, of mounting deficits, of departments exceeding appropriations, and going ahead with work before the money is available, or before Congress passes on it.

That is all I have to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). The Chair calls the attention of the Senate to the fact that while Senators have been discussing the amendment on page 14, no action has been taken on the amendment on lines 24 and 25, page 13. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 14, after line 8, to insert the following:

Construction of additional facilities—Panama Canal: For construction of additional facilities for the improvement and enlargement of the capacity of the Panama Canal, in accordance with the act approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1409), including reimbursement to the appropriations "Maintenance and Operation, Panama Canal," "Sanitation, Panama Canal," and "Civil Government, Panama Canal," in such amounts as the Governor of the Panama Canal shall from time to time determine to be additional costs incurred for the objects specified in said appropriations on account of the prosecution of the work; in all, $15,000,000.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making a little clearer my attitude on the question raised by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] a while ago with respect to treachery within our own borders. The Senator made the statement that the United States is not in danger of attack. That may be true; I feel that there is a reasonable amount of accuracy in the statement. If that be true, it is because we have not let our national defenses down.

Mr. President, there may have been a time when I myself felt that if a nation attended to its own business on this earth it would have peace, and not be bothered; but if I ever held that opinion it has lately been removed from my mind. I have advocated from many platforms and in this forum the slogan, "Keep the United States out of war." I believe that is the sincere desire of every true American. But today we must add another phrase to that, "Be prepared to keep war out of the United States."

Ethiopia did not want war. The leaders of Ethiopia kept Ethiopia out of war, but they were not able to keep war out of Ethiopia.

The members of the Czechoslovakian Government kept that country out of war, but they were not able to keep war out of that nation.

China has been a peaceful nation since its beginning, which dates back to the dawn of history itself. China did not want war. China's only sin was a lack of preparation for national defense. China was not able to keep war out of her country.

Poland was an innocent country, so far as violating the rights of other nations was concerned. The charge was never made that Poland ever violated the rights of other nations. Poland's only failing was that she was not so strong as some of her military neighbors.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Has the Senator overlooked the fact that the United States has been spending more money for defense purposes than has ever been spent by any nation in peacetimes; that the nations which were supposed to be prepared have not been spending anything approaching the amount we are spending this year, and that we are spending three times as much this year as we spent 5 or 6 years ago?

Mr. LEE. The Senator may be correct in that; and knowing his studious and scholarly attitude and his regard for facts, I am inclined to take his word for it; but the result is what counts. Can the Senator also rise in his place and say that our national defense in proportion to our wealth and our population and our place in the society of nations is equally as far advanced as that of other nations and the combination of other nations which could be and would be a threat to this country? If we pay more for the same amount of defense than other nations, that is too bad, and that is another question, one into which we should inquire.

But the question in which I am interested just now, and to which I am directing my attention, is, Do we have adequate defense and do we need these additional locks on the Panama Canal? The War Department says we need them. As a matter of fact, I think we need another canal. The War Department, judging from some of the statements of the Secretary himself, has indicated that it believes that we should have an additional canal. But enlarging the locks we have there now is second choice, merely a substitute for another canal.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think the Senator is quite in error as to that.

Mr. LEE. I misused a word. Perhaps I should not have referred to enlarging the locks but have said building additional locks there.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not believe the Senator has listened to the statement of the chairman of the committee as to that. In substance, what is to be provided is a new canal over a very considerable section paralleling the Canal now there, using the same lake and the same cut, but a set of parallel locks, and a parallel canal for a very considerable distance.

Mr. LEE. Insofar as the present question is concerned, I am not interested in that. The question is exactly the same. It is whether we are going to make the Panama Canal adequate to provide a certain amount of protection against sabotage, in case there should be sabotage, which would make the present Canal unusable for the purposes of getting ships through it. There is no argument on that point.

The Senator seems secure in his thought and his feeling that sabotage and espionage possibilities are absolutely foreign to the United States. With that I do not agree. I can swell out my chest as far as anyone can when I speak the word "American." "There are no Americans over in Norway," or something to that effect, the Senator stated, "and," he continued, "the invaders were not dealing with Americans." I have just as much native pride in America as has anyone else, but, at the same time, we know that in every country some people may be found who cannot be trusted. That, however, is not exactly the point I am making. The danger comes, not from Americans, but from the infiltration of people from Germany, and people from Russia. I fully sympathize with the statement of Representative DIES, the chairman of the Dies committee, and I desire to give every encouragement and support to the work that committee is doing in tearing the mask from un-American subversive activities in this country. Personally, I think that about all we need to do is to let the light in, because, when the light is turned into the dark corners the rats disappear; they run. I am in full sympathy with that committee. I am in sympathy with the statement Mr. DIES made lately that he believes we should redefine the Monroe Doctrine and make it apply to the infiltration of enemies to our form of government, as in Mexico, where they could set up a puppet government, not by a military and open, frontal movement, but by an under-cover method. Mr. Hitler's way of working is by treachery, bribery, intrigue, and all the methods of indirection by which he can undermine what he cannot directly overthrow. I think it is as great a threat to the Government of the United States to have some Latin-American government undermined by an infiltration of those in sympathy with the Nazi and Bolshevik governments, and set up there a base for those two governments, as it would be to have them move in down there with battleships.

We need not deceive ourselves. We pride ourselves on the solidarity of the Western Hemisphere. What does that mean, boiled down? It means, from a military standpoint, the United States of America. There is not a munitions factory south of the border. I believe I am correct in the statement that there is not a shipyard in the Western Hemisphere, outside of the United States, which can build a battleship. It all boils down to the United States. If we are to enforce the Monroe Doctrine, and I think it is time that we revitalize it by letting it be known that if Mr. Hitler steps his foot on this domain he will put it in a bear trap, and he will not be dealing with an old man with an umbrella. We should redefine the Monroe Doctrine by making it apply to the underhanded methods of penetration employed by Hitler.

Mr. President, I decidedly disagree with my good friend, that great patriotic Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], in his feeling of security, his feeling that it is impossible to have sabotage in this country. I think it would be relatively an easy matter to sabotage the present Panama Canal without bringing in a German battleship, or the battleship of any other country, and exploding the whole battleship there. One man in a key place could do it. The most amazing and unparalleled treachery in all history has just happened under our very eyes, and while we listened in on the radio.

Suppose that a month ago someone had risen in Norway and said, "We should purge our country, we should look out for spies and deceitful ones in high places." He would have been laughed off the stage, just as one is today when he rises and says there is danger. We have a tendency to say, "Oh, you have been seeing too many picture shows." I am not alarmed about it, but I think there is a point where complacency ends and stupidity begins.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator referred to the fact that a German battleship might enter the Panama Canal and be exploded and do a vast amount of damage. Does not the Senator understand that a commercial ship, a passenger ship, even, or a tanker of any kind, from some neutral nation, in the regular course of business might secure passage through the Panama Canal?

Such a ship might contain a vast amount of merchandise. The merchandise might be in barrels labeled "vinegar," or some other liquid. It might be in cartons labeled "food" of some kind. It might be mislabeled. The barrels and cartons might contain high explosives. Yet to prevent that we would have to do one of two things, either close the Canal to commercial shipping or examine each particular carton. Of course that would be impossible to do. So under the present practice, either in wartime or while we are at peace, for that matter, a commercial ship or passenger ship might secure passage through the Canal, and at the most dangerous point might be exploded, in which event the Canal might be closed for an indefinite period—perhaps for months.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator, and I am sure what he has just said is true.

Pursuing the thought a little further, I wish to say that I think the Dies committee is doing a good work. They have already revealed to us that the Communists, for instance, operating through a direct connection with the Third Internationale, have set up an underground source of communication in this country. They have already planted in a number of colleges—7, I believe, in Massachusetts alone—their organizations, running from a membership of 25 to 60. They have "plants," that is 3 or 4 Communists, as they say, "developed members," which are planted in mass organizations. They get into key positions and guide operations. I am not alarmed by this. That happens, I suppose, all the time. But in days such as we are witnessing now, with half the world ablaze with war, and after having just witnessed the betrayal of a nation from within, I do not believe it is foolish for us to consider methods of turning the light on subversive activities.

Mr. President, we know that Adolf Hitler has stated that a policy of treachery would be adopted in penetrating into other countries. It is his philosophy to further his program by intrigue. It is not necessary to have all the people of a nation sympathetic to a particular form of government to enable such a program to succeed. We have the example of Norway, where only a few persons were used to further the German program, but those few persons were in key positions, and by the use of treachery and faked orders, the Germans were able to take that country almost without resistance.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, a brief editorial from the Washington, D. C., Evening Star of Wednesday, April 17, 1940, under the heading "War by Intrigue."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From Washington (D. C.) Evening Star, April 17, 1940]

WAR BY INTRIGUE

Nazi Germany's invasion of Norway, hailed at the time in Berlin as another convincing demonstration of the overwhelming power of the Reich's war machine, turns out to have been a rather shabby affair by whatever standard of decency one chooses to measure it. Norway, it now appears, did not succumb to Germany's military might, but was the victim of a campaign of intrigue which has few if any parallels in recorded history.

By the standard of results obtained—and that, after all, must be the final test in war—this latest adventure of Adolf Hitler's was an undeniable success. The principal Norwegian ports fell into German hands with hardly a struggle, and the government of King Haakon was forced to flee in confusion. As conquests go, this was an absurdly easy one, but it may well be doubted that the fighting men of the German Army can contemplate the manner of its achievement with any pride.

The true story of Norway's fall was published in the Star on Monday. That article, product of a splendid job of reporting by Leland Stowe, and since corroborated by other newspapermen, reveals that Norway, proud home of the Vikings, was literally handed over to the invaders by keymen in her own defense forces and a minority political group. Precisely how this was accomplished remains uncertain. Some of the traitorous Norwegians may have been converted to the Nazi ideology; others may have "sold out" their own country for a price.

But, to the extent that this shocking act of treachery has any direct bearing on the United States, the exact methods employed are relatively unimportant, the real significance lying in its value as a demonstration of the efficiency of the Nazi secret agents. Their accomplishment in Norway by no means indicates that they could hope for equal success in this country. Indeed, it requires a straining of the imagination to conceive even of a comparable attempt being made here, but that is beside the point.

The lesson for this Nation to learn from Norway's tragedy is that the Nazi agents are almost incredibly effective in their work, and there is a great deal that they might do to cripple this country should it become involved in war. On the basis of the demonstrated capacities of these agents, it would seem that the least any patriotic American should do is to refrain from protesting against or hampering in any way the entirely reasonable and legitimate efforts this Government now is making to safeguard the United States from subversive activities of all kinds.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I wish to add to my remarks an article which appears in today's edition of the Washington Evening Star. I call it to the attention of the Senate at this time, because it is so much in line with what I have just said.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEXICANS UNCOVER EVIDENCE OF PLOT TO FOMENT REVOLT—NAZI AND COMMUNIST AGENTS COOPERATING, SECRET POLICE SAY

MEXICO CITY, April 17.—Informed Government sources said that Mexican secret police had evidence of undercover activities of Nazi and Communist agents seeking to foment an uprising to divert American nations, particularly the United States, from any move to enter the European conflict.

They expressed confidence any such movement would be nipped at the start, however.

A spokesman for the German legation said that Germany certainly would not participate in any plot to overthrow a friendly government.

An executive of the secret police said, however, "We now have under surveillance a known Gestapo (German secret police) agent, believed to be in charge of all German espionage activity in Mexico. We have not moved against him yet because we are trying to untangle the web of which he appears to be the center."

This executive expressed belief that at least 100 Nazi agents and Mexican employees were working under orders of this key leader and that a number of skilled Communist operatives were collaborating.

Informed sources also said that Mexican troops were reliably reported to be patroling various sectors, including the Rio Grande, to prevent arms smuggling by various anti-Government political factions.

Mr. President, I wish to pursue a little further the thought on which I have been speaking, that is, that we are desirous of protecting American peace both from military attack, and from the attack of the insidious foe who would undermine what he cannot overthrow.

Because we are interested in peace, I believe we should be interested in the methods by which modern dictators attack nations. I believe a nation forewarned should be prepared. One of the Members of this body just called my attention to the following article, which appeared this morning in the Times-Herald:

"CONQUEST BY TREASON" WAS PREDICTED BY HITLER

H. V. Kaltenborn, broadcasting over N. B. C. last night his comment on the manner of Germany's seizure of Norway, called attention to Hitler's advance notice of how he would go about taking over neighboring nations through treason within.

He quoted from page 13 of the German-language edition of Hermann Rauschning's book, The Voice of Destruction, detailing his conversations with Hitler. Herr Rauschning declared the Fuehrer said to him:

"My declaration of war will consist in the sudden appearance of my troops in the capital of the enemy with which I am still at peace. They will wear the proper uniforms. They will march through the streets in bright daylight; no one will stop them. Everything has been prepared down to the smallest detail.

"They will march to the general staff headquarters; they will occupy the ministries and the parliament, and in a few minutes the leaders will have been removed. The army will be without its general staff. All political leaders will have been liquidated.

"There will be endless confusion, but for a long time I will have had contact with those men who will direct the new government, a government that suits my purpose. We can always find such men. We can find them in every country. We don't even have to buy them. They will come to us of their own accord. Pride, confused thinking, political animosity and egotism are their chief motives.

"We will have peace, and before that we will have war. I can guarantee the impossible is always possible."

Mr. President, in this regard I think there is a line of demarcation between a political party which advocates changing our form of government by extra-legal means and those political parties which advocate changes within the four walls of the Constitution, or by peaceful and legal means.

Thus, Herr von Quisling, who was set up as head of the puppet government in Norway, I suppose occupies about the same position there as does Fritz Kuhn, the head of the German-American Bund in this country. I suppose if it should happen that Herr Hitler were to move in on the Government of the United States he would have in mind to make Fritz Kuhn the head of the puppet government in this country, and I suppose that is the purpose for which he has organized the German-American Bund, and trained and drilled its members. I suppose the same thing is true with respect to communism in this country. No doubt the same purpose exists for organizing the Communist Party in America. Today it is an underground organization, with ramifications throughout the entire country. It is an organization which advocates the overthrow or change of our form of government, not by the methods prescribed by the Constitution, but by extra-legal methods, to use their own language.

Therefore, Mr. President, I insist that we safeguard our peace, not only by military preparedness, to which I subscribe and which I shall support, but also by turning the light into the dark corners and exposing subversive, un-American activities which have no other purpose than the destruction of democracy in the United States, and the establishment of some other form of government. I do not believe we owe such persons a job. I think every Communist who is on the pay roll of the United States Government, and every other person whose allegiance is to some other flag, should be discharged. I think we are tolerant enough to such persons when we allow them to live in the United States and to enjoy its freedom.

Mr. President, yesterday I attended the opening ball game in Washington, and I enjoyed it. I saw our President at the game, mingling with the citizens of this country. He was happy and they were happy. When I witnessed that scene I thought what a privilege it is to live in a great land of freedom, where the Chief Executive is permitted to enjoy that privilege of freedom. I contrasted our situation with that of the nations of Europe.

There the chief executive in such circumstances would have been surrounded by a great military force. There would not have been that free exchange of happiness that we have in this country. We must keep this country free in order that we may continue to be happy.

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. We must not go to sleep. I am not alarmed—far from it. On the other hand, when we see such things as are happening now, things which we do not read out of a book of mythology, but which are actually happening today, I think it is time for us to awake to the insidious methods of overthrowing governments which are being employed today.

A revolution could be started in a Latin-American country, I suppose, for about a million dollars, and then some dictator nation by giving aid to one side or the other could there establish a foothold. I have just read an article to the Senate which pointed out that such a thing is being attempted in Mexico now.

Mr. President, I think this is a good time for us to redefine the Monroe Doctrine and let it apply to infiltration and insidious methods of gaining a foothold in the Western Hemisphere. I think that is entirely appropriate at this time while we are considering means to strengthen our military fortifications.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 14, lines 9 to 19.

The Chair agreed to recognize the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Ellender	La Follette	Sheppard
Austin	Frazier	Lee	Shipstead
Bailey	George	Lodge	Slattery
Bankhead	Gerry	Lucas	Smathers
Barbour	Gibson	Lundeen	Stewart
Barkley	Gillette	McCarran	Taft
Bone	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Green	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Gurney	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hale	Mead	Tobey
Byrnes	Harrison	Minton	Townsend
Capper	Hatch	Murray	Truman
Caraway	Hayden	Neely	Tydings
Chandler	Herring	Norris	Vandenberg
Chavez	Hill	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Holman	Overton	Wagner
Connally	Holt	Pepper	Walsh
Danaher	Hughes	Reed	Wheeler
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Russell	White
Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was not seeking recognition. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum to accommodate the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who, I am told, desires to speak on this subject. He is not present. I do not desire recognition.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I think an error has crept into the proceedings. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] desired to confine his remarks to an amendment which will be offered by the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 14, after line 8. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 14, before the word "to", to strike out "$30,098,771" and insert "$44,248,771", so as to read:

Total, Panama Canal, $44,248,771, to be available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 20, to strike out:

SEC. 2. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used directly or indirectly after January 1, 1941, for the payment of any civilian for services rendered by them on the Canal Zone while occupying a skilled, technical, clerical, administrative, or supervisory position unless such person is a citizen of the United States of America.

And insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 2. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used directly or indirectly after May 1, 1941, except for temporary employment in case of emergency, for the payment of any civilian for services rendered by him on the Canal Zone while occupying a skilled, technical, clerical, administrative, executive, or supervisory position unless such person is a citizen of the United States of America or of the Republic of Panama: Provided, however, (1) That at no time shall the number of Panamanian citizens employed in the above-mentioned positions exceed the number of citizens of the United States so employed, if United States citizens are available in continental United States or on the Canal Zone; (2) that nothing in this act shall prohibit the continued employment of any person who shall have rendered 15 or more years of faithful and honorable service on the Canal Zone; (3) that in the selection of personnel for skilled, technical, administrative, clerical, supervisory, or executive positions, the controlling factors in filling these positions shall be efficiency, experience, training, and education; (4) that all citizens of Panama and the United States rendering skilled, technical, clerical, administrative, executive, or supervisory service on the Canal Zone under the terms of this act shall (a) normally be employed not more than 40 hours per week, (b) shall receive as compensation equal rates of pay based upon rates paid for similar employment in continental United States plus 25 percent.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] desires to make some observations on section 2. I see he is now present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the Secretary of War concerning the provisions of section 2, and I ask that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 12, 1940.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: My attention has been called to the amendment of section 2 of the War Department civil-functions appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1941 (H. R. 8668) by the Senate Committee on Appropriations in Report No. 1397, and to the additional amendment to section 2, which Senator MCCARRAN intends to propose on the Senate floor.

Section 2 of the bill as reported by the committee would prevent the employment on the Canal Zone of all persons other than citizens of the United States or of the Republic of Panama, in skilled, technical, clerical, administrative, executive, and supervisory positions, except for temporary employment in emergencies, with a proviso which would authorize the continued employment of persons who shall have rendered 15 or more years of faithful and honorable service on the Canal Zone.

The proposed legislation would add greatly to the costs of maintaining, operating, improving, and defending the Canal without securing commensurate advantages. Owing to the high costs of recruiting, transporting, and maintaining American citizens for work in the Canal Zone, the additional costs that would have to be incurred under this legislation would be more than sufficient to employ an equal number at good wages in our own country, where none of the unfavorable climatic and other adverse conditions that prevail in the Canal Zone would be encountered.

The additional costs of replacing a large number of employees are well set forth in a detailed analysis made in 1935 by the Panama Canal to determine the cost of replacing a specified group of native tropical workers with Americans. The analysis dealt with a proposal to employ 3,144 additional Americans. It showed that the capital expenditure necessary to provide the requisite housing, hospital, school, and municipal facilities would amount to $26,525,000, or, in round figures, $8,400 per new American employee, and that the continuing annual cost thereafter would be approximately $5,350,000. This estimate is conservative.

The amounts included for the Panama Canal in the War Department civil-functions appropriation bill do not cover these additional costs. In order to provide the housing and other necessary facilities by May 1, 1941, the date section 2 of the bill would become effective, it would be necessary to begin their construction as soon as practicable and to prosecute it vigorously. While an expenditure of $25,000,000 or more would be required eventually, at least $10,000,000 should be included in the pending appropriation for the Panama Canal for the construction of such part of the necessary quarters and other facilities as it is reasonably practicable to provide by May 1, 1941. An increase of $1,000,000 should also be included to cover the increased operating costs during the last 2 months of the fiscal year 1941. The funds required for carrying the construction of the necessary housing and facilities to completion and for meeting the increased costs of operation can be submitted in the regular estimates for 1942 and subsequent fiscal years, but the initial appropriation for beginning the work should be provided in the pending bill.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Senator MCCARRAN, which constitutes new legislation not necessary for the purposes of the appropriation measure, would extend these uneconomical and undesirable effects to the Panama Railroad and would jeopardize the sound economic status of that self-sustaining corporation.

I believe it would be preferable to defer this legislation for very careful consideration of all its effects; but if it is to be enacted now, the appropriation should be increased as suggested conservatively above.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING,
Secretary of War.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I think I should make a brief statement before the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] makes his observations.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will permit me, I know nothing about this matter except what is contained in the letter of the Secretary of War. I am not certain whether the letter of the Secretary is to be construed as opposing the Senate committee amendment with respect to the Panama Canal proper or whether it is to be regarded as fundamentally opposed to the entire proposal. I am simply suggesting that if the committee amendment is adopted, we should increase the appropriation by $11,000,000 so as to provide for the additional cost. I have talked with the Secretary of War since I received the letter, and I explained to him the difference between the House provision and the amendment of the Senate committee, which he already understood. Regardless of the action of the Senate in this matter, it is the view of the Secretary of War—and I suppose it is beyond question that he is correct about it—that if this amendment is agreed to it will ultimately require an additional $26,000,000 cost, ten or eleven million dollars of which he thinks ought to be included in this bill. The House bill, as I understand, prohibited absolutely the employment of anybody on the Canal Zone except citizens of the United States; and that provision is a violation of our treaty with the Panama Republic.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is hardly correct, for the prohibition related to employees in the higher brackets.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, to those in the higher brackets. I do not mean the cheaper labor—what are called the silver employees. I believe there is a difference between them.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The House provision applied to all the "gold" employees.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are "silver" and "gold" employees, the silver employees being those who are paid in silver, the result of which is about a 50-percent payment as compared to those who are paid in gold, and the "silver" employees encompass the lower brackets of employees on the Panama Canal. The Senate committee has tried to work out an amendment that would not be in violation of the treaty between our country and Panama. Undoubtedly the House provision would cost more than the Senate amendment, if I am correctly informed.

The Senator from Oklahoma, I am sure, is in possession of all the facts, and I should like to have him comment on the effect, based on his information and the hearings before the committee, as well as the Secretary's letter, of the provision of the amendment of the committee pertaining only to the Panama Canal proper, and also differentiating between that and the extension of this provision to the Panama Railroad, which is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, which receives no subsidy, as I understand, from the Government, and which operates not only the railroad on the Panama Canal Zone but also operates the ships that ply between the United States and the Canal Zone.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, section 2 as contained in the House bill, and likewise section 2 embodied in the amendment suggested by the committee amendment, have to do with the Canal Zone. The Canal Zone is a narrow strip of land across the Isthmus of Panama. The United States acquired it by lease and not by purchase. As I recall, the lease is for 99 years, which makes the Canal Zone, in effect, American territory. For many years we have been expending large sums of money in the Panama Canal Zone. During these years a controversy has arisen between American labor and the labor working on the Canal Zone. Because the Canal is in a tropical climate and because at the inception of the work of the construction of the Canal it was necessary to obtain labor that could withstand that climate, a great number of residents of tropical countries were employed. They came from the Republic of Panama, from the West Indies, and other contiguous countries, and as a result a good number of those men are still located at Colon and at Panama City, and they work on the Canal Zone.

Because of this labor controversy, because American labor is demanding that they be given the good jobs in Panama, the jobs in the higher brackets, the so-called skilled positions, and because the authorities in Panama have refused to discharge Panamanians and those from the West Indies who are not American citizens, but who are trained, faithful employees, skilled, in a way, whose labor has been satisfactory on the Canal Zone, this amendment was brought before the House.

The House amendment provides that all these positions shall be available only to American citizens, and, if the House provision should obtain and should be incorporated into the law, then, after a certain day—that is, when the bill becomes operative—no funds from this appropriation would be available for the payment of certain salaries, the result of which would be, in effect, to discharge the Panamanians and Dominicans and other West Indian labor that now have jobs on the Canal in the higher brackets.

A few years ago—I do not have the exact date—the United States and the Republic of Panama entered into a treaty covering a great number of instances and circumstances and points in controversy. In the ratification of that treaty, and preliminary to its ratification, a number of notes were exchanged. On March 2, 1936, our Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, sent a note to the members of the Panamanian Treaty Commission, and, as the note is very brief, I ask that the entire note, as found on page 56 of the publication known as Treaty Series No. 945, be included in the RECORD in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 2, 1936.

SIRS: With reference to the representations made by you during the negotiation of the treaty signed today regarding Panamanian citizens employed by the Panama Canal or by the Panama Railroad Co., I have the honor to state that the Government of the United States of America, in recognition of the special relationship between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama with respect to the Panama Canal and the Panama Railroad Co., maintains, and will maintain as its public policy, the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment set down in the order of December 23, 1908, of the Secretary of War, and in the Executive orders of February 2, 1914, and February 20, 1920, and will favor the maintenance, enforcement, or enactment of such provisions, consistent with the efficient operation and maintenance of the Canal and its auxiliary works and their effective protection and sanitation, as will assure to Panamanian citizens employed by the Canal or the railroad equality of treatment with employees who are citizens of the United States of America.

Accept, sirs, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

CORDELL HULL.

The Honorable Doctor RICARDO J. ALFARO,
The Honorable Doctor NARCISO GARAY,
Members of the Panamanian Treaty Commission,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This note states that the United States "maintains and will maintain as its public policy the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment set down in the order of December 23, 1908, of the Secretary of War, in Executive orders of February 2, 1914, and February 20, 1920."

Those orders are to the same effect, that in our relations with Panama with regard to work on the Panama Canal the United States "maintains and will continue to maintain as its public policy the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment."

In order that the RECORD may be more complete, I ask unanimous consent that, in connection with my statement, the orders of the Secretary of War and of the President found on page 7 of the Senate committee report be placed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The orders referred to are as follows:

The order of the Acting Secretary of War dated December 23, 1908, which gave to citizens of Panama the opportunity for employment in the skilled positions, stated as follows:

"On and after this date, the employment by the Isthmian Canal Commission of skilled laborers, clerks, and all others who have heretofore been known as gold employees of the Commission shall be restricted to American citizens and citizens of Panama * * *."

This policy was extended and amended as follows in an Executive order dated February 2, 1914, which stated:

"All employees who receive over $75 per month or over 40 cents per hour must be citizens of the United States or the Republic of Panama, and such citizens will be given preference for employment in all grades. * * *"

Similarly, the Executive order of February 20, 1920, provided that—

"All employees who receive compensation at the rate of more than $960 a year or 40 cents an hour, must be citizens of the United States or the Republic of Panama, and such citizens will be given preference for employment in all grades." The above-quoted order and Executive orders provided Panamanians the desired equality of opportunity for employment and treatment in employment in skilled positions from 1908 to March 2, 1936, when, as previously stated, we undertook a commitment in an exchange of notes attached to the new general treaty to continue this opportunity.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the House provision should finally be incorporated into this bill, it is contended by many that such a provision would be a violation of the treaty between the United States and the Panama Republic, and that at this particular time the breaking by us of a treaty to which we are a party would not be for the best interest of our own Republic. At a time when strong and powerful nations are attacking weaker nations and conquering them at will, it is not thought advisable that we should countenance, much less suggest, that the United States should break one of its treaties, even though it be with a weak nation, not singling out the Panama Republic, although it is well known that the Republic of Panama is not a strong nation financially and has practically no defense of its own. In South America and Central America there are many nations that have practically no defense whatever. I think Nicaragua has an army of less than 500; I think Costa Rica has an army of only a few hundred; and none of the Central American republics have armies of any considerable size, and such small armies as they have are poorly equipped; they are not uniformed very well and are not adequately supplied with guns and ammunition. So it is recommended by the Senate committee that the breaking of this treaty with the Panamanian Republic be not countenanced.

In the committee the question was discussed at some length, and numerous suggestions were made as to how we could do full justice to the American taxpayers and American labor, at the same time do full justice to the Panamanians, and at the same time not break or void this treaty. The suggestions which were submitted to the committee were sent to the Secretary of State or to the State Department, and after a few days' consideration the State Department sent back the text as it is found in the Senate committee amendment. So the recommendation of the committee is that section 2 in the form in which it appears in the bill as reported to the Senate be substituted for section 2 of the House bill, for the reason, first, that the House section would violate the treaty, and we think section 2 as embodied in the Senate amendment would not violate the treaty and would afford to organized American labor practically all it demands.

The Senate committee is in entire sympathy with the demands made by those who are sponsoring section 2 as embodied in the Senate amendment, and likewise section 2 as embraced in the House amendment; but, for the reasons stated, the Senate committee is not willing to recommend the adoption of section 2 as found in the House bill, but is recommending the substitution of section 2 as found in the committee report.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I fully appreciate, as the Senator knows, not only in regard to this bill but in regard to previous measures pertaining to the Panama Canal, the desire of Americans to be employed there in preference to citizens of other nations when American labor is available and desires to go down to the Canal Zone for employment. Of course, we are under no particular obligation to the citizens of any other country outside of Panama; and I can very well understand the reasons for not desiring, not only at this time but at any time, to violate the treaty between the United States and Panama. We obtained that strip of territory, 10 miles wide, from the Republic of Panama under circumstances that certainly were to the advantage of the United States, and the subsequent agreements which have been entered into between our country and Panama ought to be kept under all circumstances.

The point of this matter is, it seems that the Secretary of War is considerably concerned about the increased cost, and also whether the increased cost ought to be taken care of in this bill. He recommends an increase of $11,000,000 in this bill for the additional cost of going down there and building housing facilities which will have to be constructed if the American citizens who may be available for work there are sent down to the Canal Zone. All the buildings in the Canal Zone, as the Senator knows, belong to the United States. There is no such thing as private ownership of property within the Canal Zone. All these housing facilities are owned by the Government. What is the Senator's suggestion with respect to the additional appropriation needed if this amendment is adopted, even in the form in which it has been reported by the Senate committee?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The testimony before the Senate committee showed that some of our workers who go to Panama, and get jobs, find housing facilities on the east coast at Colon and adjacent points, and on the west coast at Panama City and adjacent points. No facilities are available on the Zone proper at the present time for housing additional workers. If any such facilities are available, they are inconsequential.

So, if this amendment should be agreed to, and labor should take the chance of going to Panama to get jobs, and if they secured positions, they would have to put up with the accommodations they could find there at that time. The United States, by adopting this provision, does not thereby agree to build mansions, or even any other sort of housing, for the additional laborers who may go down there. Of course, we presume they will be provided with suitable and satisfactory living quarters; but this section does not require us to build housing establishments to take care of the increase.

I take it that no laboring man would go to Panama unless he had his housing facilities taken care of in advance. He would not go down there now, not knowing whether or not there is any place in which he might live. But we have agencies of the Government and agencies of the American Federation of Labor, for example, which are fully advised as to the housing conditions; and I am sure no laboring man would be required to go to Panama unless he could be advised in advance and unless he were advised in advance of the housing he could expect. Laboring men would not have to take their families in the first instance; and, of course, a single man could much more easily find accommodations than could a man with a family.

There are three bills in which to deal with this subject. This is the first one, the bill dealing with the civil functions of the War Department. The second is the regular Military Establishment bill, which will come along later on. The third is the Navy Department bill. Each of these three bills will carry funds for the employment of labor. It is my understanding and my judgment that each of these three bills should carry exactly the same provision with regard to this identical question; so whatever is agreed to in this bill will probably be the model to be carried in the Navy bill and to be carried in the regular War Department bill. After we have agreed, if we shall, upon a section, we can then agree as to the housing necessities; and after the section is agreed to, and we see what ought to be done in good conscience to take care of the additional American citizens who may go to Panama, then in some deficiency bill which will come along hereafter, if it is desired, we may include an item to take care of housing, if we shall have agreed upon a uniform section.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. May I ask the Senator a question? The Senator has stated that no housing facilities are now available for an increased number of Americans who might go from this country to the Panama Canal Zone. Inasmuch as we are starting the construction of a third set of locks, costing some $277,000,000, I assume that the demand by American citizens for positions in the Panama Canal Zone will probably be greater than it has been for some time, due to our own unemployment situation. While there may not be any houses available, I understand that there is, within the Canal Zone, territory which is available for the construction of additional houses, if necessary.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. So it may be necessary, although there is no moral or legal obligation on the part of the Government, to build additional houses. I think experience there has shown that it turns out to be necessary to do it, because inasmuch as the Government is furnishing the housing facilities for most of those who are now employed there, especially American citizens, probably it would be required to do the same thing for any others who might go there.

I realize that until this matter goes to conference and it is determined how the language will be worked out it is difficult to know exactly the amount that will be required.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. With the Senator's permission, I will read one answer by Governor Ridley upon this particular point. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] asked him as to the number of American citizens now employed in Panama. I will read both the question of the Senator from Arizona and the reply of Governor Ridley:

Senator HAYDEN. The point I want to make, though, is this: In your present administration do you employ American citizens in skilled, technical, clerical, administrative, and supervisory positions? Are all those positions occupied by Americans?

Governor RIDLEY. No; but, as I said, we cannot tell which ones there are, or how many, until we make a detailed survey to see how this law affects them. The proponents of the bill have stated that we are employing from 3,500 to 5,000. We cannot tell how many there are until we make this survey. It is impossible to say.

Apparently the authorities there do not know at this time just how many American citizens are employed in the Panama Canal Zone work; and until this section is agreed to, until they have a survey, and until they consider the condition of housing there now, they will not be able to say how much it will cost to provide facilities to take care of the increase.

Mr. BARKLEY. One further question: This amendment provides, practically, that the number of employees in the higher brackets shall be equally divided between the United States and the Panama Republic; that is, it provides that the number of Panamanians shall not be greater than the number of American citizens.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I should like to make a statement at that point, if I may. This section does not provide that Panamanians shall have half of the better jobs. It does provide that not to exceed one-half of all the employees of the Panama Canal Zone shall be Panamanians. The inference is that most, if not all, of the good jobs shall be given to Americans.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. And that the other jobs—the real labor jobs—shall be available to Panamanians.

Mr. BARKLEY. But if it should turn out, after making a survey, that the Panamanians do hold practically half of the jobs, then the only persons who would be discharged would be citizens of other countries than the United States and the Panama Republic; and the Senator does not know how many those would be.

I gather from the Senator's remarks that he would not be willing to offer or to accept an amendment to the bill providing the sum of $11,000,000 suggested by the Secretary of War as necessary even under the language of the Senate committee amendment. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it is my belief that the Secretary of War was arguing against section 2 as it is in the House bill, and that he was not arguing against the section as the committee recommends it. I myself should not be willing to include in this bill any money for housing purposes until after we have agreed upon a section, and until after the responsible authority makes some definite recommendation on the section that will be agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be very glad now to yield to the Senator from South Carolina, who has charge of the Navy bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. One other question at that point.

The letter of the Secretary of War refers to the Panama Railroad. I do not see in the amendment, as reported by the Senate committee, anything pertaining to the Panama Railroad; and that probably is an amendment in contemplation by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

While I am on my feet, what is the Senator's reaction to the proposal of an amendment making the same provision apply to the Panama Railroad, which operates ships between New York and Norfolk and other points in the United States and the Panama Canal Zone?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there are at least four organizations in the Panama Canal Zone. One is the Canal Zone Authority proper. That is under the Governor of the Panama Canal. Then there is the War Department, another separate institution. Then there is the Panama Railroad, another institution. Then there is the Navy Department. I think no two of these departments have the same rules and regulations relating to their labor.

It is my judgment that American labor should be treated equally, and if there are American laborers working for the railroad, American laborers working for the Navy, American workers working for the Canal Zone authorities, or working for the War Department, they should have equal treatment. So far as I am concerned, I shall support amendments which will give the railroad workers and the Navy workers and the War Department workers and the Canal Zone workers exactly the same treatment. If amendments are offered, so far as I am concerned, not as chairman of the committee, but for myself personally, I shall vote to give them equal treatment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I realize the impossibility of securing an additional appropriation in this bill against the opposition of the committee, but would it be possible to make the necessary provision in a deficiency bill if the final conference on the three bills referred to by the Senator should make necessary additional appropriations, in order to make up the difference between what is paid American labor and what is paid the labor of other countries in the Panama Canal Zone, including the civil functions provided for in the regular War Department appropriations, the Navy appropriations, and the others even including those for the Panama railroad, which draws no subsidy from the Government, which is a private corporation organized under the laws of New York, the Government owning all the stock except one share? I appreciate the force of the Senator's suggestion that it would require more of an appropriation to make up the difference between the receipts of the Panama Railroad and the amount expended by it, but would it be feasible to include such an increase for all these services in the deficiency bill which will come in later, if it is found to be necessary?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the deficiency bill will be under the jurisdiction of a subcommittee presided over by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], and I could not speak for that subcommittee. But if it is found necessary, in the discharge of our obligations to our own citizens in Panama, to provide money for housing purposes, speaking for myself alone, I should vote for that kind of an item, not now, but in connection with a deficiency bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the letter of the Secretary of War concludes with the request that Congress defer this legislation for careful consideration of all its possible effects. The Committee on Appropriations has given most careful consideration to the matter, and I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that it would be unnecessary and unwise to attempt to include an appropriation for this subject in the pending bill, because since I rose to ask the Senator to yield to me it has been developed that in the Navy appropriation bill, which is to follow, the same language is included, and it is the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Appropriations that whatever language is determined upon by the Senate in connection with the pending bill should be included in the other bills seeking to effect the same remedy.

The letter of the Secretary of War indicates to my mind that he has not been able to give to this matter the consideration which it deserves, and which he appreciates it would require. In the very nature of things the Senator from Oklahoma cannot tell, nor could I, as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Naval Appropriations, how many employees would be affected. For instance, the Secretary asks that an appropriation of a million dollars be included to provide increased compensation to employees from May 1. It is impossible at this time to tell how many American workers would take advantage of the opportunity to go to Panama to accept this employment. It would be impossible for us to tell that until sometime next year, and in the deficiency bill then that could be provided for.

As to the housing proposal, it was our thought in the Committee on Appropriations that we should give very careful consideration to the question of having some other organization of the Government, such as the United States Housing Administration, provide such quarters as might be necessary. Instead of having the Army provide quarters of some kind and the Navy provide quarters of some kind and the Panama Canal Railroad provide different quarters, we felt that a policy should be determined upon and the rentals be fixed, and that the matter should be handled in a businesslike way, which could be done only by the committee taking it up and considering it as a whole. It will have to be looked into, but I think that from the standpoint of housing it would not be wise to provide for the matter in connection with the pending bill, before the legislation has ever been agreed upon. The conferees might not agree to it hereafter, and we can well await the adoption of the language by Congress, and then have a hearing, and determine how the housing shall be provided, and how much shall be invested in it.

On the other question, it is argued by the representatives of labor, with considerable conviction to my mind, that the American skilled worker will be able to do a great deal more work in the same time than the Panamanian worker. If that be true, it would be worth while investigating for how many it would be necessary to provide, whether the guess of the Secretary of War is correct, that a million dollars would be necessary for 2 months. That matter has not been gone into. It has been argued to the committee, and argued by the Senator from Nevada, I think, and his statement certainly impressed me, that in considering the cost we must not forget that if we transport to Panama American workers who are out of jobs in the United States to take jobs there it would be essential to provide them with W. P. A. employment here if they were out of jobs.

I hope the Senator will not agree to accept an amendment at this time, but will wait until the legislation is adopted by the Congress, and let us devise a plan then for the Navy, the Army, and the Panama Railroad.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, the testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs has demonstrated that American labor would produce twice, and possibly two and a half times as much, what would be produced by native labor from the adjoining islands. Consequently, when it comes to the question of transporting laborers we would be transporting one American citizen from here to the Canal, and if we used the labor from the adjacent islands as against him we would be transporting and bringing back two and a half times as many.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, what I am concerned about is not that we may employ too many Americans. I am very sympathetic with the suggestion that any American laborer who wants to go to Panama should be given a chance to be employed there and at proper wages. I am somewhat concerned about the possibility of luring American workmen to the Canal Zone and then, when they get there, have them find that there are not sufficient housing facilities to take care of them. We all know how drowning men grab at straws, and with the conditions now existing, with the number of men unemployed, there is a certain fascination and allurement in the idea of building more locks in the Panama Canal, with the possibility of a great many people rushing down there to get jobs and finding when they get there that the housing facilities are not adequate.

I think we should keep in mind the necessity for providing for these things, not only providing adequate compensation but not having any new employees go there and be compelled to live under conditions which are not on a level with those of the laborers who are there now and who have been there for a number of years.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, as I understand, the situation with reference to the possible employment of American skilled labor is that the Army will contact committees of the American Federation of Labor, particularly of the skilled branches, and they in turn will make available labor for the Canal Zone to the extent to which it does not now exist. The labor unions are not going to send their men there unless they have ascertained previously that it will not be a wild-goose chase.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as I understand, no persons go to the Zone now unless they first fill out applications and have them approved by the authorities. Furthermore, it seems to me very unlikely that persons would be in a position to make the long and expensive trip to Panama unless they were assured of employment. I think we need not be apprehensive that there will be any great influx of unemployed American citizens into the Panama Canal Zone unless they are certain of employment after they reach there.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on this point I think I should state that all the authorities in Panama are against the House provision, and also against the Senate committee substitute. The Canal government, the railroad authorities, the Navy Department, and the War Department, each expressed opposition to the House provision, and I am sure their opposition would go to the Senate committee substitute. It is my own interpretation, not speaking for the committee, that the excessive and additional expenses of transportation and housing, running into millions, are used by some of the witnesses as an argument against the section, rather than as an appeal for funds in the event the section is agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma for information, one further question regarding the language at the end of section 2. Is this proposal for a 25-percent increase in pay differential a new factor that is introduced into the situation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No, Mr. President; it is in existence now, and has been for a long time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 17, beginning with line 21.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 218) to provide for the quartering, in certain public buildings in the District of Columbia, of troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6039) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels, to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3800) to amend section 8 (e) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JONES of Texas, Mr. FULMER, Mr. DOXEY, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. KINZER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message requested the Senate to return to the House the bill (S. 2661) to create a board of inspectors, Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, at Miami, Fla., together with the accompanying message.

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8668) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCARRAN. At this time I ask to have stated an amendment with respect to which there must be a suspension of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the committee amendment, on page 18, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

(5) this entire section shall apply only to persons employed in skilled, technical, clerical, administrative, executive, or supervisory positions on the Canal Zone directly or indirectly by any branch of the United States Government or by any corporation or company whose stock is owned wholly or in part by the United States Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It seems to the Chair that the Senator's amendment conflicts with the committee amendment which has just been agreed to, and that it would be necessary to have the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to reconsidered.

Mr. McCARRAN. My amendment, which was just read at the desk, is a part of the amendment offered in the committee, and I think I am at liberty to say that the language of my amendment would have been adopted by the committee together with the remainder of the amendment had it not been considered to be legislation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada was agreed to by the committee, and he is authorized by the committee to offer the amendment to the committee amendment on behalf of the committee. But because it does contain legislation it could not be reported by the committee. It had to be offered by the Senator and voted upon on the floor. Unless some Senator makes a point of order, there is no occasion for suspension of the rules, but in the event a point of order is made we must admit it is legislation, in which event proper notice has been served for suspension of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment dealing with section 2, beginning with line 21, page 16, was agreed to is reconsidered. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to the committee amendment is agreed to, and without objection, the committee amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On behalf of the committee I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill under the caption "Construction of additional facilities—Panama Canal", and insert the following:

and, in addition, the Governor of the Panama Canal may, when authorized by the Secretary of War, make or authorize the making of contracts prior to July 1, 1941, for or on account of the construction of such additional facilities, to an amount not in excess of $99,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I desire to offer another amendment. This amendment is the one in which the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is interested. If he can be reached, he may want to discuss the amendment in the event it is objected to on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, line 9, after "Chief of Engineers", is is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That the local flood-protection works at Hartford and East Hartford, Conn., and Springfield, West Springfield, Chicopee, Holyoke, and Northampton, Mass., authorized by the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938, shall be constructed in accordance with the revised plans and cost estimates described in House Document No. 653, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I wish to offer a correction, with the approval of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The amendment, as offered, is proposed to be inserted on page 9, line 9. I think that ought to be changed to read, "at the appropriate place in the bill."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the change suggested by the Senator from Connecticut will be made, and without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on my own motion I offered an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, under the caption, "Flood control, general," it is proposed to insert the following:

"Provided further, That the additional sum of $28,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for continuing construction of the comprehensive plan for flood control and other purposes in the Arkansas River Basin as authorized in the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938: Provided further, That the additional sum of $13,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for continuing construction of the comprehensive plan for flood control and other purposes in the White River Basin as authorized in the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I think I should present a brief statement in support of this amendment.

In 1938, the Congress passed what is known as the comprehensive plan for the control of floods, with special reference to the Mississippi River, the Missouri River, and their tributaries. In that act a limitation of $21,000,000 was placed upon the construction of flood-control works on the Arkansas River, and of $25,000,000 on the White River. These two rivers furnish much of the flood water which eventually reaches the Mississippi River.

The Board of Army Engineers have initiated projects which are now under construction, and which will exhaust the money which has been appropriated. It is not proposed by this amendment to authorize any new construction. It is proposed only to raise the ceiling so that in the future the Board of Engineers may formulate a program and ask Congress to appropriate money for special purposes already authorized.

This bill carries no money for such purpose, and none will be asked in this Congress. If next year the Board should ask for certain flood-control works on the White River in Arkansas, extending into Missouri, and on the Arkansas River, extending through Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Kansas into Colorado, the Congress could then consider such requests.

I have had handed me today a statement of flood waters in the Arkansas River Valley. The Weather Bureau, as of this date, reports as follows:

April 17: Heavy rains occurred in Oklahoma and Kansas yesterday and are continuing today. The disturbance consisted mainly of local thunderstorms, but in certain localities the precipitation was very heavy. In the Neosho River basin, approximately halfway between Wichita, Kans., and Kansas City, eight inches were reported, which will no doubt cause flooding on the lower Neosho River.

Mr. President, the Neosho River flows into the Arkansas, and, of course, eventually that flood will reach the Arkansas River. It is intended to give the Board of Engineers the power and the opportunity of recommending next year to the Congress such projects as they think should be started next year. When, and if recommendations come in, it will be within the province of the Congress to say whether or not money shall be made available.

So this amendment does not authorize any new construction. It only raises the ceiling, and if the ceiling should be raised, the Congress would have the opportunity of making appropriations in the event such appropriations were recommended.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I merely wish to make the statement that in the committee I opposed this amendment, as well as the amendments offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY]. I was absent from the Chamber and unable to make the point of order against the other two amendments. They have been considered by the Senate and agreed to. Therefore, I see no reason why the Senator from Oklahoma or any other Senator should not offer an amendment providing for an authorization project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, earlier in the day the Senate adopted an amendment affecting the Sacramento River in California. There is a Budget estimate covering the amendment adopted, but in order to make the money available in the proper manner it is necessary slightly to change existing law.

On behalf of the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I offer such an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] on behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 5, after "$600,000", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Flood control, Sacramento River, Calif.: There is hereby authorized, for the completion of Sacramento River flood-control works heretofore authorized, the additional sum of $1,844,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on my own motion I desire to offer an amendment, unless some other Member desires to submit an amendment in his own behalf, in which event I shall yield the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the appropriate place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That funds appropriated herein may be used for flood-control work on Autauga Creek at Prattville, Ala., in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers and subject to the conditions set forth in House Document No. 657, Seventy-Sixth Congress, third session.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, this appropriation is authorized under the rules, the authorization bill having been considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce, and the bill having been passed by the Senate. The amendment would simply make it possible for the engineers, within the amount of money carried in the appropriation bill for flood control—some $70,000,000—to do the work on this particular project, the project being a flood-control project in the little city of Prattville, Ala.

Autauga Creek runs through that city. There are today some levees on that creek. During recent years—more particularly during 1938, and again in August 1939—there have been terrible floods on that creek. The engineers tell us that this work must be done to prevent such floods.

The work consists of enlarging and strengthening the existing levees and digging out and widening the mouth of the creek. In the flood last August one person was killed, railroad trestles were wiped out, and 9 or 10 buildings were completely washed away. Many other buildings were damaged; and altogether some 362 buildings and houses were damaged by that flood. Streets and sidewalks were washed away. Much refuse was washed into the town.

There are two big mills in the city operated by the Frankfort Cotton Mill and the Continental Gin Co. Those mills were under 9 feet of water. They employ 87 percent of the people employed in the town. The owners of the mills have determined and served notice that unless some flood protection is provided at the town of Prattville they will move away. If those two mills are moved away, there will not longer be any town left. This flood-control work is absolutely necessary unless the town is to pass out of existence and become only a ghost of the past.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. What is the amount involved in this project?

Mr. HILL. The amount involved is about $500,000.

Mr. McNARY. Was it included in the original Senate bill which was on the calendar and was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. HILL. It was not included in that bill; but it was authorized in a bill which the Senate Committee on Commerce considered and favorably reported to the Senate, and which the Senate passed at the present session of the Congress. The reason why the Senate Commerce Committee considered this project in a separate bill and reported that bill to the Senate was because of an emergency. If the proposed relief is to be granted and is to do any good, it must be granted right away. There must be no delay. Only 4 weeks ago there was a threat of another terrible flood in this very town; and unless we do this work to prevent such floods, there will be no town left.

Mr. McNARY. My inquiry is directed to this point: Is this project in the omnibus flood control bill?

Mr. HILL. As the Senator knows, there is no omnibus flood control bill now on the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. No.

Mr. HILL. It was not in the omnibus bill last year because the engineers had not finished their survey and had not made their report.

Mr. McNARY. I am speaking of the bill on the calendar placed there in the last session, and in this session recommitted to the Committee on Commerce. That bill included flood-control projects as well as river and harbor projects. Was the Senator's project in that bill?

Mr. HILL. The project was not in that bill. As I have said to the Senator from Oregon, the report from the engineers on this project came in only in January of this year, which, of course, was a number of months after the bill of last year was reported by the Senate Committee on Commerce.

It could not have gone in last year's bill because the report had not come in from the Army engineers.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator an authorization for his project?

Mr. HILL. I have an authorization in that a bill covering the matter has passed the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. It has not passed the House, has it?

Mr. HILL. It has not passed the House, but the amendment is in order, the bill having passed the Senate at the present session of the Congress. As the Senator knows, that makes it in order to offer the amendment to this measure.

Mr. McNARY. I am not in charge of the bill, but I am not convinced by the Senator's argument that the amendment is not subject to a point of order. I shall not raise it, however; it is not my bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. What amount is involved in the authorization?

Mr. HILL. $500,000, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. What is the character of the project?

Mr. HILL. It is a flood-control project in Alabama, affecting a town of about 2,500 people. There is a creek, Autauga Creek, which flows through the town. There have been intermittent floods there; a bad flood occurred in 1928 and even a worse one in 1929. According to the report of the engineers, unless this flood-control work is done, and done soon, there will not be any town there. It is on that basis of emergency that the Senate Committee on Commerce, after considering the bill to which I have referred, reported the bill favorably.

I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that we presented the facts to the subcommittee now in charge of the pending bill, and I believe the subcommittee was impressed with the need of the compulsion for this project and of this flood-control work being done. At that time the authorization bill had not passed the Senate, and it was not in order to put the provision in the pending bill. All my amendment would do would be to make this project eligible under the $70,000,000 proposed to be appropriated by the pending bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Then, the object of the Senator is to have a portion of the general fund used to carry out the purpose of his amendment?

Mr. HILL. Of course, so that it would be eligible for money from the appropriation carried in the bill, just as other projects would be eligible. As the Senator knows, one section of the bill, applying only to the Mississippi River and its tributaries, provides a general appropriation, leaving its expenditure entirely, as I read the section, in the hands of the Army engineers.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator is not asking for a specific appropriation?

Mr. HILL. I am not asking for a specific appropriation, but making this project eligible for funds from the $70,000,000 appropriated by the bill.

Mr. BYRNES. It is legislation, then, upon the subject?

Mr. HILL. No; it is not legislation.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator does not think it comes within the rule as to legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. HILL. Under the rules of the Senate, I think it certainly does not require a two-thirds vote to put it in the bill. It is entirely in order under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. If the committee has not made a point of order on other authorizations of this kind, I do not think it should do so in this instance.

Mr. HILL. I do not think a point of order would lie, because under rule XVI, found on page 20 of the rules, the amendment is clearly in order, as the authorization bill has been favorably reported by the Senate Commerce Committee and the Senate has passed that bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this matter was presented to the subcommittee at some length. It is a proposal to authorize the protection of one city, at least, in Alabama. The testimony was positive that it was a flourishing city and that, for the want of flood protection when the floods come the city is likely to be badly damaged, and that unless very soon something is done the citizens will be forced, because of the lack of the improvement and the consequent damage, to leave the city. The record before the subcommittee was such as to impress the subcommittee sufficiently to recommend the inclusion of the item in the bill; but, because it contains legislation, and for other reasons sufficient to the members, it was not agreed to by the main committee.

The amendment, if agreed to, would not increase the appropriation. If the amendment should be agreed to by the Senate, and later by the House, and become a part of the law, the Board of Engineers would consider it as an authorization to construct this flood-control work, and money carried in the bill could be used for that purpose. Of course, that would be in the discretion of the Board. Personally, not speaking for the committee, the argument impressed me very much, and I should be glad to see the item go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

To carry out the flood-control project at East Hartford, Conn., authorized by the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938, in accordance with the revised plans and cost estimates described in House Document No. 653, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, $249,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I desire to offer, and I wish to say in explanation of the amendment that while it does embrace a multiple-use project, it has for its primary purpose flood control for the city of Augusta, Ga., a city of 70,000 people. It was included in the bill which was reported by the Commerce Committee of the Senate last year, and which was recommitted to that committee for further consideration. It is not included in the bill now reported by the committee because that bill, as I understand, is confined to navigation projects.

I offer this amendment, Mr. President, because it is similar to and identical with certain other amendments which have been placed in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Savannah River and Clark Hill Reservoir: Senate Document No. 66, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, in accordance with the plan recommended on page 4 of said document: Provided, That in marketing power developed by this project, the policy of giving preference and priority to States, municipalities, public bodies, and cooperatives, heretofore established by the Congress in the Federal Power Act and the Bonneville Act, shall be preserved and continued.

Whenever any power project not under Federal license is benefited by the Clark Hill Reservoir project, the Federal Power Commission, after notice to the owner or owners of such unlicensed project and after opportunity for hearing, shall determine and fix a reasonable and equitable annual charge to be paid to the United States on account of such benefits by said owner or owners or other recipients of such benefits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this amendment was not presented to the committee, and I should be glad to have the Senator from Georgia explain the purport and effect of the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to do that.

As I have already said, this authorization—for, frankly, that is what it is—was included in the bill which was reported to the Senate by the Commerce Committee last year. It is not now in the bill reported by the Appropriations Committee, a bill providing a very much lesser sum than the other bill, because it is not strictly a navigation project.

This is a multiple-use project beyond any doubt, and I would not, of course, care to make any statement to the contrary.

This project has been recommended by the Board of Army Engineers, by the Chief of Engineers, by a special board appointed by the President, by the National Resources Committee, and by the Federal Power Commission. It has had very strong approval by the boards by which it has been considered.

It calls for the construction of a large reservoir on the Savannah River above the city of Augusta, in the State of South Carolina. Naturally power will be generated. It would seem futile to undertake a large power project there, which is necessary to the flood-control features of the bill and which is necessary also to certain navigation features of the bill, without making some provision as to power. On the question of flood control, I am very glad to say that Augusta is a city, as I have already said, of some 70,000 people. It is on the Savannah River; it is subject to periodic floods; it is only fairly adequately protected at the present time by a levee system, which under unusual conditions is not a protection to the city. I am offering the amendment to this bill—and I am not asking any present appropriation or participation in any fund—for the purpose of having it authorized, so that subsequently we may be able to obtain the necessary funds with which this project can be commenced and constructed.

I should like to say that the Federal Power Commission and the National Resources Committee made a special study of the power possibilities and of the distribution of the power, and their report is extremely favorable to this project. Of course, the question of flood control and the navigation features of the project are beyond question, because they have the approval of the Board of Army Engineers, made after an exhaustive study and after very careful surveys conducted over a long period of time.

Let me say that the Savannah River is partially navigable now by virtue of locks and dams in the river below Augusta. It is navigable for the greater part of the year, approximately 9½ to 10½ months of the year; but, not being navigable for the entire year, the whole value of the project as a navigation project is lost, because adequate, uniform, dependable, regular schedules cannot be maintained on the river. So, since other projects similar to this authorization have gone into the bill, I hope the chairman of the committee will permit this one to go into the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Georgia has offered this amendment on the implied, if not the direct, promise that no funds will be asked for during this Congress. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I think the Senator is correct. This amendment would carry no money. It is a mere authorization.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I further realize that a project of this kind has a rather stony road to travel through the Congress. It is an amendment which involves power, an amendment which involves navigation, and an amendment which involves flood control. In the other body of Congress the action of two committees is necessary to approve an amendment of this character—first, the Rivers and Harbors Committee which acts independently; second, the Flood Control Committee, which acts independently. It would be extremely difficult, as I understand, to get through that body a bill embracing this authorization.

Let me state at this point that from my viewpoint the Board of Army Engineers, headed by the Chief of Engineers, perhaps has as high a standing before the Congress as any other board in the Government. I think we follow its recommendations more closely than we follow the recommendations of any other board.

If the Board is not for this project or any other project, it does not get by. If the Board is of the opinion that this is a good project after it is authorized, then in due time a request will be made for funds with which to construct the project.

With this understanding, and in view of the action of the Senate in permitting other amendments to be adopted, I do not feel constrained to make a point of order against the submission of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a general question. Has the Committee on Appropriations any information to indicate to what extent flood-control projects have been authorized for which money has not been appropriated?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I cannot definitely answer that question; but in the authorization bill passed in 1938 a list of projects was authorized at a total estimated cost of about $375,000,000, and, of course, only a small part of that amount has been appropriated.

Mr. WALSH. There are further authorizations in this bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This is not an authorization bill.

Mr. WALSH. But some of the previous authorizations have money for them appropriated in this bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senate adheres to the House bill, it will appropriate only $70,000,000 for continuing work on existing flood-control projects and the initiation of work on new projects. Of that sum, about $60,000,000 will be used to continue work on existing projects, and approximately $10,000,000 only will be available for emergency purposes and for the initiation of new projects.

Mr. WALSH. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that the Army engineers would have to decide what new projects would be undertaken?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They have done so in the past, and I take it for granted they will do so in the future.

Mr. WALSH. So they select from the projects authorized by the Congress and from the amount of money made available by the Congress the new projects which will be undertaken?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, of the long list of projects which have been authorized, the Board of Army Engineers make a request of the Budget Bureau for a certain amount of money to build certain projects and to continue work on certain projects. In this particular year the Board asked for $206,000,000 with which to carry on work on existing projects and to start new projects. I say they asked for that amount of money; I should say that they submitted a list of projects and advised the Board that they could efficiently use a certain sum, $206,000,000, in carrying out this congressional program. The Budget Bureau cut the item of $206,000,000 down to $70,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. It is quite apparent that only a small part of the projects already undertaken can be carried on with only that amount of money appropriated.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. For the current year the Board had $133,000,000; so for next year, 1941, unless that amount is increased, the Board will have only $70,000,000, which is slightly in excess of one-half of what they have for this year.

Mr. WALSH. All of which means, of course, that the protection of the public against the danger and damage of floods is being postponed because of our inability to appropriate the money.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I intend now to offer an amendment that is in point in regard to the question about which the Senator from Massachusetts is now inquiring.

The pending bill as it comes from the House carries $70,000,000 for this purpose. The subcommittee asked the main committee to increase that amount to $100,000,000, but the main committee saw the matter otherwise, and the vote of the subcommittee did not prevail; so I cannot offer this as a committee amendment.

Upon my own motion, Mr. President, I move that on page 8, in line 5, the figures "$70,000,000" be stricken out and that the figures "$100,000,000" be inserted in lieu thereof, which amendment brings up the particular point now under discussion by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it seems to me that if we intend to maintain reasonable speed in completing flood-control projects, the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma should be adopted. I am rather surprised to learn that so little money has been appropriated for the authorizations already made. If I should ask the Senator what surveys have been made by the Board of Army Engineers, and the amount of money necessary to carry them out, I suppose we should have a very much larger figure.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Answering that question, the RECORD shows that the Chief of Engineers requested $206,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that; but they also, of course, have projects for which they did not ask money.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They have many projects which are ready for authorization, and many projects which are authorized, which they did not include in their request for funds, or in their statement that they could efficiently use funds for construction purposes.

Mr. WALSH. While we desire to be careful and prudent in our appropriations, and while it is commendable of the Committee on Appropriations to continue to reduce to the lowest level the amount of money appropriated, it seems to me flood-control projects are of such supreme importance that we at least ought to vote the $30,000,000 additional which I assume the Senator, who was the chairman of the subcommittee, was thoroughly impressed with the necessity and importance of appropriating. How many members were there on the subcommittee?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There were about 12, I think.

Mr. WALSH. And what was the attitude of the 12 members toward this matter?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the record is not available, but sentiment in the subcommittee was substantially in favor of that increase.

Mr. WALSH. And some of the subcommittee were ex officio members from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. WALSH. So the subcommittee felt that this was a reasonable request to make of the Congress, though I assume many of its members would have preferred to make the appropriation much larger?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if I may briefly make another observation or two, the record before the committee shows that the annual loss through damage by floods amounts to more than $100,000,000. In other words, the United States on the average suffers an annual loss of $100,000,000. The subcommittee was of the opinion that it would not be bad policy to appropriate a sum of money equal to the annual loss caused by floods. That is point No. 1.

Mr. WALSH. And that is the reason why the subcommittee agreed upon the figure $100,000,000 instead of $70,000,000 which the full committee recommended?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That was one reason. The second reason, if I correctly interpret the testimony, was that if only $70,000,000 should be appropriated, that would not be sufficient to carry on efficiently the work on the projects now under construction. In other words, the appropriation of only $70,000,000 would cause them to slow down the work now going on upon existing projects under construction.

Mr. WALSH. Which means that even the existing projects, if they are not completed, are more or less useless to avert future floods.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They are wholly useless. I may cite one illustration in my own State. The State, under a State authority, financed through the Federal Government the construction of a power project at Pensacola. It was authorized for construction by Congress; but the State of Oklahoma passed its own law, issued its own bonds, sold the bonds in the main to the Government to raise the funds, and received a grant; and by means of Federal funds this dam has been constructed. Within the last 2 weeks the gates have been closed. The dam is almost complete. The top may not be complete, because there is a highway across the summit, and there may be some finishing work necessary in connection with that. Today, an 8-inch rain fell in the Neosho River Basin, which feeds into the river on which this dam is located, the Illinois River. This dam is a large one, with a large reservoir area. So, no matter how high the flood may be in the Neosho River, an 8-inch waterfall, or a 10-inch waterfall, or a 12-inch waterfall going down that river against that dam, with its gates closed, as they have been closed in the last 2 weeks, will do no damage, and there will be no flood over the dam. The dam would not have been worth 5 cents if the flood had come 2 weeks ago. But today the dam is finished, so to speak, and it is now a perfect flood-control dam and reservoir, although it is built for power purposes and later on will be used for those purposes.

Mr. WALSH. That is an excellent illustration of the fact that once a project is undertaken it should be completed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No flood-control project is of benefit until it is completed. That applies to ditches, dams, and reservoirs.

Mr. WALSH. We have the same situation in connection with the flood area of New England, where a large number of projects have been authorized, and only a few of them completed, and none finally completed on the main rivers of New England. I agree with the Senator heartily that at least when we have undertaken these projects and they have been started, we should continue them and appropriate the necessary money, having pledged ourselves to undertake the projects.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me make one further observation, Mr. President. If this sum is not increased, not only will no new projects be started, but work will be slowed down on existing projects. Perhaps that is not the worst effect. If this amount is not increased, the Board of Engineers must close some of its regional offices, and it must throw out of employment a great number of its existing personnel, because now they have a personnel built up to spend $133,000,000 annually, for they are spending that much this year, and next year, if the amount is curtailed to $70,000,000, they will not need personnel sufficient for the expenditure of $133,000,000.

I submit these arguments in favor of the motion to increase the amount from $70,000,000 to $100,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed on page 8, line 5, to strike out "$70,000,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$100,000,000."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to say just a few words. In the Committee on Appropriations I opposed the increase asked. I recognize the importance of the projects included, but, after all, we have been proceeding quite rapidly with the increase of appropriations for river and harbor and flood-control work. In 1934 we appropriated $86,000,000 for flood-control work; in 1935 we appropriated $29,000,000; in 1936 we appropriated $39,000,000; in 1937 we appropriated only $27,000,000; in 1938 we appropriated $86,000,000. In 1939 the appropriation jumped from $86,000,000 to $120,000,000, and from 1939 to 1940 we increased the appropriation from $120,000,000 to $152,000,000, an increase of $32,000,000 in a single year.

Much work has been done, and must have been done, as the result of all the appropriations which have been made, and the continued increases. I know that the time will never come when Congress will not be appropriating money for flood-control work, because it is a tremendous program, and it covers the entire country. The sole question is the rate of speed at which we should proceed.

The Budget Bureau thought that the $70,000,000 was sufficient. It is now proposed to increase the sum recommended by a very large amount, and I think that in view of the condition of the Nation's finances, no matter how desirable it may be to make these appropriations, we could well wait another year, and in an orderly way provide for funds for the flood-control program.

There is nothing sacred about any particular figure; it is merely a question of judgment as to what the Congress believes it is possible to make available for this work in view of our financial condition. I think the Budget estimate was sufficient, and I so voted in the Committee on Appropriations, and shall vote that way on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I could not let this opportunity pass without expressing concurrence with the views of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who offered the amendment to add $30,000,000 to the flood-control Budget item. I do not presume to sit in judgment on the merits of any of the projects which were listed in the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma last Friday, but I think I should be remiss in my duty if I did not call attention to the situation confronting the city of Tacoma, Wash., which happens to be my own home city. Tacoma is one of the great cities of the Pacific coast, and it is named in the list of those which would probably be the beneficiaries were the additional money added to the Budget item.

Notwithstanding the fact that Tacoma is one of the great cities of the Pacific coast, I have seen all sections of that city inundated by the Puyallup River, a weird, absurd picture, of a great American city being inundated by one of the mountain rivers, which gets out of bounds at times, and to control which seems almost impossible by the methods which have been employed. The Mud Mountain Dam is being erected by the Government in an attempt to curb this mountain stream. Various streams rise in the Cascade Mountains, and flow to the sea, or to Puget Sound. They rise very rapidly as a result of the heavy rains in that section, so rapidly that it is impossible to do anything with them.

I am very hopeful that the item will be increased by the amount suggested by the able Senator from Oklahoma, first, because I believe that the gentlemen who brought their best judgment to bear on this problem have agreed that an increase of $30,000,000 is necessary to carry on the minimum amount of work which should be done; and, secondly, because I have an earnest and sincere desire to be of service to my own city, which has been so grievously damaged by the violent floodwaters of the Puyallup River.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment of my colleague the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] for an additional $30,000,000 for flood control. That would make a total of $100,000,000.

The estimate of the Army engineers is that floods cost in actual property damage $100,000,000 a year. There is an old Chinese proverb which runs something like this:

> Control the mountains and you can control the rivers.

The trouble with China is that she did not learn to control the mountains, and now she cannot control the rivers. The Yellow River has literally washed China away and changed her social economy.

Mr. President, this is a problem with which local communities cannot cope. Floods begin at this time of the year. The snows on the mountains begin to melt. The spring rains come in the lowlands. The little mountain rivulets join their force with the streams and the gulley and start their destructive trip toward the ocean.

I have in mind particularly now the Mississippi River and the Ohio River. I was a witness of the last great flood on the Ohio River and I saw part of the damage it did. Much of the damage caused by flood can be prevented by flood-control measures. Much of the preliminary survey has already been made by the Army engineers. The thing that is needed now is money with which to do the construction work.

The amendment offered proposes an appropriation sufficient to bring the sum available up to the amount of the destruction in a year. Surely we must keep up with the destruction.

We have some wild rivers in Oklahoma. The Cimarron River gets its name from its nature. The name means "uncontrollable."

Some years ago a flood-control convention was held in Oklahoma City, which was attended by a well-known consulting engineer from Chicago, who was, as well, a human engineer. Not only was he an expert engineer in the matter of rivers but he knew about people. It so happened that I attended that banquet, and I never heard such a "throwin' of words and slingin' of language" since I commenced listening to oratory. That engineer rose and began to tell us about floods. I remember some of his language. He said:

> I grew up on the banks of the old Missouri, and I learned about rivers from her. When I was a boy I used to walk down to her murky waters and watch the deepening dimples as they danced and died on her glassy bosom, and I learned about rivers from her.

He continued:

> I was mystified by it all. I did not know whence it came or whither it went. But I learned about rivers from her. I saw the mists come up and the river go down, and I learned about rivers from her.

Well, I just thought, "Mister, you may know about the old Missouri, but if you never saw our old Cimarron or the old South Canadian on a tear, you ain't seen nothin' yet." [Laughter.] When that old river gets on a rampage she runs upstream faster than the Missouri can fall over Niagara. [Laughter.]

When it comes to mystery, there are farmers from the mouth to the source of that old stream today who are mystified. Some of them have farms they did not use to have, and some used to have farms they do not have now.

So, as a Biblical old stream she "giveth and she taketh away," and the farmers do not know "from whence it cometh nor whither it goeth."

We know something about damage from flood in Oklahoma. There is only one power that can control floods. As these streams at this time of the year begin to swell from the melting snows of the mountains and add their turbulent currents one to the other, they join forces as they come on down toward the Mississippi Valley, until the old father of waters becomes a raging torrent. That yellow, roaring, hissing, foaming tide goes on and brings destruction. Like a dragon of destruction it lies in the Mississippi Basin, lashing the Ohio and Missouri Valleys with its tail and threatening New Orleans with its mouth. Only the power of the Federal Government can prevent destruction by floods.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, flood control in Pennsylvania has long been delayed. Every year the situation becomes increasingly serious. I have received numerous petitions from responsible citizens of Plymouth, York, Williamsport, Johnstown, and other centers of Pennsylvania urging that the projects already started be completed at the very earliest possible time. Increased appropriation is needed for this purpose. I favor the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. I favor the proposal made by the United States Army engineers that an additional $30,000,000 above that set forth in the Budget be made available.

Mr. President, I have lived in towns in Pennsylvania which have been flooded. I know something about floods. The amendment contains particular items which affect my State. Plymouth will receive $300,000; York will receive $800,000; Williamsport will receive $400,000; Johnstown Channel will receive $600,000; and Youghiogheny Reservoir will receive $1,500.

Mr. President, Johnstown has suffered enough. The need for flood control throughout Pennsylvania in many places is increasingly great. I remember when as a boy one of my relatives, a victim of the great Johnstown flood, came to live with us. This is the time for these constructive enterprises. Men need the employment now. If we are to go in debt and to continue to go in debt, let us see to it that public funds are spent for permanent, worth-while projects that will endure down the years. Let us make safe and permanent provision for those who live along the river banks. Invariably such persons will be found to be in the low-income group, unable to provide for their own needs in time of disaster and distress. Flood-control needs cannot longer be delayed without incurring even greater disaster. Johnstown and the other flood danger spots of the Nation have suffered enough. Let us now make the necessary appropriation to come to their rescue, and the necessary appropriation will be made if the proposal submitted by the senior Senator from Oklahoma shall be adopted. I heartily concur in the amendment offered by him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. It was disapproved after the Appropriations Committee had thoroughly considered the whole question. It seems to me there have been more irrelevant arguments on this question than on any measure I have heard discussed.

Mr. President, of course, every project is desirable. Of course, we want to stop floods as rapidly as possible. That is not the question. The question is, Where are we going to get the money with which to pay for flood-control work? The Budget Bureau already recommends appropriations which involve a deficit of over $3,000,000,000. We are constantly increasing the debt. How on earth are we to pay for things when we have no money?

I think the sponsor of an amendment of this kind ought to tell us where we can get the necessary money. He proposes, I take it, that there be issued $30,000,000 more of Government bonds to add to the already tremendous debt which is now approaching $45,000,000,000.

As I have said, of course, every one of these projects is desirable. However, every one with any sense knows that we must weigh our revenues, and determine whether we have the money to spend on these desirable projects. That is true with respect to every individual. It is true of you, Mr. President, and me, and of everyone else in the United States. Every city government, every State government, every school district, every village council knows that it cannot, for any length of time, spend money in excess of its revenues. Only the Federal Government seems to think it is above all law.

Of course, these projects are desirable and, of course, Senators feel they would like to have these projects for their particular States.

I should like to read the letter I received from the sponsor of this amendment, the Senator from Oklahoma, because it seems to me to set forth very clearly the pork-barrel proposition which is before the Senate today. I received a letter from the Senator from Oklahoma saying:

> The flood control and rivers and harbors appropriation bill will probably come up for consideration in the Senate on Monday. The appropriations * * * are greatly reduced below the amounts provided for the current year.

I shall not read the whole letter.

> The particular items pertaining to your State are as follows:
> Cincinnati, $350,000.
> Dillon Reservoir, $1,000,000.
> Delaware Reservoir, $750,000.
> Muskingum Conservancy District, $374,000.
> Massillon, $200,000.
> Martins Ferry, $400,000.
> These facts are called to your attention in connection with a motion which will probably be made on Monday to add $30,000,000 to increase the flood-control item from $70,000,000 to $100,000,000.
> Respectfully submitted.
> ELMER THOMAS, Chairman.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is there any statement in that letter which is not true?

Mr. TAFT. I do not know that there is any statement in it which is not true. I have not examined it thoroughly. My point is that the appeal is made to me that, as a pork-barrel proposition, I ought to vote for these things because of the projects which are in my State, and of others which will be added if this amendment is placed in the bill. Every other Senator is appealed to in the same way. The projects in his State are set forth, and the idea is that we are going to yield because we would like these things for our State. Ohio would receive two and one-half million dollars, therefore I must vote for an increase of $30,000,000 to give every other Senator what he wants in his State.

So far as I am concerned, that appeal turned me against the amendment as much as anything could turn me against it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, has the Senator any objection to having the letter from which he read printed in the RECORD at this point?

Mr. TAFT. Not at all. I will offer it at the end of my remarks.

The argument is made that we are going to have to dismiss personnel which has gradually been acquired. As a matter of fact the appropriation last year was $133,000,000, but the average over a number of years has been very much smaller than $70,000,000.

Flood control is a tremendous project. It will cost several billion dollars before we get through. But $70,000,000 is as much as we can afford to spend, even if we admit the justice of the Budget for this year.

So far as the argument is concerned with respect to dismissal of personnel, if that argument is pressed at all we never will reduce any public works.

In this case we do not reduce the personnel of the Army engineers. We do not have to relieve any Army man from his Army duty. There may be various personnel employed which will be very gradually reduced because this year we will not spend $133,000,000, which was the sum appropriated for the current year. Those things can be carried along and gradually stopped.

I hope very much that the flood-control program can proceed. I think the President has neglected the flood-control program. I think there is discrimination against the program. When we had the T. V. A. matter before us I pointed out that we were actually making an increase of $5,000,000 over last year's appropriation for the T. V. A. I think the administration has deliberately slighted the projects proposed by the Army engineers. Yet if the Budget is presented, and it is perfectly apparent, even after these sums are allowed, that we are unable to pay the bill, it only means an increased debt, which will in time destroy our whole economic fabric.

Mr. President, flood control is important. Cincinnati has been flooded. I have seen probably more destruction from flood than any other Senator has seen. I am anxious to see the flood-control program proceed. Yet the alternative of national bankruptcy is so much worse, that I believe we can go on as we have gone on for 50 years.

For a long period of time Congress paid no attention to the matter of flood control. In 1884 we had a flood about as bad as that of 1937. After a flood the destruction can very rapidly be repaired. Two weeks after our last big flood we were back doing business as usual.

It is not at all clear that we should not abandon a great many places which we propose to protect with flood walls. It is a question whether in the long run it is worth while to protect them. The money used for protection in many cases amounts to more than the actual value of the property. I think the Army engineers have weeded out the projects and have proceeded with those that are sound.

Yet it is something for which we can wait. We shall have to wait for most of it. We shall have to wait for many years before the whole program is completed. The Bureau of the Budget and the House Committee on Appropriations, looking at the whole picture, feel that $70,000,000 is all we can pay this year if we are to maintain even the very reasonable Budget which has already been put before the Congress.

It seems to me, therefore, that unless we are willing to increase all appropriations, unless we are willing to say that we do not care where the money comes from, and unless we are willing to say that we do not care how high the public debt goes, we ought to vote down the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, in connection with my remarks, the letter of April 13, 1940, addressed to me by the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
April 13, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT A. TAFT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TAFT: The flood-control and rivers and harbors appropriation bill will probably come up for consideration in the Senate on Monday. The appropriations carried in the bill are greatly reduced below the amounts provided for the current year. The Chief of Engineers requested $206,000,000 for flood control and the Budget reduced the request to $70,000,000. The amount available for the current year is $133,000,000, so if the amount proposed in the Senate bill is not increased, much of the work now under construction will have to be slowed down and few, if any, new projects can be initiated. In addition, the personnel of the Board of Engineers will be greatly reduced.

On page 4434 of Friday's RECORD will be found a break-down of the $70,000,000 item, and on page 4435 will be found a break-down of the sum of $30,000,000 which the Chief of Engineers states that he could use efficiently in carrying on the program.

The particular items pertaining to your State are as follows:

Ohio:

Cincinnati	$350,000
Dillon Reservoir	1,000,000
Delaware Reservoir	750,000
Muskingum Conservancy District	374,000
Massillon	200,000
Martins Ferry	400,000

These facts are called to your attention in connection with a motion which will probably be made on Monday to add $30,000,000 to increase the flood-control item from $70,000,000 to $100,000,000.

Respectfully submitted.

ELMER THOMAS, Chairman.

Mr. ADAMS obtained the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Ellender	La Follette	Sheppard
Austin	Frazier	Lee	Shipstead
Bailey	George	Lodge	Slattery
Bankhead	Gerry	Lucas	Smathers
Barbour	Gibson	Lundeen	Stewart
Barkley	Gillette	McCarran	Taft
Bone	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Green	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Gurney	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hale	Mead	Tobey
Byrnes	Harrison	Minton	Townsend
Capper	Hatch	Murray	Truman
Caraway	Hayden	Neely	Tydings
Chandler	Herring	Norris	Vandenberg
Chavez	Hill	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Holman	Overton	Wagner
Connally	Holt	Pepper	Walsh
Danaher	Hughes	Reed	Wheeler
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Russell	White
Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think this is truly a flood bill; but I think there is a flood aspect of it which is being partly overlooked. The flood which threatens the country is not the flood which comes down the streams which Senators have in mind. It is the flood of appropriations and expenditures which is being turned loose on the country by the Senate of the United States. The disaster which will be done by the raging waters here and there will be as nothing compared with the damage which will be done by the flood of appropriations which this body is turning loose on the country.

I say that most earnestly and most seriously. I have been a member of the Appropriations Committee, endeavoring not to stop heavy appropriations but merely to limit them.

This particular matter was taken up by the Appropriations Committee, and the Appropriations Committee voted against the increase. The Appropriations Committee, charged with the duty of representing the Senate in these matters, endeavors, under most uncomfortable circumstances, to meet its obligations. It is not an agreeable thing to vote against appropriations. It is not agreeable to be told that if we do not make a certain appropriation some village or some valley may be wiped out. But I say, Mr. President, that flood control, to meet the demands made here, could not be constructed with $30,000,000. It could not be constructed with $30,000,000,000. Every little run-off, every little swale, is a possible site for a flood.

I live in a community which was practically wiped out by the flood of 1921. Three or four hundred persons in my community were drowned, and many millions of dollars' worth of property were destroyed. The city in which I live constructed flood works at its own cost. We did not stand by and say "Our town will be ruined and industry will be driven out if the Federal Government does not come in and pay the cost of protecting us." We protected ourselves.

In the State in which I live there are flood projects of importance. There are 10,000 places where floods might occur. It is perfectly idle to say that we can prevent floods with an added $30,000,000. Until we can control the rains we cannot control the floods.

Mr. President, $30,000,000 is an important item in itself. It is of added importance as an indication of the attitude of the Congress. The House of Representatives has endeavored to tighten the belt of Congress. It has tried to cut down appropriations; and this body—supposedly the upper body—immediately turns loose the floodgates of appropriations. What are we thinking of? We are thinking of some little narrow valley. We are forgetting 130,000,000 people.

How do these appropriation bills commence? What is the first clause?

That the following sums are appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That clause is rapidly becoming a false statement. We are making appropriations, not out of money in the Treasury but out of money which must be borrowed if the obligations are to be paid; and the ceiling of the debt limit is coming close to us. At the rate we have been making appropriations today, this Congress will not adjourn without having incurred obligations which will inevitably run this Government through the debt limit. Yet what are we doing? Thinking of the little valley, the little stream. We propose to protect the people there and to forget the great flood of debt and disaster. It is a real threat.

We talk of foreign enemies. We heard such talk earlier in the day. We are afraid of enemies 6,000 or 3,000 miles away. We are worried about what has happened in Norway. I say, Mr. President, that the greatest danger to America is the very thing we are doing here—appropriating moneys for good purposes beyond our means.

Mr. President, notwithstanding the fact that our leader on the committee exercises his perfectly proper right to differ with the committee, I think the Senate should support the action of the committee. Not only is the $30,000,000 important, but I think the precedent is important. I think we shall make a serious mistake if we proceed to ignore the coming threatening storm and disregard our committees when they seek to economize.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will give consideration to the hazards which lie ahead.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise to support the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] in opposition to this additional appropriation of $30,000,000. I wish to tell a story, showing what the people think about such matters, which ought to interest the Senate.

When a river and harbor bill came from the House to the Senate last year the Commerce Committee of the Senate raised the authorization from, as I recall, $82,000,000 to $405,000,000. When I reached home after the Senate adjourned, no action having been taken upon that bill, I began to receive some inquiries about a river in Kansas. Not until I had been home for a while did I receive a copy of the Army engineers' report, which was not printed until July of last year, and so was not available to me until I reached home. I found there was a provision for a $31,000,000 appropriation for a so-called flood-control project in a certain valley next door to where I live in Kansas. The river which flows through that valley is called the Verdigris River. It is a French name. The Army engineers had reported on it, the House had reported on it, and the Senate provided appropriation of $31,000,000 for flood control on that river, which, as I have said, is next door to me.

I wrote to every mayor, every chamber of commerce, every newspaper in that valley, suggesting that a meeting be held at a central point in the valley to which everybody should be invited. There came, Mr. President, 700 people to that meeting, all of whom, perhaps, with the exception of myself and a few more, who lived in the adjoining valley, were from that valley in the so-called flood plain. We discussed the question of Government finances; of the necessity of additional taxes; of the necessity, in lieu of additional taxes, of raising the statutory limit on the debt. I asked for an expression from that meeting of 700 people, 80 percent of whom were farmers, who lived in that valley, in the flood plain. Not a single man voted for an increase of taxes; not a single man voted to raise the statutory limit on the debt, and 80 percent of the people, actually living in the valley, were in sympathy with the opposition which I had expressed to that expenditure.

My distinguished friend, the Secretary of War, Mr. Harry Woodring, who was my successor as Governor of Kansas, and who is my personal friend, lives in a town in that valley 27 miles from my own home town. He had expressed a difference of opinion with me, and rather criticized a Senator for failing to vote in favor of an appropriation for his own State. Mr. President, within the last 2 or 3 weeks there has been a city election in the town of Neodesha, the home town of the Secretary of War. In that election there was a citizens' ticket and a people's ticket, one of which was for that so-called flood-control program and the other against it. The town is strategically situated at the junction of the two rivers, and the man who was against that appropriation won the election.

If Senators sitting here today think they have to vote for these appropriations in order to get themselves reelected or to please their people, they are making a mistake. I am relying on my own experience in my own State, in my own section of the State, and on the result of an election recently held in the home town of the Secretary of War, who up to that time differed with me as to the advisability of that expenditure, to indicate that the people of the United States are opposed to an increase in the debt; they are opposed to the imposition of additional taxes, and they are looking to the Congress to exercise all possible economy.

The Appropriations Committee of the House would not put this item in the bill; the Appropriations Committee of the Senate refused to report it favorably. I do not think the Senate ought to fly in the face of public opinion and real necessity and against the recommendation of the Appropriations Committees of both Houses.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word. In the committee, in addition to this amendment, there was offered another amendment increasing by $25,000,000, according to my recollection, another item in the bill. I think the Senate might as well have in mind in voting upon this amendment that in all probability there will be another amendment adding another $25,000,000 to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] increasing the appropriation $30,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). Upon this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is unavoidably absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am not informed how he would vote if present. I find I can transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS]. I do not know how that Senator would vote, but I am permitted, under the transfer, to vote, and I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from New Jersey

[Mr. BARBOUR]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and, therefore, withhold my vote.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained. I am advised that, if present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] has been called to his home, and is therefore necessarily absent.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on public business.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained in various Government departments.

I am advised that, if present and voting, the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] would vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I am advised, however, that he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore, I am at liberty to vote and vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs: The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote, if present.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—31

Bankhead	Ellender	Maloney	Sheppard
Bone	Hayden	Mead	Shipstead
Burke	Hill	Neely	Slattery

Downey	McNary	Thomas, Idaho

So the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, between lines 12 and 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

CUSTER HISTORICAL MUSEUM

To enable the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public historical museum in the Custer Battlefield National Cemetery, Mont.," approved August 10, 1939, $25,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the War Department has recommended the erection of this museum. It was authorized by the Senate at, I think, the last session of Congress. The subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee recommended it, but I understand the full committee turned it down.

There is tremendous interest in the Custer Battlefield. Already a number of relics of Custer have been collected near Billings, Mont.; the cemetery is visited every year by a great many persons; and there is much interest in it.

The amendment carries with it an appropriation of only $25,000, and I hope it will be accepted by the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, heretofore the Congress has considered and authorized this project. This item is for the construction of a museum, which means a building, on an existing battlefield. The subcommittee was impressed by the statement made in behalf of the item, and recommended to the full committee that the bill provide for the construction of the museum; but, as stated by the Senator from Montana, the full committee did not agree with the recommendation of the subcommittee.

Speaking for the full committee, of course, I should have to sustain the objection; but speaking for the subcommittee, I approve the suggestion. If the Senate desires to include this item in the bill, it will be taken to conference, and I will see if the conferees will not agree to it.

I think I have made a fair statement about the whole matter.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am very thankful to the Senator from Oklahoma, and I hope the amendment may be taken to conference. It carries an appropriation of only $25,000 for the construction of a building to take care of the various relics which have been assembled on the Custer battlefield.

At the present time there is not any appropriate building in which to house these relics. Many of them will be destroyed by reason of the fact that there is not any appropriate building for their care and preservation. I certainly feel that the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in the committee I voted against the appropriation. I desire to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if the statement was not made to the full committee that this item had been inserted in a bill before this time. Am I wrong in that understanding?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I do not remember any such statement having been made to the committee.

Mr. BYRNES. I understood that the item had been previously adopted by the Senate, and that the House conferees had refused to agree to it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am now advised by the clerks of the Committee on Appropriations that heretofore the Senate has agreed to the item, but that the House conferees refused to accept it, whereupon the item had to be withdrawn. It has heretofore been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. That is my recollection; and I must say that the committee were of the opinion that whether it was done by one Congress or two Congresses the item had been included, and they were unable to secure the assent of the conferees of the House, and therefore determined that it would be unwise to include the item in the pending bill. Other than that I know nothing about the merits of the proposal.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that there has been a great deal of interest in this matter not only on the part of local people in Montana but on the part of various Army officers from one end of the country to the other. They have taken it up with me and asked me to try to have this amendment adopted. There is much more interest in it on the part of people outside Montana, in St. Louis and Austin, than there is on the part of the local people.

As a matter of fact, there is a small place there which at the present time is housing some of the Custer relics, but it is desired to have a house there in which all the relics can be brought together. For instance, an Army officer whom I met a short time ago in Boston told me that at St. Louis some Custer relics are stored in a basement, and no one is paying any attention to them; that they ought to be moved out there, and all assembled at one place.

All I am asking is that the Senate again send the item to conference and see if we cannot convince the House conferees that it should be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], increasing the total appropriation by $25,000 for the erection of a public historical museum in the Custer Battlefield National Cemetery, Mont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8438, the appropriation bill for the Navy Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8438) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator from South Carolina wish to go on with the bill now, or to have it go over until tomorrow?

Mr. BYRNES. I should prefer not to go on with the bill tonight.

Mr. BARKLEY. At this hour, I think it is not advisable to go ahead with the bill.

CONSERVATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF INDIAN LANDS AND RESOURCES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, there is on the table a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 2103, to repeal the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources," introduced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], was passed some time ago. Several Senators are interested in this motion, and I am advised by them that it will not take very long to dispose of it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, what is the subject of the motion?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is a motion to reconsider the vote by which a bill to repeal the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources" was passed. I am about to ask unanimous consent that tomorrow the naval appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside in order that the motion may be disposed of. I am assured that it will not take very long.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, has the Senator reference to the bill introduced by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from North Dakota will be absent tomorrow, and I should have to object, in his absence.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, let me state to the Senator from Oregon that the Senator from North Dakota and I are in complete agreement with those who sponsor the bill. The original bill was introduced by the Senator from North Dakota, and other Senators introduced similar bills. We got them all together, and the bill was reported to the calendar, passed the Senate, and went to the House. The Senator from Wyoming made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that is the only thing in controversy. We will see that the Senator's interests are protected.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I should like to ask what the urgency is, and why the appropriation bill should be set aside for the consideration of this motion. Why could it not wait until the Senator from North Dakota returns?

Mr. CHAVEZ. The only urgency is that the bill passed the Senate, then the Senator from Wyoming made a motion for reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed. We should like to have the motion disposed of so that the bill can go to the House and be acted on.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have been trying to present this matter when all the Senators interested were present. In view of what the Senator from Oregon has stated, I would not want the Senator from North Dakota to think I was taking the bill up in his absence. Perhaps it would be just as well for me to give notice now that it will be my intention to make this motion after the naval appropriation bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from North Dakota was called away this afternoon. He will be back Tuesday.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If it is agreeable to the Senator from New Mexico, I shall wait until Tuesday before calling up the motion.

TRANSFER OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY AND AIR SAFETY BOARD

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I send forward a telegram from the president of the Air Line Pilots' Association and ask that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read, if there is no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16, 1940.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

In this day and age so many startling things are constantly happening that we have become accustomed to the unusual and we are not easily startled or aroused. The air-line pilots, due to the nature of their work, are not easily excitable, yet only a few days ago when the President announced his fourth reorganization plan abolishing the Air Safety Board and stripping the new air authority of its identity and independence and proposed that air accident investigation and civil air regulation generally be placed back under the Department of Commerce, the pilots were not only startled but they were utterly flabbergasted. The regulation of air transportation and civil aviation by the Department of Commerce is something that the pilots and, in fact, most everyone in the industry look back upon with abhorrence. It is not even a pleasant story to recount. Crash upon crash needless sacrificing of human life. During this dark period the pilots lost 146 of their number by reason of crash deaths. And a startling total of 473 persons lost their lives in air crashes. Everyone, especially Congress, fought long and tirelessly to free the industry from this era of chaos and create an independent agency to give the industry the kind of regulation and air-accident investigation procedure that it so sorely needed. The pilots pointed out that safety was vital to the success of the industry and that accident investigation would have to be done by an independent air-safety board, free from all influence and control by those who made the industry's regulations. This Congress did when it passed the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, we all know the results. Crashes were cut to a minimum. There have been no fatalities in the past 12 months. When Congress established the Air Safety Board it restored public confidence in air travel with one stroke. If the President's reorganization plan is approved to place regulation and air accident investigation back under the Department of Commerce, public confidence will be destroyed because where humans own lives are involved they have a long memory. The line pilots to a man plead with you that you do everything possible to prevent this. I am explaining further in a special delivery letter today. Your cooperation is respectfully and earnestly solicited.

AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION,
DAVID L. BEHNCKE, President.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in line with the subject of the telegram just read, I ask that there be inserted in the RECORD, following the telegram, a letter from the National Aviation Day Association, through its chairman, on the same subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL AVIATION DAY ASSOCIATION, INC.,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1940.

Hon. PATRICK A. MCCARRAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: With respect to the matter of transferring the Civil Aeronautics Authority from status as an independent establishment to that of a bureau under the Department of Commerce, our association has considered the matter as touching upon a subject in which we have a vital interest, and we believe that you and other Members of Congress may be interested in our conclusions:

First. The history of Civil Aeronautics, as will be recalled, is that it had its genesis as the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce, where its methods and operation were severely criticized by Congress, as well as interested outsiders.

Second. Presumably to cut the Gordian knot Congress reconstituted Civil Aeronautics as an independent establishment, with the understanding that the incompetency and maladministration in the former bureau must speedily be abolished and the new agency conduct itself in the efficient manner intended by Congress and the Chief Executive.

In metamorphosis from the old Bureau of Air Commerce to the newly established Civil Aeronautics Authority there were a number of changes in administrative personnel and methods, and, as it is now generally understood, the present agency is now upon an efficient operating basis. In fact, within the past year, it is manifest that under its present leadership C. A. A. is really doing the job as it was intended to do, and doing it well.

Our association, because of present conditions, when the agency is just entering into what appears to be its greatest period of usefulness to the Government, and the general public it is presumed to serve, views with trepidation any untoward changes affecting it.

We are heartily in sympathy with the general purposes of governmental reorganization, where agencies can be transferred, consolidated, or even abolished in the interest of better service to the public or economy, but in the case of the present Civil Aeronautics Authority we deem any such change now unnecessary, unwise, and even harmful to good public policy.

We direct attention to the fact that today aviation occupies the spotlight in the public interest possibly more than any other subject. It cannot be questioned but that its great significance as a military weapon is being proven every day by the warring nations in Europe, and wise men who have American interests in charge are taking the lessons thus, so forcefully driven home, very much to heart.

Back of the present purely military aspects of aviation as a potent arm of our national defense is the indisputable fact that today aviation is our fastest growing industry, and we must look to the future, when, God willing, wars will cease, and civil aviation will come fully into its own as an efficient, speedy, and economical means of transportation, including the all-important task of carrying the mails, and thus playing its part in stabilizing our national economy by expanding its manufacturing and servicing phases into what we are sure will be one of America's greatest industries and assets.

We also believe that in due course, if Civil Aeronautics Authority is continued as an independent establishment, it may parallel in many respects other important Government agencies, such as, for example, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and other establishments having judicial or quasi-judicial powers over various phases of industrial activities.

Please understand, Senator, we have no criticism of the Department of Commerce insofar as its conduct of the various matters assigned to it now are concerned, but we seriously question the wisdom of thrusting into it a highly complex, specialized agency which has proven itself able to stand on its own bottom, and to which the Department's present staff, by virtue of its abilities and experience in the field of aviation generally, assuredly could not lend any further valued assistance.

Concluding, we affirm our belief that it would be a mistake to change the present set-up of Civil Aeronautics Authority or the Air Safety Board.

Cordially yours,

NATIONAL AVIATION DAY ASSOCIATION, INC.,

Chairman.

LOSSES FROM THE MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY ERADICATION CAMPAIGN

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of Senate Concurrent Resolution 40, reported by me from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 40) enacting a special joint committee to investigate the matter of losses resulting from the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication campaign in Florida in 1929 and 1930 was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby created a special joint congressional committee to be composed of three members of the Committee on Claims of the Senate, to be appointed by the chairman thereof, and three members of the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the chairman of such committee. It shall be the duty of such special committee to make a full and complete investigation with respect to the losses sustained as a result of the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication and quarantine campaign conducted in the State of Florida in 1929 and 1930 by the United States Government with a view to determining, among other things, the nature, character, and amount of such losses, the circumstances under which such losses occurred, and the persons by whom such losses were sustained. The committee shall report to the Congress at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this concurrent resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The preamble was agreed to.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE HOUSE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives requesting the Senate to return to the House the bill (S. 2661) to create a board of inspectors, Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, at Miami, Fla., together with the accompanying message.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate accede to the request of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Public Health Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters which had been favorably reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations favorably reported be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, April 18, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God be merciful unto us and bless us, and cause His face to shine upon us; that Thy way may be known upon earth; Thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee. Oh, let the nations be glad and sing for joy, for Thou shalt judge the people righteously and govern the nations upon earth. Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee; then shall the earth yield her increase and God, even our own God, shall bless us; God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7079. An act to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HATCH, Mr. MCCARRAN, and Mr. AUSTIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO NAVY ACT OF JUNE 23, 1938

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 4929) to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), for printing under the rule.

QUARTERING OF TROOPS DURING PERIOD OF INAUGURATION, 1941

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 218, to provide for the quartering, in certain public buildings in the District of Columbia, of troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Administrator of the Federal Works Agency or head of any executive department or establishment is authorized to allocate such space in any public building under his care and supervision as he deems necessary for the purposes of quartering troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies to be held on January 20, 1941, but such use shall not continue after January 22, 1941. Authority granted by this joint resolution may be exercised notwithstanding the provisions of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved April 28, 1902, prohibiting the use of public buildings in connection with inaugural ceremonies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution passed every 4 years with reference to taking care of the troops of the various States that come here for the inauguration.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, I want to say here that when the Republicans come in next January you will need a lot of space to take care of them, because we are going to have a real President inaugurated next January 20.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MARY AGNES M'MAHON

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 464

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Mary Agnes McMahon, widow of Thomas G. McMahon, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' salary compensation, and an additional amount not to exceed $250 to defray funeral expenses of the said Thomas G. McMahon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEVING CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF VETERANS' FACILITIES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to place in the RECORD at this point a letter which I received from General Hines this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I am placing in the RECORD today a letter received from General Hines of the Veterans' Administration in which he says that he has signed an order which keeps the commitment he made to the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Expenditures, which will relieve the employees of the veterans' facilities from the requirement now in effect, by which they are required to pay $22.50 a month for meals, regardless of whether or not they partake of the meals. This order goes into effect May 1 and is the answer to many requests and petitions that have been filed in the last few weeks by various Members. In the future it will be optional with the employee whether he or she eats three meals at the facility.

The letter is as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, April 16, 1940.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COCHRAN: Having in mind your interest in the status of employees of the Veterans' Administration employed at our hospital facilities, who under our rules have been permitted to live off the station, but have been required to pay for subsistence (three meals a day) and referring to recent proposals before the Congress seeking to make optional the acceptance of allowances by these employees, I have today signed an order effective May 1, 1940, which, for all employees living off the station and who previously have been charged for three meals a day, will make optional the taking of more than one meal a day and thus, at the employee's option, he may be relieved of partaking of and paying for two meals per day.

This order will benefit nearly 9,000 employees at our several hospital facilities who are living off the stations with their families, and I am confident granting this option will meet much of the criticism which has been reported from among this group of employees who have felt that they were being charged for something they did not desire or which they may not have entirely benefited from, and will materially add to their convenience.

The order itself contemplates that they will take the one meal served at the hospital during their 8-hour tour of duty. This 8-hour tour of duty provides for one-half hour for a meal and it appears administratively sound that these employees should be required to take this one meal served during their tour of duty during the one-half hour allowed for it. Where previously the charge for subsistence among this group of employees, cafeteria style, was $22.50 per month, the present subsistence charge for one meal will be one-third of that amount, namely $7.50 a month, and thus the employees will be relieved of charges amounting to $15 per month.

Very sincerely yours, FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert an editorial from the Endicott Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALIFORNIA TIDELANDS OIL

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I do this to direct the attention to the facts contained in an editorial headed "Tidelands Oil Again," from the Los Angeles Times. We have heard about Mr. Hitler's "blitzkrieg." We have one by the Federal Government in California, wherein they are trying to take the tidelands of California. We are going to resist that. The Federal Government has tried to enforce upon us a Federal oil control, and in order to get us into that, they are going to try to "blitzkrieg" us in in that way. This just cannot happen, and I hope all you gentlemen will read the editorial and do some thinking afterward.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include the editorial as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[From the Los Angeles Times of April 11, 1940]

TIDELANDS OIL AGAIN

Reports that the Cole committee, which has been seeking, so far unsuccessfully, some plan for bringing oil production under Federal rule, is about to take up the old question of California's tideland oil pools, tend to confirm predictions that an effort would be made to tie these unrelated matters together for an illegitimate purpose. It is not inconceivable that somebody is trying to frighten California into dropping opposition to Cole bill regulation.

The Department of Justice has been supposed to be investigating the title to tideland oil, and unless and until it reports there is no reason for action by a congressional committee.

That the California tidelands and the oil under them belong to California remains the unaltered opinion of neutral legal experts, and the failure of the Department of Justice so far to announce any other opinion indicates that it is also the opinion of legal officialdom in Washington. What light the Cole committee could throw on this question of law is hard to imagine.

Any attempted Federal raid on California property will be resisted; nor should California be frightened by a stuffed club into acceptance of Secretary Ickes' oil dictatorship.

PROPOSED STANDING COMMITTEES OF HOUSE AND SENATE ON CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read the following communication which I received this morning, addressed to me, and to extend my remarks by including therein a copy of a House concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, the communication and resolution are as follows:

THE NATIONAL AVIATION DAY ASSOCIATION, INC., at its regular meeting held on Friday, April 12, 1940, unanimously endorsed the following resolutions:

"Whereas the increasing importance of aviation, both in a military and an industrial sense, is now manifested by a universal public interest; and

"Whereas it is inevitable that accurate knowledge of aviation matters will necessitate more and more study on the part of Members of Congress, scientists, technicians, industrialists, educators, et al.: Be it

"Resolved, That, in view of the foregoing, the NATIONAL AVIATION DAY ASSOCIATION, INC., respectfully suggests to all Members of Congress the advisability and desirability of immediately creating a standing Committee on Aviation Affairs, to take full rank with the other great committees of the Senate and House; and that

"THE NATIONAL AVIATION DAY ASSOCIATION, INC., respectfully suggests to Members of Congress that, by formal resolution, the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House be authorized and directed to appoint each three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House to constitute a special joint committee to study and report upon the feasibility of establishing Senate and House standing Committees on Aviation Affairs; and that

"Copies of this resolution be furnished to all Members of Congress, the President of the United States, and the press."

JOHN J. CRIM, Chairman.
C. H. C. BAKER, Secretary.

Concurrent resolution creating a joint committee to study and report with respect to the feasibility of establishing standing House and Senate Committees on Civil Aviation

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there is hereby created a joint committee consisting of three Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker, and three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate, to study and to report, to the House and Senate, respectively, with respect to the feasibility of establishing standing committees of the House and Senate, respectively, on civil aviation. Such joint committee shall submit its report prior to the adjournment of the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

GREAT LAKES WATERSHED

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago, lacking but 4 days, the Supreme Court of the United States handed down a momentous and important decision which measured to the State of Illinois and the sanitary district of Chicago the amount of water that could be diverted from the Great Lakes for purposes other than domestic pumpage. It also provided ample time from April 21, 1930, to December 31, 1938, to the sanitary district of Chicago based upon a liberal estimate for completing its entire system for sewage treatment.

The amount of water the decree provided was 1,500 cubic feet per second in addition to domestic pumpage.

During the latter part of last year the State of Illinois instituted proceedings before the Supreme Court of the United States to modify its decision or decree so as to permit the use of 5,000 cubic feet per second instead of the 1,500 cubic feet per second, or more than three times the amount originally provided in the Court's decree in addition to domestic pumpage until December 31, 1942.

This matter came before the Court very recently, and a decision has been handed down appointing a special master to examine into the request of the State of Illinois and directing the master to report with all convenient speed.

In order that the Members of this House who come from the Great Lakes section of this country and those who come from the Mississippi Valley may be fully aware of the provisions of the Court's decision in this most important matter, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered on the 3d day of April of this year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

[Supreme Court of the United States. Nos. 2, 3, and 4, original.—October term, 1939. No. 2, original, State of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, complainants, v. State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago, defendants. No. 3, original, State of Michigan, complainant, v. State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago et al., defendants. No. 4, original, State of New York, complainant, v. State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago et al., defendants. April 3, 1940]

PER CURIAM

By the decree of April 21, 1930 (281 U. S. 179, 696), the State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago were enjoined from diverting on and after December 31, 1938, any of the waters of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence system or watershed through the Chicago Drainage Canal or otherwise in excess of the annual average of 1,500 cubic feet per second in addition to domestic pumpage. That date was fixed as affording adequate time, upon a liberal estimate, for the completion of the entire system designed for sewage treatment, together with controlling works to prevent reversals of the Chicago River in times of storm.

The State of Illinois now seeks a temporary modification of the decree so as to permit an increase of the diversion to not more than 5,000 cubic feet per second, in addition to domestic pumpage, until December 31, 1942. The State submits its petition, not on behalf of the city of Chicago or the sanitary district, but at the instance of certain communities bordering on the Illinois Waterway, including Lockport and Joliet. The grounds for the application are that the system for sewage treatment has not yet been completed and will not be completed until the end of the year 1942, and that, in consequence, through the introduction of untreated sewage into the stream, an "obnoxious, noisome, filthy, insanitary, and dangerous condition to public health" exists along the Sanitary District Canal and the Illinois Waterway.

The State of Illinois has failed to show that it has provided all possible means at its command for the completion of the sewage-treatment system as required by the decree as specifically enlarged in 1933 (289 U. S. 395, 710). No adequate excuse has been presented for the delay. Nor has the State submitted appropriate proof that the conditions complained of constitute a menace to the health of the inhabitants of the complaining communities or that the State is not able to provide suitable measures to remedy or ameliorate the alleged conditions without an increase in the diversion of water from Lake Michigan in violation of the rights of the complainant States as adjudged by this Court.

In order, however, that the Court may be satisfied as to the actual condition of the Illinois Waterway by reason of the introduction of untreated sewage, and as to the actual effect, if any, of that condition upon the health of the inhabitants of the complaining communities, and also with respect to the feasibility of remedial or ameliorating measures available to the State of Illinois without an increase in the diversion of water from Lake Michigan, the Court appoints a special master to make a summary inquiry as to such condition, effect, and measures, and to report to this Court with all convenient speed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an article by Mr. George E. Sokolsky appearing in the New York Herald Tribune of April 1.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

GREENLAND

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, at this time I rise to ask the membership of the House if the Department of State is asleep.

Since the complete occupation of Denmark by Germany a very important question has arisen regarding Greenland, a Danish possession.

Greenland is a part of the Western Hemisphere. It constitutes about 850,000 square miles, an area almost as large as the United States from the Mississippi River to the Atlantic Ocean. Over half of it lies between the sixty-fifth and seventy-fifth parallels which also include the Territory of Alaska. Over half of Greenland is inhabitable throughout the year and more during part of the year.

Greenland is known to possess many valuable mineral deposits. Much of its value is still to be discovered.

Being a part of the Western Hemisphere and by location a part of the North American Continent, there is no question about the fact that Greenland comes within the scope of the Monroe Doctrine.

Comparatively speaking, Greenland is geographically closer to the United States and Canada than to Europe. It is only 6 hours by air from New York. It is an excellent location for the defense of the North Atlantic. Considering it as a naval base, an air base, a submarine base, this territory must not fall into the hands of any European country at the present time.

According to the reported statements of the British Ambassador, England does not plan to occupy Greenland unless Germany should attempt to take over the country. England apparently fails to recognize any interest of the United States in the matter. I believe that Greenland is of utmost importance to the United States. We have the whole of North America to defend—not England. It is our Navy and our Army and our Air Corps that will defend this continent—not England's.

I believe that this country should very definitely notify all European countries—and this includes England—that any attempt to occupy Greenland by any country will be considered an unfriendly act, and the United States will oppose any such action.

I believe this Congress should notify our dilatory State Department to establish a United States protectorate over Greenland until such time as Denmark regains her sovereignty and the question can be permanently settled.

At the present time England possesses more territory in the Western Hemisphere than the United States, and England will grab more while this country is asleep—unless we take immediate action. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

SOCIAL SECURITY, OLD AGE PENSIONS, AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, some time ago there was formed from the membership of the House a voluntary, nonpartisan committee to consider the problem of unemployment and its solution. Seventy Members of the House voluntarily joined this committee and have been working on the unemployment problem. Twelve subcommittees were formed, and these subcommittees have been meeting, securing information, making studies, and are now filing reports of their work with the main committee which has held many meetings. I am a member of the subcommittee on social security, old-age pensions, and unemployment. This subcommittee has for a considerable time been giving a careful study to this problem and by unanimous agreement it has arrived at some conclusions which, in my judgment, are most important in the consideration of the problem of unemployment, which I desire to call to the attention of my colleagues.

INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT

National recovery in the United States is entirely dependent upon an adequate and sustained purchasing power in the hands of the American people. If business and industry are to be assured of opportunity for the steady production of goods, with reasonable profits, and if labor is to be assured stable and sufficient employment, with living wages, purchasing power must keep pace with production.

Economic stability depends today almost entirely upon the expansion of demand. With adequate purchasing power available, demand for commodities and services will come naturally, and this demand will force increased production and, in turn, stabilize employment and make more work available.

Annually about 15 to 20 percent of currently received income is neither spent nor invested but is saved. This means that this amount is taken out of circulation, reducing the volume of active purchasing power and causing more unemployment. The main question is how, under the circumstances, are we going to consume all we can produce?

Part of our people can produce enough for all of the people. It is necessary that some group be enabled to consume without taking part in production. There are a considerable number of persons in the country who, through no fault of their own, cannot take part in production. In this age it is almost impossible for a man to get a job after he reaches the age of 60. This group over 60 years of age, who have toiled the longest, should not be deprived of taking part in the consumption of goods. They are the victims of an industrial system for which they are not responsible.

We owe a duty to our old folks and we can perform this duty by establishing a national annuity system on a pay-as-you-go basis, drawing upon some of the idle savings as means of financing it. This plan would take care of all groups that are American citizens over the age of 60. They would be paid by the Federal Government an amount determined by prorating the tax revenue derived from the special taxes levied for this purpose. The revenue should be derived from a broad general tax plus taxes which will operate to reduce the volume of idle savings and make more funds available for active consumer buying power.

ANALYSIS

Probably the central reason for unemployment today is failure of consumer buying power to keep pace with the production of goods and services. If we are to have a full employment, it is necessary for production of goods to be continuously balanced by an equivalent flow of consumer demand.

Certain facts in recent experience have important bearing on this question. These facts are as follows:

(1) Production tends to increase faster than employment.

(2) Under modern scientific methods of production, part of the people are able to produce enough for all the people.

(3) If, however, all the people do not consume their reasonable share of national production, inventories increase, production must be reduced, and even those currently employed will be in danger of losing their jobs.

(4) In the closing months of 1939 the Federal Reserve index of industrial production stood at the highest figure on record, and in the whole year of 1939 the production of goods and services equaled that of 1929. This, however, was accomplished with the employment of a million less people than were employed in 1929. It was inevitable under these circumstances for inventories to increase and for production itself to be curtailed so that today the index of production is once again falling.

(5) Various methods have been employed to try to keep consumer demand in line with production. Between 1922 and 1929 the consumers of the country had contracted a debt of between nine and eleven billion dollars for purchases which they had made on the installment plan. That is, they had attempted to purchase goods in an amount of $9,000,000,000 in excess of their incomes. This could not go on and it was one of the causes of the crash of 1929. It would have come much sooner had it not been for people buying goods beyond their incomes. They tried to stretch consumer demand to equal production. It couldn't be done.

(6) We find that persons 60 years of age and older, once they have become unemployed, find it almost impossible to get back to work again. There are various factors which cause this, among them those connected with industrial insurance and retirement systems. It is a fact, however, which must be taken practically into account.

(7) In various ways an attempt has been made to bring about better adjustment between production and consumer demand by enabling certain groups to consume even though they do not take part in production. Relief, retirement systems for Government employees, and certain categories of social security are examples of this.

OUTLINE OF PROPOSED ANNUITY SYSTEM

If it is necessary for some group in society to be enabled to consume its share of national production without contributing to that production, then, obviously, this group should be those people who have worked the longest and contributed most in the past to our national wealth and to the building up of our very efficient productive machine. This evidently indicates an old-age annuity system.

It is agreed by most economists that the central cause of unemployment today is that too large a proportion of our national income is saved and set aside in idle pools of money which are neither spent nor promptly invested by their owners. This would indicate the importance not only of stimulating investment but of accomplishing a transfer of a portion of the funds now held out of use in surplus savings into the stream of active consumer buying power. The best way to do this is by a system of taxation on the one hand and the payment of old-age annuity on the other. In our opinion, such a measure would contribute as much to a restoration of "confidence" as anything that could be done. For all these reasons we believe there should be a national system of pensions established in this country for those people who have passed the age where they can reasonably be expected to secure employment in industry. The particular features of such an old-age annuity system, we believe, should be as follows:

(1) It should be "pay as you go" system. That is to say, all money collected in taxes for the purpose of providing such pensions should be promptly disbursed to those eligible to receive it.

Principal criticism of the present social-security contributory system (title 2) is its serious deflationary influence. In the fiscal year 1940 both the unemployment-insurance system and the old-age annuity system will be taking money out of circulation at a net rate of $50,000,000 a month. That is, over the whole year those two programs will collect in tax $1,200,000,000 more than they pay out in benefits. This literally means that $1,200,000,000 worth of goods produced in 1940 will not be able to be sold unless the Government unbalances its Budget by $1,200,000,000 to compensate for this deflationary influence.

Furthermore, those population groups, such as farmers, farm laborers, domestic servants, and others who do not participate in any way in the benefits from either the unemployment-insurance or old-age annuity systems, must constantly pay a portion of the pay-roll taxes (indirectly through higher prices) to make possible the payments to the special groups which are covered. Therefore, our next point is:

(2) Pensions should be paid to all American citizens over 60 years of age who are retired from industry. (If desired to deny the pension to persons who clearly do not need it, it could be required that persons who are liable to the payment of a Federal income tax must return, at the time the tax is paid, any money received as pension payments during the previous year. This would leave the pension system as simple as possible, requiring no investigator staff or individual records.)

(3) There should be no difference in the amount of payments made by the Federal Government to people in different States. The States may, of course, supplement Federal payments as they see fit, but the basic pension system should be a straight Federal system supported by Federal taxes and with payments made directly by the Federal Government.

(4) The revenue for such a system should be derived first from broad general taxes whereby practically everyone in the population will pay at least a small amount to support this national system of old-age security. Another portion of the revenue should come from such taxes as will operate to reduce the volume of hoarded funds and to accomplish the necessary shift out of those holdings into active consuming buying power. The gross-income tax is an example of the first kind of tax, whereas income taxes, inheritance, estate, and gift taxes are examples of the second kind.

(5) The size of the pension should be determined by prorating the tax revenue derived from the special taxes levied for this purpose among all those eligible to receive the pension. But the policy should be to fix the tax rates at such a point as to yield to each pension recipient his proportionate share of the national income.

Such a system as we have outlined would avoid the complicated system of bookkeeping now required, both on the part of the individual employers and on the part of the Social Security Board itself. It would make possible elimination of the pay-roll taxes and of the attempt to maintain individual records on upward of 40,000,000 workers. It would make possible the inclusion of all occupational groups of citizens and it would bring to an end the serious deflationary influence of the current attempt to accumulate reserve funds.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with these studies of old-age security and unemployment, I draw attention to the fact that the old-age insurance and unemployment-insurance provisions of the Social Security Act have not worked out satisfactorily. I do not at this time desire to take the time of the House to discuss the failures of the Social Security Act in this respect, but I do call attention to a brief summary of the deflationary features of the act which are a serious handicap to economic recovery, and instead of aiding in the solution of the unemployment problem only increase the unemployment rolls:

OPERATION OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

I. INTRODUCTION

America suffers today from an acute deficiency of consumer buying power relative to her power to produce. The operations of the Social Security Act must be considered in the light of the above statement.

In 1937 the effects of the pay-roll taxes were first felt. No doubt this contributed to the sharp "recession" of that year.

In 1938 tax collections (for old-age annuities and unemployment insurance) exceeded benefit outpayments by $1,000,000,000.

In 1939 approximately the same figures.

In 1940 about $1,200,000,000 in excess of tax collections over benefits.

II. SIZE OF RESERVE FUNDS

Representing excess of collections over payments (in millions)

	Dec. 31, 1939	June 30, 1940	Dec. 31, 1940	June 30, 1941
Old-age insurance	$1,442	$1,753	$2,032	$2,333
Unemployment insurance	1,510	1,797	2,097	2,382
Total	2,952	3,550	4,129	4,715

Each fund will thus account for a deflation of about $50,000,000 each month.

III. SUMMARY OF 1½ YEARS, DEC. 31, 1939, TO JUNE 30, 1941

(a) Old-age insurance

Collections of taxes	$941,000,000
Interest accumulation	108,000,000
Total	1,049,000,000
Benefits paid out	158,000,000
Net deflation	891,000,000
Cost of administration per year	43,000,000

III. SUMMARY OF 1 1-2 YEARS, DEC. 31, 1939, TO JUNE 30, 1941—Con.

(b) Unemployment insurance

Collection of taxes	$1,482,000,000
Benefits paid (State controlled)	610,000,000
Net deflation	872,000,000

(c) Total net deflation for both funds for 1½-year period

Old-age insurance	$891,000,000
Unemployment insurance	872,000,000
Total net deflation	1,763,000,000

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter and resolution from the Los Angeles Building Trades Council, of Los Angeles County, concerning the W. P. A.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

AIRPLANE CONTRACTS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, step by step the war moves toward our doorstep or we move toward it. During the hearings before the Appropriations Committee for the War Department members of the committee were told that delays in the delivery on Government orders of aircraft were subject to a penalty of 15 percent. In answer to some direct questions on that point, it also developed that foreign purchasing commissions could get priority in the delivery of planes by paying their contract price plus a bonus to cover the penalty. General Arnold, Chief of the Air Corps, testified, however, that he believed the American manufacturers were patriotic enough not to delay our planes in that manner.

It develops now, however, that their patriotism will not be tested. The administration has not only decided to release certain new ships for sale but will change the delivery dates, surrendering, in effect, the 15-percent penalty. In order to determine the facts in the situation, I wrote General Arnold last week, asking specifically what effect the new policy would have on the payment of the penalty for liquidated damages. The nub of the situation is given in this sentence from a letter by him to me under date of April 13:

> The liquidated-damage clauses as now included in existing contracts will not be deleted, but the computation of monetary penalty to be imposed will be computed upon the revised delivery dates as included in the changed order, and not the delivery dates as guaranteed in the original contract.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the Government by changing delivery dates will surrender the 15 percent and ease the cost to the foreign purchasers by that much.

The step may be legal. It may even be wise to let today's belligerents try out these planes which a year ago we were told we must have immediately. I am not passing judgment on that at this time, but the revision of delivery dates for our planes in such a way as to reduce by 15 percent the cost that foreign purchasers would otherwise have paid is definitely compromising the cash-and-carry, no-credit-aid policy which was advertised last autumn.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that it is not a step toward our involvement in the war.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, on last Thursday as part of his Reorganization Plan No. IV, the President proposed among other things to transfer the functions of the Civil Aeronautics Authority back to the Department of Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most rapidly growing and most important industries in this country is the aviation industry.

It was a turmoil and there was accident after accident, lives lost by the thousands in the years in which the aviation industry was growing up. I strenuously protest this proposed transfer back to the Department of Commerce, and further in my remarks I propose to cite statistics indicating the decrease in accidents in the aviation industry in this country and in air transportation brought about in large measure by the Air Safety Board. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the Civil Aeronautics Authority together with the Air Safety Board started to function August 22, 1938, at that time taking over the duties formerly performed by the so-designated Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce. I do not wish to detract from much valuable work done by the personnel of the Bureau of Air Commerce. In fact much of its personnel found its way into the new agency.

I do contend, however, and in that contention I am borne out generally by leaders in aviation, that this is a new method of transportation that has little in common with other forms of transportation. In the construction of its operating equipment, it has little in common with the construction of the media of other forms of transportation. It was felt proper, therefore, that aeronautics had reached a stage in our national life when it was entitled to separate recognition and regulation.

It took 4 long years of earnest effort on the part of Senator MCCARRAN and others to get through the legislative act creating the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board. This set-up was somewhat original in several of its features. In the first place, it separated executive functions from judicial and legislative ones, putting the former in the hands of an Administrator, and, in addition, setting up an independent Safety Board charged solely with the duty of investigation and prevention of accidents. The Civil Aeronautics Authority itself is nonpartisan in its make-up, and from the day of its inception has in the main been manned by a competent staff of highly trained experts, in most cases active pilots of many years' experience.

This regulatory organization has been in operation now approximately 20 months, and let us look at the record to see just what it has accomplished in that time. On March 26 last, for the first time in history, our commercial air lines completed 1 full year of scheduled operation, transporting more than 2,000,000 persons over a total number of air-line miles flown of 87,325,145 without a single fatality to operating personnel, passengers, or even bystanders. The passenger-miles flown total 814,906,250. At the exact moment this record had been established at 3:50 a. m., March 26, there were then in the air some 208 air-line planes in actual flight, carrying approximately 3,000 passengers.

I want to include in the record at this point, Mr. Speaker, a chart showing what a remarkable increase in safety this represented over the preceding two 1-year periods.

Domestic air carrier operations and accident statistics for the yearly periods Mar. 27, 1937, to Mar. 26, 1938; Mar. 27, 1938, to Mar. 26, 1939; and Mar. 27, 1939, to Mar. 26, 1940

	For 12 months ending Mar. 26—		1940
	1938	1939
Miles flown	67,002,154	71,080,308	87,325,145
Total passengers carried	1,157,738	1,389,818	2,028,817
Total passenger miles	503,484,761	565,220,938	814,906,250
Fatal accidents	4	5	0
Fatal passenger accidents	4	5	0
Passenger fatalities	32	20	0
Crew fatalities	10	8	0
Miles flown per fatal accident	16,750,539	14,216,062	———
Miles flown per fatal passenger accident	16,750,539	14,216,062	———
Passenger miles flown per passenger fatality	15,733,899	28,261,047	———
Miles flown per crew fatality	6,700,215	8,885,039	———

The President of the United States was one of the first to congratulate those who had made this remarkable record possible. In a letter to Chairman Robert H. Hinckley, of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, he made this statement:

Looking behind this record, in which we can all take such pardonable pride, we find it has been achieved through cooperation and teamwork between the personnel of the air-transport lines and workers in the Federal Government. I trust that this cooperation may continue with like satisfactory results through the years ahead.

And yet, after that recognition only 3 weeks ago, it is now proposed by our Executive that this organization be cut up and broken up and its functions transferred back to the Department of Commerce where it will again be subject to political manipulation.

Mr. Speaker, this was truly a remarkable record. Let me quote an announcement by Mr. Hinckley under date of March 26:

It was not accomplished at a sacrifice of the services offered by the air lines to the American public. Quite the contrary. During the 12 months just ended our common carriers of the air flew more than 87,000,000 miles. That is equivalent to flying 10 times around the world at the equator every day of the year. It is roughly equal to the total of air-line flying logged during the same period in all the rest of the world put together. It is 16,000,000 more miles of flying than was ever done in this country in any preceding year.

The domestic air-line system of the United States is the only one in the world that flies as much by night as by day. This past year it flew almost as many miles each 24 hours during the winter as during the best weather of last summer. In fact, it set its all-time monthly record in December. Yet, in spite of this intense activity, not one passenger, not one crew member, not one bystander was so much as seriously injured through the operation of this transport system.

It has been said by the President that objections to this transfer are "a lot of spinach." Let me say to you that the men who actually made this record, the men who sit in the cockpits of these airplanes, who flew night and day, through good weather and bad, the men who carried their aluminum-clad cargoes of air-line passengers, air-line express, and air-line mail safely through to their destination seem to feel differently about this unexpected attempt to revert to past practices.

Yesterday I received the following telegram from Mr. David L. Behncke, president of the Air Line Pilots Association:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16, 1940.

Hon. FRED BRADLEY,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

In this day and age so many startling things are constantly happening that we have become accustomed to the unusual, and we are not easily startled or aroused. The air-line pilots, due to the nature of their work, are not easily excitable, yet only a few days ago, when the President announced his fourth reorganization plan abolishing the Air Safety Board and stripping the new Air Authority of its identity and independence, and proposed that air-accident investigation and civil air regulation generally be placed back under the Department of Commerce, the pilots were not only startled but they were utterly flabbergasted. The regulation of air transportation and civil aviation by the Department of Commerce is something that the pilots, and, in fact, most everyone in the industry, look back upon with abhorrence. It is not even a pleasant story to recount. Crash upon crash, needless sacrificing of human life. During this dark period the pilots lost 146 of their number by reason of crash deaths. And a startling total of 473 persons lost their lives in air crashes. Everyone, especially Congress, fought long and tirelessly to free the industry from this era of chaos and create an independent agency to give the industry the kind of regulation and air-accident investigation procedure that it so sorely needed. The pilots pointed out that safety was vital to the success of the industry, and that accident investigation would have to be done by an independent air safety board, free from all influence and control by those who made the industry's regulations. This Congress did when it passed the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938; we all know the results. Crashes were cut to a minimum. There have been no fatalities in the past 12 months. When Congress established the Air Safety Board it restored public confidence in air travel with one stroke. If the President's reorganization plan is approved to place regulation and air-accident investigation back under the Department of Commerce, public confidence will be destroyed, because where humans' own lives are involved they have a long memory. The line pilots to a man plead with you that you do everything possible to prevent this. I am explaining further in a special-delivery letter today. Your cooperation is respectfully and earnestly solicited.

AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION,

Mr. Speaker, I have been in personal contact with a number of airport managers, with commercial pilots not on the air lines, with private pilots, and with private-plane owners. Not one of these people actively interested in the flying business of this Nation look upon this plan with favor. Not one of them but fears that it will cause confusion and, perhaps, chaos in the aviation industry. Aviation is too important to this Nation in peacetime as well as in wartime to upset it again at this moment when things have been running so smoothly. I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that it has been said that the air-line operators themselves and even the airplane manufacturers have not voiced their objections. It has been my experience that one seldom voices an objection when he is effectively muzzled. When these operators and manufacturers have to look to the Government for much of their financial support, it is not difficult to realize why they must of necessity remain quiet. Give them a chance to continue to operate in safety, to continue to build up confidence in the minds of the traveling public, and they will be able to continue to operate at a profit without dependence on our Treasury for funds—and they might then be able to speak more freely.

Mr. Speaker, I am vigorously opposed to this part of reorganization plan No. IV. I propose later to discuss its possible effects on commercial nonscheduled operation and on private and sport flying, but for the moment let me say to you that we have no right to tamper with the safety of our air-line passengers or their pilots. The remarkable safety record that they have achieved over the past year speaks for itself. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on today after the conclusion of the business for the day and other special orders I may address the House for 45 minutes on the subject of H. R. 9000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

DIVERSION OF LAKE MICHIGAN WATERS BY CHICAGO

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] just referred to the decision of the Supreme Court in regard to the waters of Lake Michigan. Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis was the district judge before whom this case came on for hearing in Chicago. I had lunch with that most interesting gentleman in Chicago last summer. He took me out from the Wrigley Building and showed me the lake and the locks of the drainage canal. I referred to the fact that he was the judge of the United States district court in that case. He said, "GUYER, that was the easiest decision I ever rendered. There were experts there who said that if you take water out of the lake the level of the lake would not be affected, and there were others who said that if you took water out of the lake it lowered its level. I decided that if you took water out it was not in." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

THE DECENNIAL CENSUS

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, we have been entertained in recent weeks with a discussion of the census and the questions involved in the taking of the census. The matter to me seemed to assume undue proportions. The public, nevertheless, took great interest in it down my way, as in other districts.

It has occurred to me that this matter ought to be fought out a little further in advance of the taking of the census and in advance of the campaigns that occur in the year of the decennial census. So I have introduced a resolution requiring that the Census Department file at least 1 year in advance of the taking of the next decennial census a list of the questions intended to be asked of the citizens of the country, that list to be filed with the Senate and the House and to be made public. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

AMAZING STORY OF TREASON THAT OPENED NORWAY TO GERMANS

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to read an article that shocked me and I know shocked the majority of the people in the United States. That was the true story of what happened in Norway and what can happen in a democracy. This is contained in the story by Leland Stowe. I ask unanimous consent—I have never asked consent before to insert a newspaper article in the RECORD—that this article may appear in full at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think articles of this size should go in the Appendix. We are going to take up a very important bill here directly and I do not think these long articles should be put in the RECORD ahead of the proceedings on that bill. The majority leader has announced that policy in respect to these extensions.

Mr. FERGUSON. I modify my request, Mr. Speaker, but I want to read this one paragraph:

> Norway's capital and great seaports were not captured by armed force. They were seized with unparalleled speed by means of a gigantic conspiracy which must undoubtedly rank among the most audacious, most perfectly oiled political plots of the past century.
>
> By bribery and extraordinary infiltration on the part of Nazi agents and by treason on the part of a few highly placed Norwegian civilian and defense officials, the German dictatorship built a Trojan horse inside of Norway.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks and place the entire article in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain portions of an approved report from the conference on unemployment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to announce to the House that there is a map of the North American Continent in the lobby——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentlewoman from Massachusetts desire to submit a consent request? The Chair cannot recognize the gentlewoman to speak for another minute.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I do not want a minute to speak. There is a map in the lobby showing——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman is not presenting a unanimous-consent request.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 72]

Bates, Ky.	Cartwright	Darrow	Elliott
Bell	Casey, Mass.	Dies	Gifford
Buckley, N. Y.	Cole, N. Y.	Dingell	Gilchrist
Burgin	Connery	Ditter	Green
Carter	Crosser	Durham	Healey

Hoffman	Lemke	Sacks	Taylor
Hook	Maloney	Scrugham	Thomas, N. J.
Horton	Massingale	Shafer, Mich.	Tibbott
Houston	Merritt	Sheridan	Ward
Jarman	Murdock, Utah	Somers, N. Y.	Wheat
Jennings	O'Day	Starnes, Ala.	Whelchel
Keefe	Patton	Steagall	White, Idaho
Kelly	Plumley	Sullivan
Kirwan	Rabaut	Sweeney

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and seventy-five Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

CREATION OF BOARD OF INSPECTORS, MIAMI, FLA.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of an order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to return to the House the bill of the Senate (S. 2661) entitled "An act to create a board of inspectors, Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, at Miami, Fla.," together with the accompanying message.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the gentleman if this is the bill that was presented to the House yesterday?

Mr. BLAND. This bill was considered by the House on Monday under a unanimous-consent request and when the bill was considered the Senate bill was taken from the desk and substituted for the House bill. The bill was amended, but inadvertently the Senate bill was sent back with an erroneous message and we want to recall it in order to make the message conform exactly to what the House did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

There was no objection.

The order was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 8 (E) OF SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3800) to amend section 8 (e) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and request a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed the following conferees: Mr. JONES of Texas, Mr. FULMER, Mr. DOXEY, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. KINZER.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a couple of letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER]?

There was no objection.

THE LOGAN-WALTER BILL

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6324, with Mr. KERR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the enormous volume, variety, and extent of administrative regulation is amazingly portrayed in the advertisement now being sent out by the Superintendent of Documents, offering for purchase the Code of Federal Regulations.

This code has been compiled under the provisions of the Federal Register Act (50 Stat. 304). These provisions call for filing—

> With the administrative committee a complete codification of all documents which, in the opinion of the agency, have general applicability and legal effect and which have been issued or promulgated by such agency and are in force and effect and relied upon by the agency as authority for, or invoked or used by it in the discharge of, any of its functions or activities on June 1, 1938.

The Superintendent of Documents states that this entire Code of Federal Regulation will be available sometime during April 1940.

He states:

> The Code will embrace all documents of the various administrative agencies which had general applicability and legal effect on June 1, 1938. It will consist of 50 titles, bound in 17 books, each book containing approximately 1,000 to 1,200 pages.

The Superintendent states:

> The term "document" means any Presidential proclamation or Executive order and any order, regulation, rule, certificate, code of fair competition, license, notice, or similar instrument issued, prescribed, or promulgated by a Federal agency.

This gives a fair idea of the enormous body of administrative law affecting the rights and property of the citizen, promulgated under statutory authority by the various boards, bureaus, commissions, and agencies of the Government, which the Walter-Logan bill seeks to bring under uniform procedure and review.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts from the code and certain statements made by the Superintendent of Documents.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill, H. R. 6324, commonly known as the Logan-Walter bill, is, in my opinion, one of the most important bills we have considered during this session of Congress. No measure has had more careful study by the Congress over a period of years than has this bill. It has been endorsed by the American Bar Association, the American Federation of Labor, the National Grange, and many business groups throughout the United States.

During the last few years there has been a mushroom growth in the field of administrative law which has brought into being hundreds of boards, bureaus, agencies, and commissions, and we have rapidly become a nation governed by decrees, rules, and regulations of these agencies, rather than governed by law. Consequently we have become a nation governed, to a large extent, by men rather than by laws.

To remedy this situation, this bill simply proposes that certain orders, regulations, and decrees issued by executive agencies shall be subject to appeal to a court of law. Under these circumstances, any person who feels he is aggrieved by one of these orders or regulations has the right to have his day in court. This is simply following out the fundamental purpose of our Government as established under the Constitution that every person shall have his day in court and equal justice under the law.

I, for one, do not believe in the infallibility of the bureaucratic agencies, nor do I believe that any governmental agency should be the judge of its own case. If it is a choice of my rights being passed upon by the courts or by the bureaucrats, I place my faith in the courts of this Nation.

This bill merely requires that these agencies act within the powers granted to them by the basic laws that created them, and that they shall not abuse the powers that Congress granted to them. As is stated in the report of the Judiciary Committee, "the law must provide that the Governors shall be governed and the regulators shall be regulated, if our present form of government is to endure." To me this principle is basically sound, and I have heard no valid or logical argument against it.

About the only argument that opponents of this bill have used is that this law would permit dilatory suits and delays. May I call attention to the language of the bill on page 14, section 6, where it is provided:

> The courts shall have jurisdiction and power to impose damages in any case where the decision of the agency or independent agency is affirmed and the court finds that there was no substantial basis for the petition for review. In all cases the cost on review shall be allowed the prevailing party after final judgment, to be collected according to law.

This, in my opinion, is a complete answer to such specious arguments. Those who oppose this bill apparently prefer to be governed by bureaucrats rather than by law and the orderly processes of our courts and do not wish any restraint placed upon these bureaus that will confine their powers to those granted by the Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I earnestly hope that this bill will pass, as I firmly believe it will help preserve the democratic processes of our Government and will tend to correct many of the abuses created by bureaucratic agencies. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL].

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my appreciation to the members of the committee for allowing me a limited amount of time, even though I am not a member of this committee. At the outset I wish to disclose that I am unable to yield because of my limited time and will consequently have to refuse to yield for any question or remarks.

I wish to take this opportunity to report a recent incident which was brought to my attention and which I believe will challenge every Member of this House and of the Senate to a realization that not only his prerogatives but his self-respect are being encroached upon. I say this because I am absolutely in favor of the passage of the Walter-Logan bill.

In a conversation recently with two under officials of the Bureau of the Census, it was mentioned that the Senator from New Hampshire was guilty of interference with and trespass upon that department. In answer, another under official made this remark, "Well, the Senator from New Hampshire is an old fossil."

I am not disputing the right of any citizen throughout the land to make such a reference as he wishes to any Member of this House or of the United States Senate, and that is his privilege, but I do believe it is entirely unbecoming for any member of any governmental bureau to cast aspersions upon any Member of this Congress. I believe it is high time that this Frankenstein which we as a Congress, have created, be controlled so that it will not rise up and smite the very functions of this House and of the United States Senate. You have all heard of Dr. Cyclops. You know it was his custom to make men minuscule beings of an inferior quality. I do not wish to compare the executive department to Dr. Cyclops, but I will say here and now that the methods that have been introduced and used have been strikingly like the methods used by that doctor.

It is high time that this octopus, to use the simile of the gentleman from Mississippi, be regulated so that its vicious and far-reaching tentacles can be controlled in the affairs of this Government. I believe it is high time that such a measure as the Logan-Walter bill be passed. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, my objection to this bill can be summed up in this phrase: You cannot give the same prescription to every patient, and just so, you cannot prescribe the same remedy for all the diverse 130 departments of Government.

I should like in the brief time allotted to me to point out something of the ambiguity which emanates from this bill. If you will read section 7, concerning appeals to interagency appellate media and appeal to the courts, you will find that it reads as follows:

> Nothing contained in this act shall operate to modify or repeal any rights or procedure as now provided by law for any person to have his controversy with the United States heard and determined in any district court or circuit court of appeals of the United States.

This is what is known in law as a saving clause. It tends to save the judicial appellate rights you now have, for example, in the Veterans' Bureau, in the Department of Agriculture, in the Labor Department, in the Examining and Retiring Board of the Navy Department, and in the Board of Review of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and a few other bureaus or agencies. That is all very well and good, but it does not meet the problem for two reasons:

First. It does not relate at all to procedure within the agencies. This bill, as you may recall, not only permits an appeal to the court but as a condition precedent to the appeal to the court you appeal to the interagency board. This saving clause, however, does not relate to the procedure within the agencies and is only directed to court review; consequently it constitutes no answer to the objection that the bill would result in completely scrapping such procedures within the various Government departments and agencies as now exist, and many of which, especially in the old-line departments like the Veterans' Bureau, have been found entirely adequate and satisfactory.

Second. As to court review, the section creates an additional ambiguity rather than dispelling ambiguity that would exist if the section were not in the bill. Does it mean that a person aggrieved by the decision of an agency may secure a court review under procedure now existing in cases where such review is accorded and that he may also, in addition, secure a court review in the manner provided in the bill? In other words, is there a double-barreled remedy? If so, does he have the option of pursuing one or the other procedure? That would seem to be an unnecessary source of additional confusion. It also demonstrates the impracticability of dealing with the matter of court review by means of a single pattern for all agencies. Why, for example, should there be two types of court review as to some agencies and only one type as to others? And yet I firmly believe that will be the effect of this bill. I have tried to work out an amendment, but the subject matter is so intricate and difficult that you cannot adequately within this bill's framework fashion an amendment to meet the exigencies of the situation. For that reason I do honestly hope that we will wait until the Attorney General makes his report on this bill and which report will undoubtedly outline different procedures for appeal in each different class of bureaus or departments or agencies.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time on this side.

I yield myself this time in order to endeavor to answer the argument advanced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]. It is, indeed, a novel one. Certainly, no language in any statute could be any plainer than section 7 of this bill. Under that language it is contemplated that no right that any citizen has to have his matter tried in the courts, as provided by an existing statute, shall be affected. It does not provide an additional remedy, and under the terms of this bill, H. R. 6324, if the procedure in the act is adopted, then, of course, if a citizen goes into court under existing law, it is a matter of res adjudicata, and the court would certainly not pass on the same matter twice.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield, gladly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Assuming the necessity for the passage of this or similar legislation, what would be the objection to waiting and acting upon the matter when we get a complete report from the Attorney General concerning the investigation he is now making on this very subject?

Mr. WALTER. May I say to the gentleman that we have been promised this report for a long while. The committee does not believe there will be a report made for some time to come, and may I say to the gentleman in this connection, in an ad interim report made by the Attorney General, he states:

> We are much encouraged by knowledge that some agency made conscious of procedural problems by the committee's inquiries have already substantially altered existing practice whether as a result of their own thinking or in accordance with informal suggestions of the committee or its staff.

I say that if the existence of a committee that functions through one young college professor has improved the administrative processes, then, a fortiori, the mere existence of this law will improve the administrative processes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND].

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the chairman of my subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], for his patriotism and Americanism in preparing and introducing a bill of this character, as I believe it is one of the greatest steps toward returning representative government to the people.

Mr. George Washington, in his farewell address, advised his young Nation and warned it of the pitfalls of a future. In his farewell address, in referring to the maintaining of the three branches of government, he said:

> It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism.

Let us not forget that this country, under the Constitution, has overcome most obstacles, and in the shortest time in the history of any country has become the greatest nation on earth.

Let us stop for a minute and consider what we have done with that sacred trust placed in our hands by the founders of this Nation. Let no one think that I am criticizing in any way our form of government, because I believe that our system is the finest in the world, and I am firmly of the opinion that if anyone does not agree with it or desires to change it or is dissatisfied with the constitutional provisions he should leave this country and go to the nation he believes is more to his liking. We fondly look on the United States as a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, with very few realizing that there are over 2,000,000 persons on the Federal pay roll protected by civil service, and I firmly believe in civil service, but who are subservient to no one but their immediate superior who, in practically every instance, is under the executive part of the Government, and are not directly or indirectly responsible to any citizen of this country. In that entire 2,000,000 we, the people, have a choice of only 3 directly and 2 indirectly. We elect 2 Senators, 1 Representative, and indirectly a President and a Vice President; so while this Government is theoretically of the people and by the people, there are only the 3 who are directly voted for by the people and who are subservient to the citizens. It is for the citizens to say their representatives are the type and the kind they wish to be their only contact with a government which partially controls their everyday life and their desires, or soon there will be no contact, and the Government will become all powerful and wind up in a distinct bureaucracy.

In the past few years, and particularly under the present administration, Congress, with the increasing complexity of governmental functions and industry, has gradually delegated to the administration, through agencies, the power to regulate industry, agriculture, radio, commerce, and many other activities of our everyday life. As these commissions and agencies have been formed Congress gave them the right to make rules and regulations for the governing of the particular functions for which they were created, and, as it was necessary to enforce such regulations, Congress further delegated the power to punish for a violation of such rules and regulations; but in order to punish it was necessary to create a quasi-judicial power in the agencies, so we have the unusual situation of an agency of the Government investigating an alleged violation, and when satisfied that a violation has occurred the same agency prosecutes and acts as judge and jury. There are 123 such agencies in the Federal Government today, from which there are only 7 from which an appeal to a higher tribunal can be taken, and then only on a question of law—a strange procedure in a democratic form of government, striking right at the root of the basis upon which this Government was formed, and fast becoming a government by the government and not by the people, and on the verge of the despotism Mr. Washington warned us against.

The bill now under consideration returns to the people the rights given under the Constitution for a trial by a fair and impartial court, and takes away from the Executive the heretofore delegated power to legislate and to judge, and places the judging back in the courts where the Constitution said it should lie.

We, who represent the people, should be most careful with the sacred trust which is ours to maintain and keep, as we stated in our oath of office, the Constitution as well as to maintain the rights of the individual citizen so that this Government will truly be of the people, by the people, and for the people.

It was most interesting to read a report forwarded to me on February 3, of the Attorney General's committee on administrative procedure, which was formed by the Attorney General to study the effects of the Walter-Logan bill now under consideration, which, after 11 pages, containing very little information but merely asking for more time to consider it, I noted among the members on the committee, Mr. A. T. Vanderbilt, a resident of Essex County, N. J., with whom I am very well acquainted, and who was president of the American Bar Association the year when this Walter-Logan bill was considered and approved by that association. I have a letter of February 9, from Mr. Vanderbilt where, among other things, he says:

> The item I have mentioned refers you to page 518 [of the annual report of the American Bar Association (vol. 64; 1939)] where you will see that, after a full day's discussion and following an amendment offered by me, a resolution to approve the bill was adopted, along with an amendment authorizing the committee to present a bill in substantially the form approved to the proper legislative representatives, with power to the committee to make any verbal or editorial changes found by it to be necessary or desirable. That stands as the action of the association, and if there is any one thing on which the American Bar Association is in agreement I think it is in their support of this measure.

I think this speaks for itself in at least indicating that while his name appeared as a member of the committee criticizing this bill in the report of the Attorney General, nevertheless, Mr. Vanderbilt, in all probability, was not present when the report was written, nor subscribed to it.

I hope and trust that there will be a sufficient number of good Americans in Congress who will believe in the Constitutional system of government and vote in favor of the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE.]

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, one argument has been made against this bill which I think should be, in part at least, answered, and that has to do with the exceptions provided in section 7. I wish you would turn to page 15 of the bill, where the exceptions are noted, and I wish to advise the Members of the House that every one of these exceptions has been carefully considered by the committee, and particularly by the subcommittee which considered this bill in the first instance.

I would like to point out now the considerations that were reviewed by the subcommittee in making these exceptions. The first exception is that matters concerning or relating to the conduct of military or naval operations are out of the bill. Now why is that exception here? We know that under the Constitution Congress declares war, but the actual conduct of the armies and the navies is an executive function and Congress and the courts have very little, if anything, to do with it.

The same is true of the next exception, and going on down to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was mentioned here Monday, it has been very truthfully pointed out by the majority leader that we do not provide the same procedure here as has been provided in the Interstate Commerce Commission. I trust, however, we will keep in mind that this bill has two great objectives, first, we wish to provide in every tribunal a full and fair hearing; second, we wish to provide, so far as possible, a limited, but adequate, review in the courts. It was my opinion, at least, and I believe the opinion of the subcommittee, that this has already been done in the law and the decisions involving the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The same thing is true of the Federal Trade Commission.

Now, with respect to the conduct of the Department of State, the control of foreign affairs, of course, is in the hands of the President and he operates largely through the Secretary of State. Congress and the courts have little to do with it.

Going on down the list there was mentioned, "Any matter concerning or relating to the internal revenue." Taxes are collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. We have provided there by law for appeals. A taxpayer, as you know, may pay any tax illegally assessed under protest and sue in the courts to recover it or he may appeal to the Board of Tax Appeals. Other taxes are collected through the customs, and in regard to customs, patent, trade-mark, copyright, or longshoremen and harbor workers' laws, we have now provided for full and fair hearings by a tribunal and for a broader appeal than is allowed in this law.

Now, I suggest to the Members that I am not claiming these exceptions are what they should be, but I trust before we make further exceptions or destroy these exceptions which have been carefully considered, we give careful consideration to each particular case.

In this connection I know that some statement has been recently made by the General Accounting Office. We had hearings on this bill. All of these tribunals were given an opportunity to appear. I do not recall that the objections now being made were made by the General Accounting Office. There is some exception in the bill relating to the General Accounting Office.

I suggest that this bill has yet to pass the Senate. It will be in conference. A further study can be made so far as the objections made by the General Accounting Office are concerned, and I would prefer that that should be done rather than make hasty exceptions.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman has stated the procedure we have set up for the various agencies that the gentleman has referred to.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is right.

Mr. COCHRAN. Have you not also provided for an appeal from the decision of the General Accounting Office to the Court of Claims, therefore why should not the General Accounting Office be exempt the same as the Interstate Commerce Commission and others?

Mr. GWYNNE. Before we make up our minds on that, let us read the portion of the bill that has to do with appeals now to be handled in the Court of Claims. That may satisfy the gentleman that no further amendment is necessary.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why is not the Security and Exchange Commission excepted?

Mr. GWYNNE. Why should it be? I see no reason why it should be. The Securities and Exchange Commission appeared before the subcommittee and they pointed out to us that the part of the bill they objected to was that portion requiring rules to be made within 1 year and they advised us that they have been functioning 4 years, and have not made any rules or regulations. I submit that an organization that cannot make rules and regulations within 4 years has something wrong with it.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. Yes.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman made reference to various exceptions. The Department of Agriculture, however, is not excepted, except in one instance and that is where it has to do with the purchase or sale of agricultural products.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is correct.

Mr. LEAVY. I am wondering why, if a farmer feels aggrieved at a regulation concerning the grading of his wheat or his cotton or any other product, he should not be permitted likewise to come under the provisions of this act if it will do what its proponents claim it will do.

Mr. GWYNNE. Let me say to the gentleman as to that very exception, I think that is one that might be questioned, and I hope the gentleman, if he is familiar with the system of the department at present will give us a little light on that.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. I want to know how long we have been waiting on the general committee to study out and work on this report. How long has it been at work?

Mr. GWYNNE. They were working at least as long as the subcommittee has. They were appointed some time last year, and the principal thing they have done so far is to make a study of these various departments. I think we have made a full study of the subject.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am happy to support this much-needed legislation. It is sound. It is worthy. It is constructive. It comes as a welcome remedy to relieve an existing ailment—an ailment that in the past decade has increased in its intensity by leaps and bounds. The steady growth of our Nation and the complex problems of trade and commerce, industrial relations, finance, and conservation of natural resources made it necessary for Congress to legislate generally on these subjects while delegating to specific commissions and bureaus legislative power to fill in the details. During the past few years the demand for social security, the development of air transportation and the invention of radio communication are pertinent examples of additional problems that have confronted us requiring national regulation. We now have more than 130 governmental agencies exercising quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial functions. While I believe there are entirely too many of these bureaus, agencies, and commissions, I realize that many of them are here to stay, and a proper and efficient administration of our National Government demands that they shall stay. The necessity for the legislation contained in the pending bill comes not from the delegation of legislative power, but from the abuse of that power after it has been delegated. Some, but not all of the agencies to whom quasi-legislative authority has been granted, have gone so far to the extreme in their construction of public laws that the intent of Congress has been thwarted and the Constitution itself has been disregarded. The rights of individual citizens have been arrogantly disregarded. It is to remedy this evil that the Logan-Walter bill is before us today. It seeks not to hamstring or embarrass any agency or department of the Government in the exercise of its legitimate functions. It merely insures the promulgation of rules and procedure in a uniform and orderly manner and permits the United States circuit court of appeals to determine if such rules and regulations transgress the Constitution and the statutes of the United States. The bill likewise provides for a review by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the decision of any agency or independent agency exercising quasi-judicial powers and if such decision is frivolous, erroneous, unlawful, unfair, or not founded upon fact it may be set aside and reversed. This is as it should be and no person who believes in fair play can seriously object to this feature of the bill.

On the whole, Mr. Chairman, it is a progressive step forward in the development of administrative efficiency. The citizen will have more confidence in his Government when he knows that no matter how humble he may be, he still has his day in court. It will encourage fairness and consideration for individual rights and discourage arrogance and tyrannical despotism. It will substitute for the rule of man, the rule of law.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the Walter bill is worthy of our support as a reasonable, timely, and desirable effort to protect our citizens against the arbitrary and ruthless administration of our many departments, bureaus, and other agencies.

For the past several years those who have been engaged in the practice of law have observed the growing size and importance of the field of administrative law. With this rapid and extensive growth of administrative agencies, it is inevitable that we should come face to face with the problem of control of these agencies with a view to curbing their usurpation of the legislative and judicial functions.

As I view our problem today of safeguarding our citizenry against the possible usurpation of legislative and judicial powers by administrative bodies, there is no desire on the part of the sponsors of the bill here under consideration to abolish or even seriously restrict their functioning. The struggle is rather to safeguard against undue encroachment upon the functions of Congress and the judiciary and to do so through bringing the administrative bodies within the purview of judicial review.

It is true that this proposed plan would require of our various administrative bodies a more careful proceeding, which, however, would not involve serious delay. I am not at all alarmed by the hue and cry that the extension of judicial review of administrative findings and decisions would paralyze the functions of government. Furthermore, the preservation of individual rights, and the importance of the judicial review of any administrative action affecting those rights, places the burden of proof upon the advocates of unrestricted expansion and extension of administrative agencies that such unrestricted expansion and extension is justifiable.

As I view the bill here under discussion, it is a measure primarily designed to assure the citizen of fair play when he appears before any of the Government's administrative agencies. That objective is far more worthy of our support than speed of administration for speed's sake only. The bugaboo of delay and congestion can largely be dissipated if the administrative agencies themselves set their hearts upon achieving efficient administration under the restrictions of this bill. There is a vast difference between the requirement that administrative agencies follow court procedure and adhere to the rules of evidence and the requirement that they submit to judicial review of their administrative proceedings. Far beyond this point in importance, however, is the need for the protection of our citizens against possible arbitrary proceedings by an administrative agency. It is entirely true that in some bills legislative protection can and has been extended against such arbitrary invasion of rights, but Congress has not provided a uniform protection in this regard.

The tremendous growth in the field of administrative law and the tremendous expansion in departmental and bureaucratic administration of that law within recent years, together with the prospective graduation of numerous administrative bodies from a temporary emergency status to that of a permanent status, has brought this bill, H. R. 6324, to the forefront in importance much more rapidly and emphatically than was anticipated even by those of us who have had occasion to anticipate expansion in this field.

As I have heretofore stated, the burden of proof is upon the advocates of unrestrained extension of the jurisdiction of the various boards, bureaus, and commissions of the administrative branch of our Federal Government to prove that freedom from judicial review is so necessary that we should depart so far from the clear-cut division of governmental functions into legislative, executive, and judicial functions in the administration of these various agencies. It seems to me that it is time now to place reasonable checks upon the extent of power vested in our administrative agencies, which have been referred to by our President as a headless "fourth branch" of Government.

The Walter bill is worthy of our support as a reasonable, timely, and desirable effort to protect our citizens only against such wrongs as may come their way in this "fourth branch" of Government and to make this protection as uniform as possible. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. As used in this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

(1) "Administrative rules" include rules, regulations, orders, and amendments thereto of general application issued by officers in the executive branch of the United States Government interpreting the terms of statutes they are respectively charged with administering.

(2) "Administrative officers" means officers and employees in the executive branch, except the President of the United States.

(3) "Agency" means any department, independent establishment, administration, corporation, or other subdivision of the executive branch of the United States Government with one chief officer as the immediate head thereof.

(4) "Independent agency" means any board, commission, authority, corporation, or other subdivision of the executive branch of the United States Government with two or more officers at the head thereof as board, commission, or other members.

(5) "Circuit court of appeals" means the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

(6) "Days" means calendar days exclusive of Sundays and national holidays.

(7) "Person" includes individuals, corporations, partnerships, or other organizations.

(8) "Decision" means any affirmative or negative decision, order, or act in specific controversies which determines the issue therein involved.

(9) "Controversy" means any dispute or disagreement concerning any claim, right, or obligation for or against the United States and any refusal to grant any license, permit, or other privilege.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We have heard a great deal about reactionaries, conservatives, and radicals. It seems to me that the reactionaries and the conservatives have turned radical insofar as this bill is concerned. It is in my opinion the most revolutionary measure that could be conceived by a committee of the House of Representatives. It is a departure from our form of government. If you will read some of the decisions of the Supreme Court—and they were unanimous decisions—you will find where the Court specifically stated that there is a line beyond which the judiciary should not go in the review of administrative decisions.

In one of those decisions, in the Pottsville case, the court referred to and quoted from an address delivered by Elihu Root at the time Mr. Root was president of the American Bar Association and in that part of the address that was referred to the court quoted Mr. Root, as follows:

> There is one special field of law development which has manifestly become inevitable. We are entering upon the creation of a body of administrative law quite different in its machinery, its remedies, and its necessary safeguards from the old methods of regulation by specific statutes enforced by the courts. * * * There will be no withdrawal from these experiments. * * * We shall go on; we shall expand them, whether we approve theoretically or not, because such agencies furnish protection to rights and obstacles to wrongdoing which under our new social and industrial conditions cannot be practically accomplished by the old and simple procedure of legislatures and courts as in the last generation.

Those were the words of that great lawyer, Elihu Root.

The gentleman who just preceded me, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], made some reference to the General Accounting Office. I have a memorandum from the General Accounting Office which shows that it will cost at least a million dollars to carry out the purposes of this bill insofar as that agency is concerned, and it will also make for indefinite delay. Nearly 500,000 claims were considered last year by the General Accounting Office. Under the provisions of this legislation there can be a review of all of them. It will be necessary to set up at least 30 boards in the General Accounting Office, with three members each. The gentleman stated that exemption has been provided for certain agencies in this bill. That is true, but you make the provisions of this bill affect decisions of the General Accounting Office when the law now provides for an appeal to the Court of Claims. There is no reason why it should not be exempted from this legislation.

Personally, I am opposed to the legislation. I propose to vote against it.

I want to refer to another matter. I say without reservation, there is no Member of this House who has authority to state that the President of the United States favors this legislation. I have no authority to say that he does not; but I know that no Member of this House has authority to say that he does.

There is an outstanding committee that has studied this question. It has been working for almost a year, and the least we can do is to wait until that committee makes its report. We are doing nothing now but wasting our time, because I would be willing to wager anything I have that this bill will never become law during this session of the Congress.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Is the committee to which the gentleman refers the Attorney General's committee that is investigating all these matters?

Mr. COCHRAN. That is the committee to which I refer, headed by Dean Acheson.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. How many agencies have they reported on now?

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know how many agencies they have reported on, but in due time they will make a complete report. I believe the least we can do is to wait until that committee does make its report.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. And then we will have intelligent information as to what they have done and as to what abuses exist?

Mr. COCHRAN. Exactly. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] when he takes the position that Mr. Elihu Root took with respect to progressive legislation; but let me say to you that the quickest and surest way to get off the statute books the legislation that you and I are interested in is the perpetuation of the manner of administering that we now know. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. No; I do not yield. I only have 5 minutes. The gentleman can get all the time he wants.

The gentleman from Missouri mentioned the Pottsville radio case, and that decision contains as clear a challenge to the Congress as it possibly could. In that decision Mr. Justice Frankfurter said:

> It is always easy to conjure up extreme and even oppressive possibilities in the exertion of authority. But the courts are not charged with general guardianship against all potential mischief in the complicated tasks of government. The present case makes timely the reminder that "legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts." * * * Congress, which creates and sustains these agencies, must be trusted to correct whatever defects experience may reveal.

In that case the Supreme Court admitted that the administrative agency had not administered the law properly and in accordance with the wishes that we expressed. The Supreme Court admitted that the agency had acted in violation of the terms and spirit of the statute, but it went on and said:

> Here the Congress must have intended that we should not review this action. Congress must have intended that whatever this administrative agency did should not be subject to review because Congress did not provide a method for review in the statute setting up this agency.

Let me call your attention to the decision in the case of Morgan against United States, one of the many cases that has been in the Supreme Court of the United States, and the latest one, if you please, appealed in this year. It is the judgment of our committee that if this statute had been on the books when that case first went to the Supreme Court, that would have been the end of it.

But let me call your attention to the opinion in the circuit court:

> My colleagues, I think, have not been able to accept a certain new philosophy—nor do I accept it, although I recognize it, and I bow to it when Congress incorporates it into a valid statute—a philosophy that exalts the administrative agency and correspondingly lessens the powers of courts of justice. Congress has said that, on judicial review, findings of fact made by such an agency, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive. And so the judicial review becomes largely without significance. It looks, not to substance, but to form. The overwhelming weight of the evidence—the testimony of 20 witnesses—may support one finding, a minimum of substantial evidence—the testimony of a single witness may support the opposite finding. If the administrative agency, actuated by pique or prejudice or class interest or a consideration of the number of votes to be gained by "the party," finds against the weight of the evidence, the reviewing court is helpless. And if, under compulsion of law, the reviewing court affirms the agency, it is proclaimed to the world that the United States district court or the circuit court of appeals or the Supreme Court of the United States has endorsed and approved what the agency has done. It is not unnatural that judges should look with disfavor on such a consequence.
> How superficial it is to compare such an arbitrary—possibly even dictatorial—fact-finding power with the fact-finding power of a jury.

That is it. There it is, there is the crux of this situation.

This problem is accentuated by the arbitrary preparation of records before commissions in accordance with their own views. Just recently an examiner for one of the agencies informed me that before he held a hearing a memorandum was furnished him by the legal department and in that memorandum was pointed out to him that which ought not to appear in the record. He said that after he had held a hearing he was informed by the head of that agency that his findings were not in accordance with the instructions he received from the legal officers of that agency. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rose before and raised a very important question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has sought to answer it, but I do not think he answered it adequately. I am going to repeat somewhat of what I said before, because it is highly important.

Section 7 of the bill is the saving clause and in a word says that any existing court appellate media or procedure shall not be modified or appealed. Thus any judicial machinery for court appeals from any administration order shall remain intact. The result is this: You have set up in this bill a new and additional method of appeal separate and distinct from those methods that now exist, as I said before; for example, in the Veterans' Administration and various other departments. As to these departments, anybody aggrieved would have two methods of court appeal. He could appeal in pursuance of the methods of this bill which, as far as the weight of evidence is concerned, is much more favorable to him, or he could appeal under the existing statutes. Let me read with reference to the weight of evidence, which is the guide for the court to pursue, under the provisions of this bill:

> Any decision of any agency or independent agency shall be set aside if it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court (1) that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous; or (2) that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence; or (3) that the decision is not supported by the findings of fact; or (4) that the decision was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded the aggrieved party for a full and fair hearing; or (5) that the decision is beyond the jurisdiction of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be; or (6) that the decision infringes the Constitution or statutes of the United States; or (7) that the decision is otherwise contrary to law.

That gives the court uttermost discretion, whereas, under existing statutes, the court has not uttermost discretion but can in general only upset the ruling of the agency or bureau if the ruling is not supported by substantial evidence. The result is that I have a choice in a few agencies to take the easier route or the more difficult route with reference to the weight of the evidence; whereas in 120 or so agencies where there has been no provision for specific court appellate jurisdiction, I am compelled to take the hard route, where the court cannot upset the ruling unless it be not supported by the substantial weight of evidence. This is a rather anomalous situation, and I cannot conceive of any amendment I could offer to correct the proposal, because the situation is fraught with so much difficulty.

What about appeals in the agencies themselves? There is set up in this bill a new and novel procedure about appeals in the agencies. I am not talking now of judicial appeals. We already have certain types of appeals in the various agencies. There is no saving clause like section 7 with reference to appeals in the agencies themselves, and there you have a sort of hiatus—one does not know whether there are two types of appeal in the agencies or only one type of appeal. I should like enlightenment on that score.

Do you want to pass a bill of that character with so much ambiguity and no ability to perfect the bill with amendments? I do not know how in the world I could offer an amendment that would make the appropriate changes. If I could, I would gladly do so. The bill is so complex and is related to so many diverse orders in all these diverse departments that it is beyond human understanding to perfect it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri a moment ago correctly emphasized the fact that this is one of the most radical pieces of legislation ever offered to Congress. Let me say to my Republican friends that should the country go so far wrong as to elect a Republican administration in the November elections and this law should be passed now, you will be paralyzed; you will be under the domination of the Supreme Court of the United States virtually as now constituted.

Did you read in the paper on yesterday where the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Norway assumed the prerogatives of the King and appointed a prime minister—a government, if you please? We Democrats will have the Senate, no matter what happens, at least until 1942, and in my opinion until 1952. You would never get this law changed. If it ever gets on the statute books you would be paralyzed permanently, even if you should have a Republican House and a Republican President.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I will admit there is no such danger, but I will yield for a question.

Mr. MICHENER. The question is, Does the gentleman contend that in case the House and the administration should go Republican but the Senate remain Democratic, and it had been demonstrated that a bad and injurious law was on the statute books, that the Democratic Senate would prevent its removal?

Mr. RANKIN. No; because I believe the Democratic Senate would feel that any law would be better than one the Republicans would likely pass. They would therefore "rather bear the ills they had than fly to others they know not of." Now, let me go on; let me read some of the provisions of this bill.

No such power as this has ever been placed in the hands of the courts of this country. You Republicans who have been quoting Thomas Jefferson so much recently should remember that it was Thomas Jefferson who said that if this Government was ever destroyed, it would be destroyed by the courts. Now, listen to what you are doing. I am reading from the bill, page 12:

> Any decision of any agency or independent agency shall be set aside if it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court—

That means to the satisfaction of one majority of the Court. What? "That the finding of facts are clearly erroneous." Erroneous from what standpoint? Why, you men from the South read the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States invading, if not overthrowing, the governments of the States of Alabama and Florida. Under those decisions it will be absolutely impossible to enforce the criminal laws of the United States if the same rule is applied to the other States of the Union. Yet they say what we have done is erroneous. They say that what the Supreme Court of Florida did was erroneous. How easy it would be when you go counter to some of their political philosophies, for them to say that what this Bureau did is clearly erroneous. It does not say "illegal." It does not say "unconstitutional;" merely "erroneous." I am showing you the danger you are getting into in case this bill should ever become law, and I guarantee it never will in its present form.

On the other hand, this bill leaves out those agencies that were built up back yonder to serve special interests, and that have served special interests as against the American people; but when it comes to those agencies that have been set up within the last 10 years, that threw aside the legal camouflages in order to protect the individual citizen that gave the citizen some rights he should have enjoyed for the last 50 years, this bill would paralyze those agencies. I do not see how any Member, Democratic or Republican, can vote for this measure in its present form.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to enter into any debate or controversy in these 5 minutes, but I should like to ask a few questions about a matter in which I am very much interested. I have studied this bill very carefully, and I am not sure just how it applies to the matter I have in mind. I have looked over the bill, and I note that it is—

> A bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of suits with the United States, and for other purposes.

I have listened to the debates during the last several days, and I find that throughout the debate runs the thread that this is a bill to curb the arrogant and dictatorial action of bureaucrats, and to curb those who have dictatorial inclinations in the various Government departments. I want to propound a question of those who are proponents of this bill and are familiar with it. My matter deals with both a claim against the Government and a claim arising because of the dictatorial, unfair, and tyrannical action of a bureaucrat. I refer to the claim that the State of Ohio has against the United States Government by reason of the failure of the Federal Government to pay Ohio $1,338,000 which it owes Ohio. I should like to ask some of the experts on this bill whether the bill as it now stands applies to our case? Can we be reached under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; I think very clearly the situation suggested by the gentleman can be reached. An appeal from the decision lies to the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I was not so sure about that. I hope it can be. I am glad of the reassurance of the gentleman. May I have the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania further, because I am very much interested in this matter? I had doubts as to whether this bill would reach our case because, as I understand it, the fabric of this whole bill is built up on the matter of rules.

Mr. WALTER. No.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. A rule must have been issued and an application must have been made in compliance with the rule.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman is not correct in that statement. This bill treats two phases of the administration of law. The first is the quasi-legislative feature, and that has to do with the rule-making power. The other is the quasi-judicial feature. The second phase deals with disputes between the citizens of the United States and the United States and provides a method of taking a case into court where the citizen feels he has been aggrieved by a decision.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I think the gentleman would have to amend the act to include within the act as a party who may bring the case into court or before the agency or bureau the word "State." I am familiar with the gentleman's claim because I acted favorably upon it. I wanted to help Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman, and I appreciate what the gentleman did for the people of Ohio when this matter was before Congress.

Mr. CELLER. The word "party" or "person" is used throughout. That may be interpreted to mean citizen, it might include corporations, but I do not think it could be interpreted to include a State and I think you would have to amend so as to include a State.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have prepared an amendment which I will offer in due time. I think it would properly apply to subsection (f) at the bottom of page 10. When we reach that point I am going to ask the indulgence of the two gentlemen who have spoken, as well as other experts on this bill, to give the amendment consideration, because we are interested. We want to vote for this bill. I do not know that any of us are opposed to it.

Mr. WALTER. I do not think the gentleman has in mind the right section for his amendment. I think it would come on page 6, to (b) of section 4.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I hope so, for the reason that the designation is not so much to be considered as the claim involved. In other words, if a State has a claim, the word "claim" is the key to the situation and I hope we would be included. Section (f) excludes us, however, because it provides a time limitation and the claim must have been filed or must have been made within a year and must have been made in writing. I do not know that we made our claim in writing because it was not a matter that should be made in writing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY].

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that I find myself in opposition to this bill brought in by my friend and colleague the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee. However, in going over the bill I find that it has been brought in rather hastily, and, in my opinion, badly drafted. I cannot find any other words to use to describe the bill other than to say it has been ill-considered by the committee itself.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Does not the gentleman know that this bill and similar measures have been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary for over 2 years?

Mr. McGRANERY. That may well be; but I will point out some things to the House and see if they agree with me in my opinion.

The first point is that the ambiguity contained in section 7, to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] so ably pointed out, is absolutely all that he said it is. I cannot conceive of any mind in this House capable of drafting an amendment which might cover and protect these various organizations or departments and at the same time clearly state the remedy to be followed. I know the temper of the House against the so-called plutocrats, aristocrats, dictators, and so forth, who run these agencies, and I at times feel with you that there may be one here or there who does not treat us as we feel he should. But is the method the House should adopt to correct that situation found in this bill? I doubt it very much.

As to whether or not the bill was hastily drawn, let us turn to page 15. We find there:

> Nothing contained in this act shall apply to or affect any matter concerning or relating to the conduct of military or naval operations; the trial by courts martial of persons otherwise within the jurisdiction of such courts martial.

The committee has already seen fit to accept an amendment, and they realize they have done something rather drastic and hasty with respect to that provision. Any officer of the Navy who did not like the treatment that he received at the hands of the selection board in the way of promotion would have the right to walk right out and go into the circuit court of appeals and let that court pass upon his case, thus substituting the circuit court of appeals in every instance for the Army and the Navy Departments. I believe nobody will disagree with me that "military or naval operations" is a very clearly defined phrase. The committee now has seen fit to accept some change with respect to that provision. I do not know how the other departments will be affected by the same thing.

There is nothing that I can find in the hearings where the committee went into the question of the number of additional judges that might be required to take on this multitudinous set of appeals they will find before them. Everybody is going to run right into the court, and then what will happen? The calendars of the courts will be very crowded. Only a few weeks ago we discussed here in the House the calendars of the courts and found they were crowded in many instances, and additional judges were provided. These judges were provided certainly without any reference to this bill. There is not a single word in the hearings, I am told, in connection with any inquiry relating to the number of judges that may be required to pass on these appeals.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. On this question of frivolous and unnecessary appeals, will the gentleman refer to section 6 on page 14 of the bill?

Mr. McGRANERY. Yes, but what do we find there? I have no quarrel with the gentleman about what might be considered a frivolous appeal, but any man who feels that he has an honest and sincere right to file an appeal I would not say is frivolous. You cannot impose costs simply because you give an individual a right and a remedy and he follows that remedy. That is not being frivolous. If there is any frivolity, it is the frivolity of this House in passing this bill, and I sincerely trust the House will vote down the bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I find myself in opposition to this bill sponsored by the chairman of my own delegation, but I believe I agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] when he terms this the most drastic and radical piece of legislation that has been considered by this House for a long while.

I should like to ask my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, just how much time was consumed in the hearings on this bill.

Mr. WALTER. This is the volume of the hearings in the Senate, and there are two large volumes of the hearings that were held in the House.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I am asking the gentleman how much time was consumed in the hearings on this House bill which is now before the House.

Mr. WALTER. On this particular bill?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. By his committee.

Mr. WALTER. I should say about 5 days.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Five days is not very much, but the committee hearings state that only 2 days were consumed, March 17 and April 5. For 2 days they held hearings on a piece of legislation which is going to change our system and our courts more radically than anything ever proposed in the history of this country; 2 days. The members of the committee offering this legislation are all lawyers. I should like to ask the gentleman if the committee considered the present print and draft now before this House.

Mr. WALTER. Yes; and I am quite certain that the gentleman would have been for this bill wholeheartedly if he had not been reading some articles by a man who does not believe that facts ought to go into the court.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman cannot make up my mind for me. I concede to the gentleman the purity of his motives, but I certainly resent it when the gentleman tries to tell me what is in my mind. He perhaps is going to some of the fortune tellers in the District of Columbia that we hear so much about these days. We hear a lot about Members of Congress running to these soothsayers and crystal gazers. Maybe the gentleman is going to some of them.

Mr. WALTER. I would have to go further than that to find out what is in the gentleman's mind.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will have to do more than that to find out what is in my mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALTER. That is right.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I will grant the gentleman that he will have to have more than a fortuneteller or a soothsayer to find out what is in my mind, because my mind is just a little bit deeper than that.

I should like to ask the gentleman if the committee considered the present print of the bill which is before the House and if the committee is satisfied with the language appearing in the present bill.

Mr. WALTER. I may say to the gentleman that after the extensive hearings on this entire subject were completed by both the Senate and the House, the House committee, together with Senator LOGAN and Senator MCCARRAN and other Senators, agreed that the Senate bill, which was the American Bar Association proposal, should be amended.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman should not take up all my time. I am simply asking the gentleman if the committee approved this draft that we are now considering.

Mr. WALTER. Yes; and not only our committee but the Senate was so well pleased with our work that they struck out all after the enacting clause in their bill and substituted this bill.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman satisfied with everything in the language of this bill at the present time?

Mr. WALTER. Had the gentleman been in Washington when the debate was going on, he would have known the answers to all these questions.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Let me say to the gentleman, I am always in Washington when important legislation is being considered. I am asking the gentleman if he is satisfied with everything in this bill, because there is such a conglomeration of language on page 10 that nobody in the world could know just what is meant. Perhaps it is a typographical error, but if the gentleman's committee did not give any more attention to the draft of the bill as a whole than he gave to this particular language, then I do not believe we have the right to consider that they gave this legislation adequate time and attention in the hearings of only 2 days.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDELSTEIN] for 5 minutes.

Mr. EDELSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, the title of the bill now being considered by this body is "to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes." I believe that the bill is primarily "for other purposes." In the two terms in which the Democratic Party has been in power it has succeeded in enacting much legislation intended to benefit the great body of citizens in this country—legislation intended to carry us farther along the road toward achieving an American standard of living for American labor. This legislation in the interest of labor met with bitter and powerful opposition. The opposition found support in this body. But that legislation is upon our statute books today, and it is there to stay.

The opponents have not given up. Legislation which they could not prevent they seek to frustrate. They suddenly become friends of such legislation, anxious to see it succeed, and offer amendments to clarify ambiguities which only their clear vision can perceive. When this tactic fails, they urge care in developing a program for the application of the law and fight for small appropriations, so that there will be no wasteful expenditure of public funds while the law is still in an experimental stage. These methods are used concurrently.

This bill represents still another and more ingenious method of frustration. It certainly cannot be conceived to be a bill for the expeditious handling of disputes with the Government, since it would tie up every agency whose activities were not exempt from the provisions of the act. It means that anyone subject to Government regulations in any way is guaranteed not 1 day in court but 2. The first attack would be made upon the promulgation of the rule or regulation. If that failed, the second attack could be made when the regulation would be invoked in a particular case.

Every time an agency proposed to change its regulations, or issue new ones, it would have to give notice of its intention, and then hold hearings, if requested. If the outcome proved unsatisfactory, the enforcement of the regulation could be suspended by appealing to the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Only after a hearing and approval by that court could the United States enforce the regulation. But the regulation would still be subject to attack. To say that this protracted course of litigation represents expedition is to assume, without any supporting facts, that most Government regulations are illegal and will be struck down on the first attack.

When an administrative agency has successfully run the gantlet of the procedure provided by sections 2 and 3 of the bill and has handed down a decision in a particular matter under the complicated procedure provided in section 4, the aggrieved party may appeal to the circuit court of appeals for a review, in all cases, not only on questions of law but on questions of fact. The courts are to review all the evidence to see if the findings of fact are or are not clearly erroneous. Many are the administrative hearings which produce records running into the thousands of pages. Yet the courts, in every appeal from an administrative decision under this bill, will have to sit as courts of equity and review the facts, as well as the law. Can this be a bill to provide for expeditious settlement of disputes with the Government? It is not intended to give a party a day in court but years.

Every decision of the Wage and Hour Division of the Labor Department, of its Public Contracts Division, of the Treasury relating to social-security and railroad-retirement taxes, and the National Labor Relations Board will be held up endlessly while the appellate courts sit as juries upon the evidence presented in the record on appeal. A writer who supports this misguided bill said that "justice delayed is justice denied." There is no doubt that that will be the effect of this bill.

New York State in 1938 held a constitutional convention. One of the proposals submitted by the convention to the people provided for judicial review of administrative decisions both on the facts and the law. That amendment was separately voted upon, and decisively defeated. The common people, despite the tear-jerking speeches of delegates who wanted to give them protection from bureaucracy, knew that the proposal had no such purpose, and easily saw the sham and the subterfuge embodied in it. I feel confident that the Members of this House will be no less discerning and will vote down this bill to strangle the executive branch of the Government, to substitute anarchy and chaos for effective administration of the law.

Those who are sincerely interested in improving the administration of our laws, should consider the interim report of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure, which is a part of the minority report on this bill. Its one main conclusion, thus far, is that uniformity for controlling administrative procedure is not practicable. This committee will have completed its work and submitted its final report, based on individual studies of the various Federal agencies, to the Attorney General before Congress reconvenes. The desirability of this statute, or any other general statute to deal with this problem, can then be determined. To take action without considering the mass of material which this committee will make available, is to destroy blindly our administrative system.

If this bill is passed now, my belief is, to put it plainly, that it has only one purpose and object in view and that is to stab in the back New Deal legislation and make New Deal legislation unworkable, so that the opponents of such legislation will have accomplished indirectly what they have been unable thus far to accomplish directly.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDELSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this bill was proposed in 1932, before there was anything known as the New Deal.

Mr. EDELSTEIN. I might answer that by saying that that does not change the situation, and in my humble opinion, as a Member of this House, I feel that as the bill stands now those people who are interested in passing the bill have no other object in mind than to destroy the efficiency of the various New Deal agencies. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] for 5 minutes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, on Monday last I intervened in the debate on this bill, whereupon my friend from Georgia [Mr. Cox] made the remark that he "had no intention of dropping his bucket into my intellectual well." Whether the motive back of it was similar I cannot say, but it reminded me of an occurrence in one of the hospitals for the insane in my State. The superintendent of the hospital had taken a number of the patients out to give them something to do, to try the effect of that upon them. One of the patients saw a wheelbarrow. He took it and turned it over and went wheeling it around upside down. Somebody said to him, "Why don't you turn it over," and he replied, "Oh, no; if I did that somebody would put something in it for me to wheel around."

Mr. Chairman, this bill is a lawyers' bill, pure and simple, and nobody else's. It ought to be entitled "The lawyers' emergency relief bill." To my mind it is more than ridiculous that we have a committee studying this subject that has been at work upon it only a few months, and that that committee should come here and make a report upon the bill before the other committee reports.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; the gentleman would not yield to me, but I yield to him.

Mr. WALTER. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman in his very informative remarks, but my desire is to straighten him out. He said this committee had been functioning for only 2 months. It was appointed January of last year, and we were promised reports twice last year and have not received any yet, so that it has been functioning a year and a half.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said a few months. I can understand perfectly well, if you are going to investigate a subject that covers every one of the different agencies of the Government, you cannot do it in 6 months, and if your subcommittee had studied more than 2 months upon it you would not have brought in this bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. EDELSTEIN], who just preceded me, told the truth about this bill. It is for the purpose of hamstringing the New Deal measures. That is the purpose of the men who fathered it, and that is what it will do, whether that is the intention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania or not. It would have that effect, and there can be no doubt about that. That that was the intention of some of the gentlemen sponsoring this bill on the floor of this House was clearly indicated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] who, in his opening address on the rule, referred to the great abuses that had been accomplished under the N. L. R. B., and that they must be stopped. He does not tell what these terrible abuses are, for there are none. But what he does mean is that American men and women under the N. L. R. B. actually have the right to organize and bargain collectively, and that is a bitter pill for the gentleman from Georgia. To nullify that law is the evident desire of the gentleman from Georgia and the knowing ones around him, not by repealing it out in the open but to stab the American workers in the back by this smart lawyers' bill. That is the intention of this bill—not only to stop the N. L. R. B., but the Security and Exchange Commission, and a lot of others that the big fellows in this country do not want.

That is what it is intended to do. They admit that it will delay. They may as well admit the evident fact that if this bill should become the law the delay will be so great as to tie the hands of all these commissions, and delay often means defeat. Where you have to have a court review of everything the Commission does, and all of these other things, one after the other, you know as well as I do that you will never get through with it. It will stop the whole process of government along those lines, and I hope the gentlemen will understand that this is a lawyers' bill, put out by the American Bar Association. It is opposed by the New York Bar Association, which is a better association than the American Bar Association. The lawyers' guild opposes this bill vehemently as a sinister attempt to annul all these agencies which are serving humanity so well. If you would also turn it over to a few other bar associations of the country, who have no special interest in the matter, and ask their opinion and advice, you would find out that other bar associations would oppose this bill also.

The fact that this bill is sponsored by the American Bar Association ought to have aroused the suspicions of this subcommittee and put them on guard, when there is at the head of that association at the present time one of the 58 conspirators who stood up as soon as we passed the N. L. R. B. and contrary to every precedent and ideal of American Government, advised the employers of this country to disobey that law. That is exactly the outfit that is actually behind this Walter-Logan bill, and you may as well understand and know that.

By unanimous consent Mr. KELLER was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD, including a quotation from his own statement from the hearings before the Labor Committee. The whole statement, mentioned in Mr. KELLER'S statement, on the constitutionality of the National Labor Relations Act, as originally issued by the Liberty League, including the names of those 58 lawyers, will be found in volume 8 of the hearings before the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives (76th Cong., 1st sess., pp. 2239–2245).

The quotation referred to in the permission granted is as follows:

In offering the so-called brief of the "Fifty-eight Liberty League Lawyers" for the record, I do so with the hope that the connection between this iniquitous document and the consequent trouble the National Labor Relations Board experienced may not be lost.

As I have so often said during the course of these hearings, immediately after the Board commenced its functions in 1935 a veritable wave of injunction suits were instituted in Federal district courts. That was some time in the late summer of 1935. Just prior to this resort to "the principles that are measured by the length of the chancellor's foot," the Liberty League set its legal leeches upon the National Labor Relations Act. By September of 1935 they had completed their "brief" and declared, what nobody doubted they would declare—that the Wagner Act in all its phases was unconstitutional.

Had individual lawyers made the research for purposes of a suit no one would have a right to complain. But this document was intended to supply lawyers all over the country with a model brief on which to base attacks on the Wagner Act. This was a conspiracy to wreck the execution of the supreme law of the land. It had the backing of the moneyed press of the country, and was received with warm thanks by the great majority of the corporations and corporation lawyers. That the conspiracy succeeded for a time is amply demonstrated. Within a short time 96 injunction suits had been instituted in the district courts of the United States and they were almost all spun from the same wool—the golden fleece of the Liberty League.

With their brief already prepared for them, the lawyers of the country went into the lower courts and completely stopped the functions of the Labor Board. As later events proved, these district courts had not the least shadow of jurisdiction over the Board's functions. Mr. Justice Brandeis so declared in the Newport News case. But by the time that case was decided the harm had been done.

It was more than 14 months from the time the Board began its functions until it was free from the bonds of the injunctions by the decisions of the Supreme Court in April 1937. Thus was the conspiracy able to cripple the operation of the law of the land. But the great tragedy lay in the fact that the laboring men of this country were denied a right which Congress had said they were entitled to. Quite naturally they resisted, resisted by whatever means were at hand. And while I repeat that neither I nor anyone else justifies violence, we must consider the outraged feelings of the men who had rights under the law but were denied them by a conspiracy of lawyers of many large employers.

Let me call attention to a comparable situation. Suppose Congress should pass a law relating to labor and 58 prominent labor leaders of the country should join in a pronunciamento declaring the law to be null and void and recommending to their followers that they willfully disobey it. The money-controlled press would be justified in denouncing them as anarchists for conspiring against the Government, and the press would not hesitate to do so in the most virulent language. That is exactly what these 58 lawyer conspirators did. I am not going to forget, nor permit to be forgotten, the disgrace these men brought to their profession and the great harm they did to the country. I hope never again to see any profession undertake a treasonable conspiracy against the country.

Let us not forget that the workers of this country had been promised collective-bargaining rights under N. R. A. That promise proved illusory. When the Wagner Act became law the men placed their hopes in it. Had employers approached the problem of collective bargaining with the same good faith that characterized labor's attitude, there would never have been any trouble over the N. L. R. B. Instead of following the spirit of the law, the large employers of labor took refuge in what was formerly their strongest citadel—the courts. They approached the bench with horrified countenances, clutching the Wagner Act in one hand and brandishing the Liberty League brief in the other. The Board was enjoined from holding hearings, from inspecting employer records, and warned not to proceed lest "irreparable injury" be done an employer. Rarely was the injury that was being done to the workers of the country considered.

What seems to have been overlooked, is that the blame for the state of affairs that existed from September 1935, to April 1937, in the field of labor relations, cannot be justly laid at the door of labor. The blame must rest squarely on those who sought to thwart the expressed will of the National Congress. The largest share of that blame must rest squarely on the shoulders of these 58 Liberty League lawyers and their sponsors. The consequences of their action can scarcely be measured. But it should be remembered as a conspiracy to wreck a duly enacted law.

This question of the acceptance of a law when duly passed was considered in the Constitutional Convention. It was the expressed belief of the members of that convention that when a law was passed it should and would be accepted by everybody as the law, unless and until the highest court in the land, having the case properly presented to it, should decide the law was contrary to the Constitution and therefore void. This principle had from the beginning been accepted not only in national but in State affairs. No set of men, lawyers or otherwise, had ever presumed to deny the binding force of law until the Supreme Court had itself nullified that law. These 58 lawyers were among the most noted lawyers in the United States. They knew and understood the force of this principle. They therefore set themselves willfully either to usurp the power and authority of the Supreme Court, or what is equally heinous, to advocate open disobedience to a law which the Congress had passed.

It naturally followed that if one set of lawyers could in effect suspend a law, another set might do the same. In short, this would lead to a general recognition of the idea that no law need be obeyed until the Supreme Court should sustain it in a regularly arrived-at decision.

Stated in another way—no law would be a law in effect until the Supreme Court said it was the law.

Such an idea if generally accepted would bring about a state of chaos in government and anarchy would prevail. Such would be the ultimate result of any successful supplanting of government by powerful selfish interests.

What these men advocated actually was that no law need be obeyed until the Supreme Court should pass on it. The effect of that would be that every law passed by Congress might be suspended until the Supreme Court should approve it in a decision. What these 58 corporation lawyers proposed was that a committee of lawyers acting for selfish interests were justified in assuming the authority to pass on the validity of any law they chose, and suspend its enforcement until the Supreme Court should sustain the law.

Mr. KELLER. Let us remember that the Supreme Court which declared the National Labor Relations Act valid and binding under the Constitution was still the old Supreme Court of whom my friends, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], were so fond, not the new Supreme Court whom they confess they do not love so ardently.

Now let us look for a moment at these Government agencies over which the proponents of this bill are so excited: The abuses in freight and passenger rates, the rebates, the discrimination of one city or section over another, the destructive effect of these and other railroad abuses justified and compelled the formation of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The taking often by fraud, chicanery, and force of power sites along our streams justified and compelled the formation of the Federal Power Commission to protect the people in their rights to these natural resources.

The terrible cheating, defrauding, stealing, robbing, and otherwise getting five and a half million people to gambling on the stock exchanges justified and compelled the formation of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Along with the Stock Exchange Act of 1934 was the result of the Nation-wide panic which resulted largely from these shameless abuses.

The right of American men and women to organize as they please without any interference from employers and to bargain collectively is a right which labor and rational employers have recognized and fought for for 50 years resulted in the National Labor Relations Act, and woe to the politician who has free-voting working people for constituents and transgresses that right.

The wage and hour law was the result of competition among chiseling employers, to the financial ruin of the large proportion of employers who want to pay fair wages during reasonable hours and under decent conditions compelled the passing and enforcing of that law, both for the benefit of the workers and fair-minded employers as well.

Let us see that every one of these agencies came from the new necessities arising under the constantly changing conditions in industry. And only the man without vision or understanding will be found conspiring against them.

If anyone thinks these laws need revision let him introduce a bill setting forth in simple language the changes he thinks ought to be made. Then fight it out like a man in the open. This Walter-Logan bill is so complicated that even the sponsors of it cannot agree on what it means. And any bill that hides its purposes under a cover ought to have the mask torn from its face and made to stand out in its own true light.

This bill would benefit no one except a lot of lawyers, wherefore it is properly referred to as the lawyers' emergency relief bill.

The proponents of this measure started out with the old outworn statement that anyone who is not for this "hide and seek" measure is "against our form of government." And one a little bolder and more foolish than the others had the hardihood to say at the very beginning of the debate, "Oh, you start the argument which is always advanced by these fellows who want to make America over again. And most of them want to make it over along the pattern set by Russia."

I might retort that these two statements are characteristic of the proponents of bills which seek to do by indirection what they know they dare not undertake by direction. But I am unwilling to imply any such thing to any Member of this House. I might resent those statements about the opponents of this bill. I do not, however, because, with Cowper, I hold now as always that "a thoroughly educated, well-bred man will not insult me, and no other can." A Member asserts "that the President is not opposed to this bill; that the President is misinformed." Well, what modesty and what assurance this is, especially since the Attorney General has a committee of the ablest men along this line devoting a great deal of time investigating the facts in relation to all these Government agencies, and that committee is making a thorough job of it. But our subcommittee got into a terrible hurry and just could not wait another minute. No, sirree. Could not wait.

In closing I want to call the attention of this House to the quotations made by Major Bulwinkle, taken from the book just published by the Brookings Institution on Federal Regulatory Action and Control, the very subject we are discussing here. This study has been under way for many months. It is a complete and perfect refutation of arguments of the protagonists of this bill. No man can read it and think it over and then vote for the bill. It is an ill-considered, unjustified, but certain attempt to destroy these governmental agencies which experience and misfortune have compelled us to create by law.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I direct the attention of the Committee to page 75 of the hearings for the purpose of saying to you that the gentleman who made that statement, Ashley Sellers, who is designated as the head attorney in the office of the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture, is personally known to me, and has been for many, many years; that he is a professor of law in the University of Georgia, on leave, employed by the Department of Agriculture especially to study the question of administrative procedure under the acts administered by that Department. If you have not read that statement, I urge you to do so. I have not the time to go into it, but it will open your eyes to the extent and scope of this proposed legislation.

What I rise to discuss is the effect of this legislation on the relationship between the Government and its employees. I am going to offer an amendment to exempt the Civil Service Commission and to provide that the employees shall not have the right to go into the circuit court with every grievance they may have against their supervisory official.

Under the language in section 4 of this bill any employee who may be dissatisfied with any decision made by supervisory officials can get a hearing before one of these intra-agency boards, and under section 5, appeal from that hearing to the circuit court of appeals wherever he may be located, or in the District of Columbia.

In addition to that, as I construe the act, any of the several hundred thousand people who take civil-service examinations each year and fail to make a passing grade could demand a hearing before the intra-agency board and appeal that decision to the circuit court of appeals. Any citizen near a rural route out in the country could demand a hearing before the Post Office Department, under this bill, because a route was not extended. If this bill were confined to what I thought it was when I read about it in the newspapers, which was the regulation of the power of agencies to make rules having the effect of law, and, second, to the regulation of the extent to which the courts might review findings of fact of agencies like the N. L. R. B., I would be 100 percent for it. But it does not stop there. Under section 4, any decision of any agency, except those which are specifically exempted, under section 7, no matter how trivial that decision may be, can be taken before one of these intradepartmental boards, a hearing demanded, and an appeal can be taken from that decision to the circuit court of appeals. When that happens the Department of Commerce Building down here will not be half large enough to hold the Circuit Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia if in his opinion every veteran case which he or I or any other Congressman may file would have to go to the circuit court of appeals and a hearing held on every one of those claim cases?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is my understanding and that is the opinion of the representative of the Veterans' Administration who appeared and made a statement, according to the hearings. General Hines' representative, as I understand it, said it would upset the procedure which had been worked out by the Veterans' Administration.

That is my fear about this bill, that it undertakes to take in not only the rule-making power, which we all feel should be safeguarded where it has the effect of law, but the question of whether or not decisions as to the facts shall be binding upon the courts, by these so-called quasi-judicial agencies. With those two problems I think I could agree with the committee. They need some attention. But this bill does not stop there. That is a minor part of this bill. Any action of any employee in any branch of the Government, no matter what the question is, raises a question on which they can get a hearing before a three-person board in the Department, under section 4, and then under section 5, if they are not satisfied with that decision they can go to the circuit court of appeals. Talk about bureaucracy! The 900,000 employees that we have now would not be a drop in the bucket to what you would have to have to carry on that system of intradepartmental appeals on every question, and appeals to the circuit court of appeals all over the United States.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I will say that the bill goes so far that if the head of an agency refuses to promote an employee, he can carry his case to the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Unquestionably. His pay scales, even the question of whether he can park his automobile in a certain spot—all those questions.

Mr. WALTER. How is he aggrieved by that sort of a rule? Is that a substantial interest in the rule?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Read the language of your own act.

Mr. WALTER. Now, look on page 15, line 19, "or has failed to receive appointment or employment by any agency or independent agency." The people who discussed this phase of the bill felt that that applied to promotion.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not yield further. I do not agree with the gentleman's interpretation and I do not believe it meets the problem I have cited. It does not relate to classification. There is a special act on that. It does not relate to the question of transfer from one agency to another. It does not have anything to do with the question of whether or not a man can be admitted to a civil-service examination. It does not regulate the question of retirement under the Retirement Act. All of those problems of the Civil Service Commission would be subject to be taken into court under the language of this bill. [Applause.]

Section 4 of the bill says that any person aggrieved by any decision of any employee or officer of the Government may demand a hearing with the right of appeal from the decision made at this hearing.

This would mean that every farmer participating in the farm program, every veteran filing a case with the Veterans' Administration, every W. P. A. project worker, and every other person dealing with any agency of the Government would be entitled to have a hearing with the right to appeal to the circuit court of appeals.

I cannot conceive of any proposal that could be made which would be more revolutionary. It would break down the orderly processes of administration in the executive branch of the Government and those matters certainly have no relation to the problem of controlling the rule-making power of agencies authorized to issue regulations having the force of law. Neither have these problems any relation to the question of the weight which should be given to findings of fact by boards and commissions.

The questions I have raised relate exclusively to execution and administration of statutes which differ radically from those administered by such agencies as the Labor Board and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

We ought not to pass a law which interferes with the orderly administration of government simply because we feel the necessity of curbing the power of the boards and commissions to whom we have given authority to promulgate rules and regulations.

The bill should be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary for further study.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, to my mind the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] has suggested a very, very pertinent question, and I rise for the purpose of enlarging on the suggestion by propounding an inquiry to the author of the bill. I would like to know whether or not the appeals referred to in this bill apply only to orders issued by a governmental agency, or whether they apply simply to every decision made by a governmental agency. In other words, does this proposed law apply only to such orders as may be issued by the individual agency or does it apply to various decisions arising under such orders?

Mr. WALTER. It applies to both.

Mr. HARE. Then I would say, Mr. Chairman, the question raised is tremendously important.

The fundamental principle involved in this piece of legislation is excellent, but if we are going to enact a law that will require every person in the United States to file his complaint with a special board in order to protect his rights, although similar decisions may have been made dozens and dozens of times where the same facts are involved, we shall complicate the matter and make it absolutely impossible to enforce, and for persons who have a grievance to obtain their rights.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE. I hope the gentleman will keep in mind that the courts have many times said that many activities, many relationships between the citizen and his Government, are not the subject of judicial review. No law we could pass would affect that; that is constitutional. The matter of pensions and the matter of payments made to veterans and soldiers is quite largely a matter with which the courts would not interfere. You have never heard of an injunction or a mandamus being granted in the matter of the payment of a pension or some other benefit granted by Congress because the courts have held that that is a gratuity.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman may be correct in what he is saying, but I do not yield further on that because I arose to ask the particular question as to whether or not these people would have the right and the privilege under the proposed legislation to bring these complaints and have them adjudicated under the law.

Mr. GWYNNE. Certainly not.

Mr. HARE. But the author of the bill says they would. If they have to do this, I can see the possibility and the probability of the creation of 250,000 or more boards in the United States. There are 130 agencies involved, and one board in each of the 2,000 counties would amount to 260,000 boards. I stated at the outset that I felt there was a great deal of wisdom in the proposed legislation, but I am convinced that there should be such amendments to it as to obviate the necessity of every dissatisfied person having to bring an action into court, because that would mean an unlimited number of persons bringing similar actions contesting the same decision and presenting the same facts.

As already stated, I am strongly in favor of the purpose of the proposed legislation because I am convinced we have reached a point in the increased number and complexity of administering many of our governmental agencies that those in charge of such agencies are frequently writing into law many matters never contemplated by Congress, and the people involved should have some redress. That is, under the authority to issue rules and regulations to administer an act of Congress, the heads of various departments or agencies have issued rules and regulations providing for plans and policies far out of line from what Congress really intended; and I think provision should be made whereby such orders, rulings, and regulations may be judicially reviewed before they are placed into execution and thousands of people have sustained losses or damages under a law really intended for their benefit; but in an effort to be of service to them if we enact legislation that will require them to file their complaint with a board or boards to be set up in these many agencies to hear the complaints and then have to go to court and file for adjudication, it seems to me we are complicating the matter rather than simplifying it; and this seems to be what will have to be done according to the answer given to my question by the author of the bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

There is no doubt but what a person, for illustration, who has been denied what he feels he is entitled to by a seed-loan agent, a county demonstration agent, a representative of the A. A. A., the Soil Conservation Service, the W. P. A., the N. Y. A., or any other governmental agency, should have a right of redress somewhere, but if you have to set up a board in each county for each agency or subdivision thereof, I can see as we have already indicated, where the cost and expense involved would be much more than the benefit obtained.

For example, on page 6, line 23, we find:

When any person is aggrieved by a decision of any officer or employee of any agency, such person may notify the head of the agency in writing of objections thereto, specifically requesting that the controversy be referred to a board—

To hear and determine the matter, and if the board should decide against such person then it would be necessary to appeal to the court, and the only way he could appeal would be to hire a lawyer and pay the expense and 99 cases out of 100 he would be no better off than before.

I find further on page 6 where it says that at least one person of each board shall be a lawyer, who shall act as chairman of the board. I can easily see where there may be a dozen persons from a dozen different agencies asking that their grievances be considered at the same time and in this case it would be necessary to have a board for each agency which would mean a dozen or more boards in each county, and if I am correct in this there would be a lot of counties where it would be necessary to import lawyers to fill the job.

Mr. Chairman, the real purpose behind the proposed legislation, I admit, is excellent, it is sound, and it is fundamental, but the machinery set up is absolutely absurd. I think it ought to be referred back to the committee with instructions that the whole thing be simplified and clarified and reported back to the House for further consideration. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: On page 2, line 18, after the word "individuals", insert "States and their political subdivisions."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in line with what I had to say awhile ago. If we are to perfect this bill to protect all claimants interested, as I indicated the State of Ohio was, we shall have to commence here at this place, and another amendment will have to be offered on page 10. If the author of the bill is satisfied that the word "State" amply covers the matter I have in mind, we could strike out the words "and their political subdivisions." I want to cooperate rather than to obstruct.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. In the interest of good legislative draftsmanship, I do not think it would be well, perhaps, to say that a person is a State. I think it would be better if the gentleman reserved the amendment to offer at some later place in the bill. To state in this paragraph that a person means a State would seem to me to be a strained contruction and a mistake.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not quite agree with the gentleman for the reason that this is the only place in the bill where it will fit properly, because here we are attempting to define what "person" means and who and what shall be included within the purview of that word. The section says, for instance, that "person" includes "individuals, corporations, partnerships, or other organizations." If the phrase "other organizations" would admit of the construction that it included a State, I would not have offered this amendment, but I am afraid it would not bear any such legal interpretation, and I think this amendment should pass. If it passes, it will strengthen our case.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Ohio if he has given any consideration to the constitutional question involved as to whether or not a State may sue the Federal Government?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not think the action here contemplated would quite rise to the dignity of a suit. This applies only to the filing or presentation of a claim. The word "person" is defined to include certain groups, but I do not believe that any of the definitions given would include a State. I want to make it specific that a State is included. In other words, if we do not insert this it will be a question if a State is included in any of these groups.

Mr. MICHENER. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment other than this, that the committee has given most careful consideration to this whole bill, and amendments of this importance, it seems to me, should never be placed in a technical bill of this kind on the floor of the House without very serious consideration. A constitutional question may be involved. We should not therefore act hastily. If this matter goes to the Senate and the gentleman wants to make a suggestion to the Senate committee, consideration can then be given to any constitutional question involved.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Surely.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman was not present—I think he had just stepped out momentarily—when I presented this matter an hour or so ago. It was agreed then by those who participated in the colloquy that it might be wise if we were to amend this bill so as to permit the State of Ohio, or any other State to come within its terms. As far as the claim that this raises a question as to the power of a State to sue the United States, I can only say that a private person has no right to sue the Federal Government unless permitted to do so by law. The same is true as to a State. I think the word "persons" should be made to include States. The description there is not all-inclusive of a State, and I think it ought to be there. I have no desire to emasculate the bill in any way, shape, or form, or to delay it, but this perfecting word can be inserted without any harm.

Mr. GWYNNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. I am in accord with the view expressed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]. I think it is probably true that something should be done to enable States to present their claims and litigate their rights; but the question we are confronted with here is that the matter of the States' right to sue the Federal Government or its agencies is more or less regulated by the Constitution. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan that the matter be allowed to go over should be accepted, so that the Senate or perhaps the conferees may try to work out something which will be constitutional and also acceptable.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Are there any other claims of the character that Ohio has against the Government?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not think there are any that come in that category.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMPLEMENTING ADMINISTRATIVE RULES

SEC. 2. (a) Hereafter administrative rules and all amendments or modifications or supplements of existing rules implementing or filling in the details of any statute affecting the rights of persons or property shall be issued by the head of the agency and by each independent agency respectively charged with the administration of any statute only after publication of notice and public hearings. All such rules shall be published in the Federal Register within 10 days after the date of their approval by the head of the agency or the independent agency concerned, and shall not become effective until such publication, except when the President declares that a public emergency exists.

(b) Administrative rules under all statutes hereafter enacted shall be issued as herein provided within 1 year after the date of the enactment of the statute subject to the adoption thereafter of further rules from time to time as provided in this act.

(c) Any person substantially interested in the effects of an administrative rule in force on the date of the approval of this act may petition the head of the agency or the independent agency which administers any statute under which the rule was issued for a reconsideration of any such rule; and the head of such agency or the independent agency shall, after publication of notice and public hearing, if requested within 10 days thereafter, determine whether such rule shall be continued in force, modified, or rescinded. All amendments of such rules shall be in accordance with the procedure provided in subsection (a) of this section, and all action of the head of such agency or the independent agency on such petitions and all new or amended rules shall be published in the Federal Register as prescribed in said subsection (a) for the publication of rules.

(d) No person shall be penalized or subjected to any forfeiture or prosecuted for any act done or omitted to be done in good faith in conformity with a rule which has been rescinded or declared invalid by any final judgment entered as hereinafter provided, unless the act was done or omitted to be done more than 30 days after the publication in the Federal Register of the rescission or final judicial determination of the invalidity of such rule.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS of California: Page 3, line 21, after the word "act", insert "and which has not been in force for a period of 2 years or more."

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would affect only one of the features that I have become extremely worried about in connection with this bill since the debate on it began. As I understand the language of section 2, subsection (c), it would permit anyone to contest any rule promulgated by any agency at any time in the past. I think this is too much territory, and it justifies the fear of certain gentlemen who have risen on the floor and said that this bill is so broad and all-inclusive in its language that it would not only clog the courts but would have the effect of hamstringing the effectiveness of a great many governmental agencies, some of them not so-called New Deal agencies at all but long-established ones.

I came over here at the beginning of the debate on this bill strongly inclined to vote in favor of it for the reason that I was then, as I am now, in favor of the objectives which are supposed to be accomplished by it. I want a government of law, not of men; I want proper rights of appeal; I want proper safeguards against administrative error or abuse. I have read the writings of Mr. Lawrence, for example; I have read much editorial discussion of the bill, and I have talked to a number of Members about it. I was convinced myself, and I am still convinced, that it is important that we have a government of law and not a government of men, that it is important for Congress to legislate much more specifically than it has in the past; that it is important that administrative officials be held to account; but I cannot answer, and apparently no one else can answer the question asked a couple of days ago by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], when he asked how long a holding company could protract legislation under this bill and thus circumvent the justifiable purposes of legislation. No one has been able to answer what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] asked this afternoon about the effect of the bill on civil-service examinations, and I am afraid nobody can. Had I been able to ask a question earlier, it would have been phrased in simpler language.

I am not an attorney and I sometimes find it difficult to follow the lawyer's argument. I have had to struggle pretty hard with this bill. I have read everything I could get hold of pertaining to it, including the hearings. I would have asked, for example, whether under the bill a ruling of an agency having the effect of law and comparable to a general rule laid down by a schoolteacher to govern the conduct of her school was covered by the terms of the bill. I think such a ruling should be covered. Court review in such a case would be as if the teacher's general rule might be submitted to the board of parents of the school, in the first instance.

That seems to me to be all right. But it appears this bill means that every time one of the kids wants to complain about a rule of the school, that complaint has got to be submitted to the higher tribunal, and I can see that a teacher would never get anything done. Neither, I am afraid, would a Government agency.

I submit to you Members who are afraid that executive agencies may become a law unto themselves and thus threaten democracy that it might also be true if you hamstring those agencies set up to do a constructive piece of work, you would thereby threaten democracy and prevent their carrying out a worthwhile objective because of introduction of a continuing succession of unjustified complaints and long protracted litigation. I think the solution of this problem lies in judicious and probably rather specific action on the part of Congress, and I am afraid this bill does not do the thing I want to do quite as much as anybody else. The very able gentleman from Iowa, in connection with the exceptions, had this to say in defending those exceptions: He explained that the reason those exceptions were put in the bill was because in connection with those agencies, over a period of a reasonable length of time, methods had been worked out to prevent the errors or abuses of which people complain. That is, methods of review of appeal, and so on, have been worked out specifically to fit each individual case of each individual agency. I am afraid that is the only way this job can be done. I am afraid you cannot lump them all together.

I would like to read briefly from the hearings from the criticism of the Brookings Institution on this bill:

> Thus you have the same process of notice, hearing, subpena of witnesses, a formal hearing, a stenographic transcript of the record, a decision of the head of the agency, and an appeal to the circuit courts of appeals, for a simple act such as the suspension of an employee, or the passing upon the quality of a consignment of tea, as you have in respect to the establishment of rate and services for stockyards or the establishment of quotas under the Sugar Control Act.

So I am afraid that the bill includes not only major matters, which should be included, but minor ones which should not be included. It includes matters not only of basic importance, but is also loaded down with the possibility of litigation over a tremendous number of subjects and inconsequential matters so that it will not accomplish the purpose that we are trying to accomplish and will instead lead to a discrediting of the effort to bring about a decent balance as between these matters.

May I say that what we are trying to do here is to make up for the fact that Congress has not legislated more specifically than it has. What ought to have happened is that in the case of each of these agencies at the time the legislation was originally passed matters of this kind should have been provided for, or, at any rate, in the course of time they should be provided for in as specific and careful a manner as possible. There are special problems connected with each agency. They should be so dealt with.

I sincerely regret that I have to make this speech about this bill, because, as I say, I am in deep sympathy with the major objectives that apparently are attempted to be accomplished.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, and what the gentleman points out is exactly what the Attorney General's committee is doing. They are considering each department and bureau separately and making separate and distinct recommendations as to appeal in each one of those diverse and separate bureaus.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. What I believe has concerned and excited the whole House is the experience that many have had, where a committee, for instance, has formulated language specifically, just as the gentleman suggests, with the idea of restraining these bureaus from encroaching and from going beyond the intent of Congress, where the Congress has used every possible means the English language provides to try to restrict them, yet because we have let them run loose and have not called them to account they have seen fit to ignore absolutely the will of Congress. That is why the public is so excited about it.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I may say to the gentleman that I do not believe the Congress has exerted every effort to do that thing carefully.

Mr. REED of New York. I do not say in every case, but in many cases.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I have heard it said on the floor here in the course of this debate that there are some agencies where no appeal is allowed. Perhaps that is wrong. Perhaps it ought to be changed. I am inclined personally to think that appeal to the courts should be possible under almost every circumstance where an administrative ruling of major scope is made and has the force of law. But if so it seems to me the act setting up the agency should be changed with regard to those specific cases, and we should do a careful job.

This little amendment of mine would say, "You cannot go back beyond 2 years in calling in question a rule," on the theory that if it has been in effect for 2 years it is probably all right, or we would have heard a whole lot of complaint about it. Furthermore there must, as I see it, be a limit somewhere; otherwise we will have matters brought into question and before the courts having to do with rulings made 10, 15, or any number of years ago.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I wish to say that I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment. We hear a great deal said about the possibility of dictatorial methods on the part of bureaucrats, but cannot justice be delayed and thwarted to just as great an extent by the long, drawn out, and tedious procedure in the courts which would inevitably result from this measure in operation?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am perfectly frank to say that I believe the truth lies between the two extremes. I do not believe we have arrived at it yet. I believe we have to arrive at it. I am convinced in my own mind that a measure seeking the objectives which are claimed for this measure is certain to be passed in the near future, but I am afraid that this particular bill is not the bill that is going to do the thing its proponents claim it will do.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Again I agree, for there is need of the basic idea of this bill, but I am afraid of the extreme possibility of the bill in its present form.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman does not claim that even if his amendment is added to the bill and becomes law it will remedy all the measure is deficient in?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No. I am afraid my amendment is only an example, or only one way in which it seems to me the language of the bill is so broad that it makes it so that it will bog down the work not only of the newer agencies of government, but for example, of the Department of Agriculture, Civil Service Commission, and many more and will cause terrible congestion in the courts and be unworkable. I wish I could avoid that conclusion, but I cannot. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted to me I wish to read an editorial that appears in today's Washington News. It is entitled "Reactionary Liberals." I shall read it without comment:

> In the light of American history, it is a strange thing that the principles of the Logan-Walter bill should be attacked by those who call themselves liberals.

Yet the debate in Congress is producing just such attacks on this proposal to safeguard and make uniform the exercise of legislative and judicial powers by Federal administrative agencies. It is argued that these agencies must be left free to attain desirable ends; that to subject them to the checks and balances provided by the bill would hamper their efficiency. It amounts to saying that agencies created by Congress, and manned by appointed officials, must have more concentrated and unrestricted power than Congress itself.

That is reactionary doctrine—the doctrine rejected by true American liberals, who saw clearly that bureaucracy could not be trusted to work only toward desirable ends, but must be controlled if liberty was to survive. To those who oppose the Logan-Walter bill in the name of liberalism we commend the words of Thomas Jefferson:

"In a free country every power is dangerous which is not bound up by general rules. * * * It is not by consolidation or concentration of powers, but by their distribution that good government is effected. * * * Consolidation is but toryism in disguise.

[Applause.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a copy of H. R. 8935, which was introduced on March 14, 1940. Instead of referring to laws that are already on the statute books I should like to refer to one that might under circumstances existing in several preceding Congresses have been already on the statute books under suspension of the rules.

I have not been able to count accurately how many times in this bill these words, which I shall quote, or words similar to them occur, but I believe it is somewhere in the neighborhood of between 25 and 40 times in these 104 pages.

The Commission shall have authority by rules and regulations in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

This phrase recurs and recurs.

Mr. KELLER. What bill is it?

Mr. HINSHAW. This is the investment trust bill, pending before my committee, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Subsection (c) of section 6 of this bill states:

The Commission, by rules and regulations upon its own motion, or by order upon application, may conditionally or unconditionally exempt any person, security, or transaction, or any class or classes of persons, securities, or transactions, from any provision or provisions of this title or of any rule or regulation thereunder, if and to the extent that the Commission finds such exemption necessary or appropriate in the public interest and consistent with the protection of investors.

You talk about liberal law. That certainly is liberal insofar as the Commission is concerned, because they can exempt anybody or anything for any reason if they see fit. But, Mr. Chairman, that paragraph makes it possible for the Commission to play favorites or to hold another on the end of a rope with a noose.

Further in the bill we find this language. Section 38 (a) states:

The Commission, in its discretion, may investigate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters which it may deem necessary or appropriate to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this title or any rule or regulations thereunder.

I ask you in all sincerity if they cannot conduct any kind of a fishing expedition they may see fit to conduct if this bill is passed in its present form, because it states here that they may investigate not only whether any person has violated but whether any person is about to violate the law. Just think of it. Nobody is protected from investigation under those terms. It sounds like an edict of King George III or the Nazi Gestapo.

In this connection, I hold in my hand a book which is authored by Mr. J. Edward Jones, and to which the chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], referred yesterday. The case of Mr. Jones was twice taken into the courts of the United States. The title of this book is "And So They Indicted Me." I do not know anything about Mr. J. Edward Jones. I never had heard of him before reading this book. I have never met him and never expect to. The only things I know about his case are contained in the Supreme Court decision and inside of this volume which he had the temerity to write. Mr. Jones, in his own words, tells his case. He sets it forth here and tells exactly what happened to him after he had the temerity to ask the President of the United States to fire Mr. Harold L. Ickes for what he believed to be ample cause. I think every Member of Congress has received a copy of this book, but I have found only a few who have read it.

I should like to quote to you from page 108, where he says:

Arriving at the offices of the Commission—

That is, the Securities and Exchange Commission—at 120 Broadway, with my counsel, Mr. George S. Leisure, I found the Commission represented in its action against me by their new lawyer, the hostile young Mr. Flynn, supported by a staff of assistants.

I would like to quote the rest of it and I shall ask for permission in the House to insert some of these words.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. I just wanted to read this to you. When he asked what he was accused of, the trial examiner answered:

As to the nature of that complaint I am not advised. I do not know what the information is.

In other words, he was brought up before the Commission purely and simply on a fishing expedition, and without any rhyme or reason whatsoever other than to be persecuted, and in due course of his long tests before the courts he was entirely vindicated in his denial of having committed any crime under any law, but it took him 3 years to get out from under the capricious acts of the United States in their persecution of him.

Mr. Chairman, under leave granted me, I quote the following paragraph from page 104 of Mr. Jones' book entitled "And So They Indicted Me":

The wrath of the American Government on the warpath against any particular individual is something with which to cope. When orders "to get a man" originate at the top and go down the line through all the cogs of governmental machinery, there is a force, a power, an influence let loose that almost baffles opposition. The only thing that can successfully withstand it is the might of truth, ably and, of course, expensively presented, and supported by those fundamental principles of the American governmental system which still stand as mighty bulwarks against tyrannical abuses of power to the detirment of individual freedom in this country.

Commencing on page 107, Mr. Jones states as follows:

The hearing that started, its method of conduct, the indignities to which I was subjected in spite of my rights as a citizen, and the knowledge gained as to the high source of origination of the case which had been launched all contributed, along with the sequence of events that followed, to a long and bitter struggle for my individual freedom, my liberty, my very existence. Eventual victory for me—costly beyond a measure never to be realized—came in two great legal actions, one culminating in a final decision of the United States Supreme Court and one ending in the final verdict of a jury of 12 men of my peers. In the Supreme Court's own words, my victory proves that in America "arbitrary power and the rule of the Constitution cannot both exist. They are antagonistic and incompatible forces; and one or the other must of necessity perish whenever they are brought into conflict." That ruling alone is so basically important to the safeguarding of freedom for individual citizens as against the tyrannical acts and despotic power of usurpers in government in this country that the sacrifice made is willingly laid down.

Arriving at the offices of the Commission at 120 Broadway with my counsel, Mr. George S. Leisure, I found the Commission represented in its action against me by their new lawyer, the hostile young Mr. Flynn, supported by a staff of assistants.

I was informed by another lawyer of the Commission's staff, who acted as the judge or trial examiner, that the investigation was to be conducted by authority of an "order" of the Securities and Exchange Commission. At the very outset I asked to be apprised of the nature of the complaint which, I was advised for the first time, the Commission had against me.

Strange as it may seem, the Securities and Exchange Commission insisted upon conducting its investigation of me, but refused to advise me of the nature of its complaint, if any of such it had. I desired to know, of course, what it was I should defend myself against and I therefore said: "This being the first time that I have heard from the Commission that there was any complaint whatsoever lodged against any of my operations, I do not know whether I am within my rights to ask the nature of the complaint. * * *

I am not aware of any complaint. I do not know the nature of it. I would ask you to let me know what that is. * * * I appear to have been summoned here to give you information, and I would think—my instinct would tell me, at least, that I should be apprised of the nature of the complaint."

But the trial examiner advised me that he himself didn't know what the complaint was. He said, "As to the nature of that complaint, I am not advised. I do not know what the information is."

I then asked, "What is the nature of the violation alleged or otherwise?" The trial examiner answered, "That I am not informed of, other than what is stated in the order. I would not be informed as the trial examiner."

I therefore was compelled to subject myself to a searching, brutal, and hostile investigation of many complicated aspects of my private and personal business affairs without knowing of any charge against me except that the Commission had "ordered" the investigation. The Supreme Court later, in my own case, condemned "fishing expeditions" and the Commission, saying: "The citizen when interrogated about his private affairs, has a right before answering to know why the inquiry is made; and if the purpose disclosed is not a legitimate one he may not be compelled to answer." The Court further stated that, "An investigation not based upon specified grounds is quite as objectionable as a search warrant not based upon specific statements of fact. Such an investigation or such a search, is unlawful in its inception."

I was handed, at this first appearance before the trial examiner, a subpena requiring the production by me of voluminous books, files, and records, among which particularly was demanded the names and addresses of my clients.

Mr. Chairman, many of our people wonder why it is that we suffer unemployment, why capital is in hiding, why it seems necessary for the Government to step in with public works and relief in order to fill the gap caused by the lack of employment of idle funds. I have endeavored to show some of the reasons why capital is in hiding. I have quoted from a proposed law which is typical of many that have been passed. Anyone with half an eye can see that capital is in hiding, put away on the top shelf in a cracker can because of the fear that people have of their Government, fear of what it may and can and has done to them for little else than purposes of punitive persecution.

We hear lots of talk about crooked businessmen. Some have been indicted and many have been threatened but with all of the shouting and tumult, the charges, investigations, and threats, only a meager handful have been brought to trial, found guilty, and put behind bars. In the meantime businessmen are lost in a maze of "such rules and regulations as the administration may promulgate," not knowing from which agency they may be shot at next, not knowing when they may unwittingly violate one of the thousands of such rules and regulations that have been promulgated, and not knowing whether the next set of rules and regulations may wipe them out entirely. Is it any wonder that unemployment remains at near the highest point on record and that "new money" is not venturing forth in this cockeyed scheme of things? The Walter-Logan bill will help to clear the air and give courage to those who need it in order that we may go forward to new heights of prosperity and the employment of our people and their resources. I am convinced that at least 95 percent of all our people are honest, hard working, and earnest in their wish to see our country prosper as a whole. If there are a few crooks let us deal with them swiftly and surely, but why should all of the people take a beating in order to make sure that a few worthy sinners are punished?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I went into a country-town circus show, lured by a picture on the outside of parents and their son. On the inside were two dwarfs of about 30 pounds each, a man and a woman, and the son, who weighed 320 pounds. They were seated there. I think it was a fake, but nevertheless the illustration comes back to my mind.

First, we had legislative, executive, and judicial government, and that was all. Since then we have had bureaucratic departmental government that, at a glance, looks like the way that son looked beside those parents. It is exercising legislative, executive, and judicial functions and increasing those functions year by year.

I wanted to answer very briefly some of the remarks made by some of the so-called new dealers, and I want to throw down this challenge to the new dealer if he is present with his ears, and say that you will not find a man in this body who has followed closer the New Deal in the entire record than I have.

I am well aware of the fact that I would like to be as optimistic as you are that the New Deal and some of its agencies would go on forever, and I know that you say this is an attempt to hamstring the New Deal and its agencies. Tell me what assurance you have that the present New Deal itself will go on or that the personnel of those agencies that you select will continue. Let us suppose that you put the shoe on the other foot and you get a reactionary set of personnel operating those agencies and they are applying the screws to you. You will be praying for some relief in the courts and will be unable to get it from a reactionary set of men administering those same agencies which you are commending. [Applause.]

This is a permanent law. I shudder to think of a change of administration and personnel in the New Deal agencies which you commend and those agencies being placed in the hands of reactionaries, which they will be, and there will be no more recourse at any time than we have now. So there is something to think about along that line when you talk about the New Deal.

Let us keep the record straight, too, if you please. Mills Logan, the Senator from Kentucky, was not a corporation lawyer. He was a new dealer, and I am going to say, with all due charity to the Members of this House, although it may be a fault of my judgment or overadmiration, that he was a better lawyer than any Member that sits on this floor, by reason of long experience in the practice of the law, because some of you lawyers have been here in Congress for 20 years and did not have the practice that he had as attorney general and as chief justice of the supreme court when he came here. He was a new dealer, and I want to recall to you the fact that Mills Logan, the author of this bill, was for the President's Court bill, and yet some of you people say that this is an attempt to hamstring the New Deal. I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that Mills Logan was a T. V. A. man from A to Z, and to say that this is an attempt to hamstring the T. V. A. in western Kentucky, where he came from, hardly bears reasoning.

Let us keep the record straight as we go along. This is not something born to throttle the New Deal. It is true that in 1932, before the New Deal came into existence, it was up then, but long before 1932 it was the result of the mumblings and the grumblings of the people affected.

Then you say they will congest the courts with litigation, but as I go over the country and step into any courthouse in the land I see hundreds of people on trial. What about? The constitutionality of the law? No; not at all; neither the States nor the Federal Constitution nor the city ordinances are being attacked. It is a question of fact altogether. That is what they are litigating about; but this bill only permits the attacking of a general rule of a Government department. Do you suppose that every man who is aggrieved by any department will go into the courts on a question of fact? Not at all; he only goes into court with respect to a rule to see whether or not that rule is good for the 48 States; and if the courts say that rule is bad, who would say that it ought to continue? He is questioning the right of the people of 48 States to test such a rule, and the question that we bring into use here by the processes of this bill is whether or not a rule promulgated for the benefit of 120,000,000 people is a good rule or a bad rule. If it is good, it remains. If it is bad, it ought to go out. So this question of cluttering up the courts every time somebody gets fired or raises some question of fact no more pertains here than it does to the State courts, where you see hundreds of people being tried on questions of fact and not one of them questioning the statute or the constitutionality of the law, and that is the way this will operate. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLER. I object.

Mr. WALTER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, the members of a legislative body are often spoken of today as solons. There was another lawgiver in ancient Greece, down in Sparta, named Lycurgus. I presume we are not called by that name because it is hard to pronounce and harder to spell. No doubt there is another reason why we modern lawmakers ought not to be called by that name. Lycurgus thought that all laws ought to be simply written so that the most ignorant citizen could understand them. He felt that the body of laws ought to be drafted in such brief form that every citizen could memorize them and know them. That certainly would not apply to legislation today. So complex is our legislation now that even a Philadelphia lawyer cannot understand it.

In discussing this measure we are told that we must bring some regulation to the regulators. We pass laws in this Congress setting up certain agencies, and assign some powers to them, and we are told that they are running away with those powers and that we are in grave danger of being ruled by a bunch of bureaucrats. Just a few days ago, when I was talking loosely about the evils of bureaucrats, I was asked by a lady to define the term. I had considerable embarrassment and no little trouble explaining it, although, of course, I have heard very much concerning them. However, when I go down Pennsylvania Avenue or Constitution Avenue, I have some difficulty putting my fingers upon a real, honest-to-goodness bureaucrat. I imagine a bureaucrat is a man downtown in one of the departments who rules contrary to my wishes. I think he must be a real bureaucrat. I do not wish to name any of them, but assume that they exist, assume that they make rulings having the force of law and are sometimes arbitrary in the enforcement of those rulings.

A real question is, How much will we save ourselves by subjecting this same arbitrary ruling to interpretation of another group—a legalistic group of highly trained lawyers who require time as well as money? Would it not be like—well, a mythical term I would use, if I could pronounce the name; but are we not between two evils? I think we are between the devil and the deep blue sea. Yes; Charybdis and Scylla—I thank the scholarly gentleman from New York—we must be careful to shun both Charybdis and Scylla. Being a plebeian myself, my mind also turns back to the early days of Rome, to a time when Roman law was unwritten and when Roman law was whatever the magistrate said it was. In those very early days of Rome, the plebeians felt that something was put over on them because they did not make the laws and because they did not know clearly what the laws were. Accordingly they insisted that the decemvirs make the laws so very definitely that even the humblest citizen might know the law and his exact rights under the law. I find that I have a great sympathy for those early plebeians who had to live under the law without having any say as to what that law should be. It is almost as bad today to have to live under law that may be so variously interpreted to satisfy the whims of someone other than those most vitally affected by the law. It seems to me that confusion must result from bureaucratic lawmaking on the one hand, or legalistic lawmaking through interpretation on the other.

I favor the principle of this legislation. I have made some study, although I am not a lawyer, of constitutional government. I want to see to it that the departments down yonder carry out the laws as intended by the Congress—that they do not exceed their authority. We have to delegate some authority to them. Wherever human rights are jeopardized, I want to see those rights properly safeguarded by judicial review.

Ever since I have been a Member of this body I have said in the Well of this House a number of times that I favor judicial review. I have never objected to the highest court of the land overruling acts passed by Congress when such acts were really unconstitutional. Although there is no provision in the Constitution of the United States saying specifically that the Supreme Court may nullify the acts of the national lawmaking body, that Court has been doing it from the time of John Marshall down, and I approve of it. I favor continuation of judicial review, but I do not want to see some big violators of the law override the law through technicalities and long-drawn-out delays, and that is why I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] so that the man with the longest purse shall not win his cases in this or any other matter when it comes to a trial in our courts. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that in the amendment about to be voted upon the words "2 years" be changed to "3 years."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Committee accepts the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VOORHIS of California) there were—ayes 66, noes 35.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDICIAL REVIEW OF RULES

SEC. 3. In addition to the jurisdiction heretofore conferred upon the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, that court shall have jurisdiction, upon petition filed within 30 days from the date any administrative rule is published in the Federal Register, to hear and determine whether any such rule issued or continued in force in accordance with section 2 of this act is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or the statute under which issued. No rule shall be held invalid except for violation of the Constitution or for conflict with a statute or for lack of authority conferred upon the agency issuing it by the statute or statutes pursuant to which it was issued or for failure to comply with section 2 of this act. A copy of the petition, and copies of all subsequent pleadings shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, who shall direct the defense of the rule. The court may refer such petition and any reply thereto for the taking of such evidence as shall be material and relevant thereto. The court shall give preference to such petitions and shall have no power in the proceedings except to render a declaratory judgment holding such rule legal and valid or holding it contrary to law and invalid. If the rule is held contrary to law and invalid, the rule thereafter shall not have any force or effect except to confer immunity as provided in section 2 of this act. Nothing contained in this section shall prevent the determination of the validity or invalidity of any rule which may be involved in any suit or review of an administrative decision or order in any court of the United States as now or hereafter authorized by law.

STATUTORY APPROVAL AND AUTHORITY FOR ADMINISTRATIVE BOARDS AND PRESCRIBING THEIR PROCEDURE

SEC. 4. (a) Every head of an agency shall from time to time designate three employees of his agency for such intra-agency boards (including the field service of such agency) as may be necessary and desirable. Where there are intra-agency boards existing on the date of approval of this act, they shall be reestablished and function in accordance with this act. Wherever practicable, such boards shall be designated in various sections of the United States to hear any controversy which may have there arisen. At least one employee designated for each such board shall be a lawyer, who shall act as chairman of the board. When the members of any board are not engaged in the hearing of administrative appeals as hereinafter provided, such employees shall be assigned to other duties in the service of the agency concerned. No member of a board who has participated in a particular case or in the preparation, draft, or approval of any rule which may be involved, shall sit in appeal of the case or application of the rule. Each board shall be impartial, free, and independent in the hearing and determination of administrative appeals.

(b) When any person is aggrieved by a decision of any officer or employee of any agency, such person may notify the head of the agency in writing of objections thereto specifically requesting that the controversy be referred to a board, constituted as hereinbefore provided, for hearing and determination. Such notice shall be given not more than 20 days after the date of receipt of a registered letter notifying him of the decision, act, or failure to act. Such written objections shall be referred promptly to an intra-agency board for the agency concerned. At a time and place to be designated and communicated to the aggrieved person, he shall have an opportunity at an early day for a full and fair hearing before said board, at which time there shall be introduced into the record the testimony and any documents or objects relating to the appeal before said board. Any person having a substantial interest in the controversy shall have the right to intervene therein. A stenographer shall be assigned to the hearings before the board to take and transcribe the testimony. All testimony, other evidence, and all proceedings before the board, shall be reduced to a written record and filed in the agency concerned and a copy thereof shall be furnished to the aggrieved person upon his written request therefor at a charge not exceeding the actual cost thereof. Within 30 days after the day the evidence and arguments are closed, the board shall make written findings of facts and separate decision thereon, which shall be subject to the written approval, disapproval, or modification of the head of the agency concerned or of such person as he shall designate in writing to act for him. A copy of the findings of fact and decision, showing the action if any, of the head of the agency concerned or his representative, shall be filed in the agency as a part of the written record in the case and a copy shall be mailed to the aggrieved person and to the intervenors, if any. The United States shall take such action as may now or hereafter be provided by law to enforce the decision of the agency unless there be pending judicial review thereof as hereinafter provided.

(c) The chairman of any board, upon request of any party to the proceedings, shall require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documents and all other objects before said board without other showing than required by the rules in United States district courts for the issuance of subpenas by such courts. Any witness subpenaed or whose deposition is taken shall receive the same fees and mileage as witnesses in courts of the United States, to be paid by the party at whose instance the witness appears or depcsition is taken. In the event of disobedience of a subpena issued as herein provided, the chairman, or any party to the proceedings, may apply to any district court of the United States of the jurisdiction in which the witness may be found for an order requiring his attendance and testimony and the production of all documents and objects described in the subpena. The chairman of the board shall be authorized to administer oaths to witnesses and there shall be a right of examination and cross-examination of witnesses.

(d) When the matter in controversy is such that the delay incident to the hearing and decision of the case would create an emergency contrary to the public interest and there is administrative action or inaction, prior to or without such hearing and determination, resulting in the destruction of the property or damage to the aggrieved person involved in such controversy, the findings of fact and decision when made by the board shall state the amount of pecuniary damage suffered by the aggrieved person and upon approval thereof by the head of the agency concerned, the amount of damages so approved, if acceptable to the aggrieved person, shall be certified to the Congress for an appropriation with which to pay the same.

(e) Where any matter arises out of the activities of any independent agency, it may be provided by rule that such matter may be heard in the first instance by one of its trial examiners, who shall file with the independent agency the written record and his written findings of fact and separate decision, which shall be made in all instances, whether by the examiner or the independent agency, after reasonable public notice and a full and fair hearing as hereinbefore in this section provided. A copy or copies thereof shall be sent by registered mail to the aggrieved party. The independent agency shall enter at the expiration of 30 days such appropriate decision as may be proper unless within said 30 days the aggrieved party shall signify his written consent to the entry of the decision or shall file by registered mail with the independent agency his written objections to the findings of fact and decision of the examiner, in which event the independent agency shall not enter its decision without first according a public hearing upon reasonable notice to such party. Such hearing shall be before the members of the independent agency, if it has not less than three members, or before any three of such members. If the independent agency has less than three members, an intra-agency board shall be constituted in the manner provided in subsection (a) of this section, upon which the member or members of such agency may serve at his or their election.

(f) No hearing shall be permitted before any agency or independent agency seeking affirmative relief against the United States concerning any controversy which arose more than 1 year prior to the date on which there was filed with such agency or independent agency a written request for such hearing as provided in this section.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 20, after the word "rule", strike out the remainder of line 20 and all of lines 21 and 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to pages 4 and 5 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. What does the gentleman propose as an amendment?

Mr. CELLER. On page 4, the first amendment on line 22, after the word "Register", I seek to add the words "by any person with demonstrable interest which is threatened."

Mr. WALTER. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 4, line 22, after the word "Register", insert "by any person with a demonstrable interest which is threatened."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, unlike all of the other provisions in the bill, I am heartily in favor of this particular section which is called the provision for declaratory judgment—that gives the right to the court to pass upon a rule or regulation prior to actual controversy. I am thoroughly in accord with that principle. I am thoroughly in accord with this particular section which sets up this right to have a declaratory judgment pronounced by the courts concerning rules and regulations. However, I am a little concerned with the wording, in this sense: Any Tom, Dick, or Harry might petition to have a declaratory judgment on any one of these rules or regulations. While it is true that section 3 must be read with section 2, particularly subdivision (c), which speaks of "any persen substantially interested," those words, "substantially interested," are absent in section 3. I think it would be better if we would limit the right to bring these judicial proceedings to somebody who had some sort of actual or substantial interest in the rule or regulation. I use the words "demonstrable interest which is threatened." Otherwise any interloper, anybody, under the present wording, whether he had an interest or not, might be permitted to bring these proceedings.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I have not given any consideration to the amendment, but would it be necessary to show an interest different than the public interest, under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. CELLER. I think it would be.

Mr. MICHENER. If that is true, it would be very dangerous.

Mr. CELLER. I do not think it would necessarily mean what the gentleman says. I think if anybody has a substantial demonstrable interest, without consideration of the public interest, under my amendment he could bring these proceedings. Under the present ruling the individual could bring his proceedings to test the rule whether his interest was or was not consistent with the public interest.

Mr. MICHENER. May I suggest to the gentleman that he take this matter up with the Senate, where it could be given consideration.

Mr. CELLER. I think we have a right to bring it up here. I raised the question before, and this is the proper forum in which to debate a matter as important as this. We are embarking upon a novel proceeding and we should not be relegated to the Senate. We are able-bodied and able-minded, and we know what we are doing. I think it is within our rights—nay, more, it is our duty to determine a question of this character. For that reason I press this amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. The only reason I suggested what I did suggest was because the matter is so important. It has not had the consideration it should have.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. May I ask the gentleman where he got that language?

Mr. CELLER. I got that language from one of the officials of the Attorney General's office.

Mr. WALTER. Is it taken from any judicial decision?

Mr. CELLER. Yes, it is. I do not have the decision with me.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not know the meaning of the word "demonstrable." It is seldom, if ever, you will hear that word used in any judicial inquiry. Why does not the gentleman use the same language that is used in subsection (c) on page 3? Why does he not use the term "substantially interested"?

Mr. CELLER. If the chairman of the subcommittee would be willing to compromise and use those words, that is perfectly satisfactory to me, but nevertheless I do not think the words "substantially interested" go far enough, when it comes to a proceeding involving judicial review of the rules. In the one instance, section 2, you have a proceeding before an agency, whereas under section 3 you have a proceeding before a court.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the proceeding before a court is to review the finding of the agency. In order to get before the agency you must show a substantial interest. Why do we set up a new rule——

Mr. CELLER. I would be agreeable to have the language consistent with the language contained in section 2. We ought to have something there, however, to indicate a limitation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As far as I am concerned, I cannot see any substantial objection if the gentleman uses the words "substantially interested," because the courts have defined the word "substantial," and we all know what that means.

Mr. WALTER. May I say it is not necessary, because section 3 refers back to paragraph (c) of section 2.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not think it is necessary, but if it is going to be adopted, it should be adopted in language that has already been interpreted by the courts. The word "substantial" has been interpreted and we know what it means. I dare say there is not a lawyer on this floor who has heard the term "demonstrable interest" used.

Mr. CELLER. I am perfectly willing to substitute the words appearing in section 2. I think it should appear there in section 3 for safety's sake.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may be further amended by substituting the words "substantially interested."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER as modified: On page 4, line 22, after the word "Register", insert "by any person with a substantial interest which is threatened."

Mr. CELLER. The language should be exactly as in line 19, page 3, "by any person substantially interested."

Mr. SABATH. Would the phrase "substantial interest" include any stockholder in any corporation that might be involved?

Mr. CELLER. I think that if a stockholder were affected by the particular rule or regulation, he would be permitted to take the proceeding.

Mr. SABATH. That would be a far-reaching thing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER, as modified: On page 4, line 22, after the word "Register", insert "by any person substantially interested."

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment, even as amended, will not be adopted. I am afraid we are getting a confused situation here which is not necessary. No amendment is needed here. The language of the bill and the decisions of the courts, I think, take care of any situation that might arise. Bear in mind that the appeals which lie under this section are not appeals in cases or controversy where someone has a direct specific interest and goes into court on the ground that it is a case or controversy.

We have provided here for an appeal to ask for an advisory opinion. That is what it should be called, rather than declaratory judgment. We all know that in order to get into any court at any time on any subject one must prove that he has a right to be there, that he has some interest he is entitled to appear in the court to defend. It is true even here that any person coming in to contest the rule would have to show that he had a sufficient interest in the rule to allow him to appear in court and ask for this advisory opinion.

I do not believe the wording of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York clarifies the situation. I would rather it be left in accordance with the general rules of this bill and the general principles of law. If that is done, I think this will be the situation: A tribunal makes a ruling, some person comes into court; he is not required to show at that moment that he has a specific right that is going to be violated that would make a case or controversy; but he has got to show such a sufficient interest that the court would hold that he was entitled, under the rules of law as long explained and interpreted by the courts, to defend his interest.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman mean to imply that when he takes an appeal within the agency he shall have one status as to substantial interest, but that when he takes the appeal to the court he shall have a different status, which may be inconsistent or different than is implied in the words "substantial interest"?

Mr. GWYNNE. When we get into appeals from decisions that is an entirely different matter.

Mr. CELLER. That is what you are considering when you take up section 3; that is, appeals from decisions.

Mr. GWYNNE. No; that is a judicial review of the rules.

Mr. CELLER. I meant of the rules. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Does not the fact that this is a novel type of procedure make it all the more necessary that we define here the type of interest necessary to make a litigant eligible to request this review from the court?

Mr. GWYNNE. I agree with the gentleman; but the point I make is that I think the courts already understand it. I think they have defined it. If we are going to define it legislatively, we should take sufficient time to do it so that the courts will know exactly what we mean.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. It seems to me that in acts providing for declaratory judgments a definition is always provided of the litigants who may take advantage of declaratory-judgment legislation, and it seems to me that in setting up something analogous here we should in this particular paragraph define the interest a litigant should have in order to come in under its provisions. I think some such language should be included.

Mr. GWYNNE. It is my contention that if we are going to do it legislatively, we should not do it hastily on the floor by way of amendment but should rather let it be considered in some other body.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, under the same request, I offer an amendment to page 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: On page 5, line 10, after the word "who", insert "in conjunction with the attorney for the department, agency, bureau, or establishment."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would permit the attorney for the particular establishment involved to prosecute the judicial review of the rule. To my mind there is no reason why that process should be limited to the Attorney General. I think there should be an express provision that the legal head of the agency should, in conjunction with the Attorney General, act.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. Chairman, the language on page 5, line 10, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] complains about was changed from the bill he originally introduced. Under that bill the Attorney General would have to conduct the defense of the rule. The committee considering the bill felt that the legal advisor for the department affected should be permitted to participate in the proceedings, but it also recognized the fact that the Attorney General is the chief law officer of the United States; so we changed the language of Mr. CELLER's bill so that the bill now reads "who shall direct the defense of the rule." Obviously this permits anyone that the Attorney General wishes to associate himself with in the defense of a rule to participate. The language in the amendment is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman think the agency should be precluded from participating in the proceeding?

Mr. WALTER. Indeed not, and that is not intended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: At the end of section F, in line 24, page 10, strike out the period and insert semicolon, and the following: "Provided, however, That a hearing shall be permitted concerning any controversy which arose not more than 3 years prior to the date of the passage of this act if, on behalf of the claimant in such controversy, in an effort to secure affirmative relief, there has been introduced a bill in Congress seeking such relief."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the language of my amendment at first reading would appear to be cumbersome, but it has been carefully prepared so as to conform with the language in section (f). We have attempted to supply every necessary element that that language would suggest. Furthermore, we tried to limit the amendment to apply only to the one case. We have to have general language, of course, but the general language, when boiled down, applies only to the case of the State of Ohio. At the present time, if this bill passes with the time limitation of 1 year it will not include the Ohio case, because this provides that to come within this bill the controversy must not have arisen more than 1 year prior to the time when a written request had been filed. This amendment will permit Ohio to file its claim. It clarifies the situation.

I am not going to throw a scare into anybody, but those who have prepared this bill will find, if they do not amend this section, many people who think they have a right to take advantage of the law will not have that right because you have a 1-year limitation, to follow a written request, and very few people that have any claims now will be protected. They will be excluded because of the 1-year limitation and the requirement of having to file a written application. However, my amendment is not aimed to raise that question. We are simply acting to provide that that one claim may be considered. We are not providing for other claims, but if there are any other claims which come within the language, it would be proper and right to consider them.

Mr. Chairman, there is no use making a speech to the full membership of the Committee because in a proceeding like this the amendments go up or down on the sanction of those who sit behind those tables and have charge of the passing of the bill. If those who now sit behind the table want to do justice, now is the time to do it. There is no question, and there never has been any question about the justice of Ohio's case. Originally it was passed by the House by unanimous consent. It passed the Senate by unanimous consent, and it came very near passing with a two-thirds vote over the President's veto. So there is no question about the justice of the Ohio case. It is just a question for those who sit behind the table to consider and to say if they want this amendment adopted so that this one case may be included. I know that the membership of the House favors this amendment. If those who sit behind the tables think that our claim will come within the provisions of the bill as now written we are happy for that and hope that time will justify their views. I have offered these amendments so as to protect the interests of the people of Ohio in case the bill does not cover our case. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to call the attention of the membership of the House to a book which has just been issued by the Brookings Institution called Federal Regulatory Action and Control. The subject of the pending bill, the Logan-Walter bill, is completely covered in this book. I would deem it advisable that each Member who wishes to be informed about this subject read at least parts of the book.

May I call attention to the critique of the proposals in this book? First, as to the implementation of the statutes, and I have to hurry on. Next, as to the constitutional difficulties. In the third place, the practical difficulties, and let me just quote one section from this book:

Many practical difficulties appear in connection with the requirements of the bar association bill respecting the implementation of statutes. The chief of these arises from the provisions that rules and regulations are to be made after public notice and opportunity for hearing, and that they are to be issued within 1 year from the enactment of the statute to which they appertain. For a number of reasons such provisions seem unwise. Modern administrative rule making is a highly technical and complicated thing which often demands much study, the extensive use of statistics in order to see whether a new rule is needed or whether one already, in effect, is working properly, or even a scientific investigation covering a long period of time. A blanket formulation in advance of actual experience might result in ill-considered and hasty regulations, which could be corrected only after the hearing and notice procedure, and so ad infinitum.

* * * * * * *

The burden laid upon administrative officers under this provision would be very heavy because of the large number of matters to be considered; and the benefit would be negligible, since most existing regulations have passed the test of actual experience, from the viewpoint of the administrator and the general public.

Then on the question of judicial control over rules and regulations, this is said:

The crippling of administrative activities which would probably result from the foregoing provisions, should they become law, deserves mature consideration. It seems at first sight almost meaningless to bestow upon one court the power to pass upon the validity or invalidity of rules and regulations without simultaneously withdrawing such power from other courts. But upon careful consideration the question arises whether this jurisdictional device does not hamper administration while leaving the individual unrestrained by the decision.

The proposed arrangement seems dangerous because it means that statutes as well as rules may be declared unconstitutional by an agency which is not performing true judicial functions.

As to general difficulties:

In case this burden of rendering declaratory judgments under the bar association bill—

Or Walter-Logan bill—were thrown upon the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, it would be necessary to increase the personnel of the court.

Increases in personnel would also be needed for the Department of Justice and practically all other agencies of the Government. Whether the added cost and delay would yield any real benefits is highly questionable.

Finally, general judicial review of rules and regulations, whether real or pretended, is unnecessary. It adds nothing to the substantial effect of the remedies now available. Under existing laws, if an administrative rule or regulation threatens immediate injury to a legal right, the proper court may issue an injunction or other process which will prevent the injury from being done or becoming irremediable. Any rule which appears unconstitutional, illegal, or ultra vires may now be attacked when the administration seeks to apply it, since an actual case or controversy then arises.

Mr. COX. Who is the author of the study which the gentleman is reading?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Frederick F. Blachly. Everybody has been quoting the Brookings Institution books around here for a long time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it is very significant that this book, entitled "Federal Regulatory Action and Control," should be signed by Frederick F. Blachly and Miriam E. Oatman. The fact of the matter is that Miriam E. Oatman is Mrs. Blachly. This book is not a recommendation of the Brookings Institution. The ideas expressed therein are Mr. Blachly's individual ideas. And why? He recognizes that there is a very serious problem confronting us today, but he has suggested a different solution. Mr. Blachly and Miriam Oatman suggest that we ought to set up in the District of Columbia a new court called an administrative review court, and they would give to that court through legislation all the power the circuit court of appeals now has. They would set up downtown another bureau, another agency costing the taxpayers considerably more than it would ever cost them for the few additional judges that could conceivably be required under this proposed act.

The provision with respect to this special court was submitted to the Judiciary Committee of the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] at the same time he introduced the original recommendation of the American Bar Association. That idea has been given thought for a long period of time. I do not know of anyone who agrees with it. Certainly the Committee on the Judiciary could not be persuaded to provide the solution that Mr. Blachly thinks is a feasible one, namely the erection of a new court.

Let me point out to you some of the inconsistencies. My very dear friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] has pointed out through this book that it would be unwise to hold public hearings on proposed changes in rules or the adoption or promulgation of rules. Have we ever found it difficult to conduct a hearing when we were considering a statute? If it is feasible to hold hearings when statutes are being considered, certainly we ought to insist that hearings be held when rules are being considered.

May I point out another thing that is entirely wrong in this work? The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] said that a rule should be permitted to be changed. We recognize that. On page 3, line 16, it is provided that rules may from time to time after the adoption of the original rule be adopted as the need requires. I cannot conceive of a work more full of errors than is this one. Mr. Blachly appeared before the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and of the House and presented a chart showing the agencies and their functions. Every single agency was broken down. The chart shows how the agency was created, whether or not there is a review, and how much of a review can be had in the courts. It is a complete study over a long period of time on the very question that the Attorney General's committee is today taking up.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman just now spoke about hearings. I wish to ask the gentleman about the Supreme Court. Did it have a hearing in connection with the issuance of its rules on civil procedure?

Mr. WALTER. No. The House adopted a resolution calling on the Supreme Court to promulgate a uniform system of rules. A similar provision with respect to administrative agencies was contained in the original proposal of the American Bar Association.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Well, they did not have it.

Mr. WALTER. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman stated that the authors of that book want a sort of a legislative court set up in the District of Columbia?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the provisions of the gentleman's bill ever get to be law, is it not a fact that he is setting up 25 additional circuit courts in the United States?

Mr. WALTER. Of course not.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Is not the gentleman setting up 60 more?

Mr. WALTER. Of course, he is not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to point out, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] pointed out a moment ago, that the Supreme Court, for example, is authorized by statute to adopt and promulgate rules of civil procedure for the district courts of the United States. There is no provision whatsoever that any litigant or prospective litigant who thinks some rule should be changed may petition the Supreme Court for a modification of the rule and insist upon a public hearing on his application. I want to get that matter cleared up.

Much mention has been made of a bill which I offered. I did offer some time ago a bill that was handed to me and which was somewhat like the American Bar Association bill, the Walter bill. After mature reflection and careful study I felt that that bill should not receive any further consideration. I changed my mind on the bill, and in that connection I will say this: "A wise man altereth his purpose, but a foole persevereth in his foly." I refused to persevere in any kind of error, and I refused to have anything more to do with the bill insofar as giving it favorable consideration either in the committee or by this House. When I first offered the bill, by request, I did not realize its import. I, like most of you, wanted some relief from bureaucratic abuses. But I discovered that the bill gave a cure worse than the disease. I dropped it like a hot potato.

Now, with reference to the report of the Brookings Institution, the statement has been made that this is not the report of the Brookings Institution but the report of a man named Blachly. I took the trouble yesterday to find out from an official of the Brookings Institution whether this was or was not the report of the Brookings Institution. It has been published under the name and under the aegis of the Brookings Institution, and I was told in no uncertain language that every bit of this book is the pronouncement of the Brookings Institution; and, frequently, we have heard on this floor men quote the Brookings Institution for this or that proposition. I am willing usually to abide by the decision of the Brookings Institution, one of the finest organizations of its kind in the world. Nonpartisan, unbiased, and thoroughly enlightened are its publications, and I am pleased that the Brookings Institution has taken a position consistent with my own position, and that is against this bill.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. BARNES. Does not the book show the need of some appellate procedure, though?

Mr. CELLER. Certainly, there is need of appellate procedure, and the book rightfully says there should be such; but it says you cannot apply the same procedure to all these departments and bureaus, and every one should be considered separately.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary after having been studied by the Committee on the Judiciary while I was in the hospital last year. I am not as familiar with the details of the bill as I would like to be and therefore speak with hesitancy with regard to its provisions, but may I observe, referring to the statement the gentleman from New York just made, that while it is true the Supreme Court has been granted authority to promulgate rules, those rules do not become effective until the agency of the Government, which is the people in Congress assembled, shall have an opportunity to examine those rules and an opportunity to object to those rules, as my distinguished friend here will agree; in other words, those rules are only tentative rules. They are submitted to the Houses of Congress, and if disapproved by the Houses of Congress, the rules do not become effective. I feel this statement ought to be made to clarify the situation insofar as that is concerned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If I remember my elementary law correctly, it distinguishes clearly between what they term "adjective law" and "substantive law" and the rules of procedure in the United States Supreme Court are known as adjective laws and have to do solely with the machinery by which the rights and prerogatives of litigants are reviewed, but the review, as provided in this bill, goes, perhaps, into the very merits of the dispute itself and not the machinery.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; but may I say to my friend I did not want to go into that distinction. Congress has not turned over to the members of the Supreme Court the power to make rules in the first instance—binding rules upon the people of this country. Congress simply asks the Supreme Court, with authority, to do its best to get together the proper rules to govern procedure in the Federal courts and to submit those rules to the Congress. The Congress has the right to disapprove, and if it disapprove them, they do not become effective.

I now want to say this much with regard to the Brookings Institution, and I do this not in criticism of the fine work done by the Brookings Institution, but I regret to have my distinguished friend from New York make the statement that he is willing to be guided by the Brookings Institution in the discharge of his legislative responsibilities. I feel we should get assistance from every outside agency, including this agency, but not direction. We have had entirely too much back-seat driving in America. [Applause.] Legislating is a responsibility that rests upon the Congress, and we must meet it. I feel pretty sure that is what my distinguished friend really would have said if he had had more than 5 minutes to speak. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, under the New Deal the Federal Government has become a complicated network of boards, agencies, administrations, bureaus, and commissions. They have spread doubt and confusion; they have stifled business enterprise; they have kept the unemployed men and women of America out of jobs.

It is bad enough for the country to suffer the handicaps of this mad onrush of bureaucracy, but even worse than their increased numbers is their increased powers by which they invariably assume the role of prosecutor, judge, and jury in their dealings.

The Walter-Logan bill, which we are considering today, is designed to regulate the regulators.

Under the New Deal there are 182 Federal departments, not to speak of numerous bureaus into which the departments are divided. Most of these agencies have become what might be termed "kangaroo courts," and the number of their binding decisions and of their current rules each month has been estimated to be five times as great as the decisions rendered by the courts of law.

Their innumerable rules are subject to constant change and additions. One set of rules may apply today and another set tomorrow. Is it any wonder that the American people who have to transact business with these agencies are unable to tell what to figure on from one day to the next? Many concerns find it necessary to maintain representatives in Washington for the sole purpose of trying to keep posted regarding new bureaucratic prescriptions—decisions which carry the force of law, yet frequently without the permanency of law or the right of review and appeal through the courts, which simple justice requires.

Before his election the President was greatly concerned over the comparatively small number of regulatory executive agencies. Since then he has vastly increased them and has invested them with unprecedented authority, and yet his concern has changed to complacency.

No compilation of the mass of rules exists. The Government is now publishing the regulations in a codified form. They will fill 23 volumes of approximately 1,200 pages each. The first daily duty of every businessman is to try to learn what new rules Washington has given out overnight.

The Walter-Logan bill proposes to regulate these regulations and provide a fair code of procedure for securing court review. The bill provides for a hearing upon petition by an individual or concern with respect to any rule and for court review to determine whether the rule complied with the Constitution and statutes under which it was issued. It further protects the individual or concern as to any action taken in good faith under any rule for a period of 30 days after notice in case the rule is rescinded or held invalid.

The bill is sponsored by the American Bar Association and is so plainly a necessary measure that it was passed favorably by the Judiciary Committees of both the Senate and House of Representatives. It is this bill that is to be brought to a vote in the House today.

We have learned in recent years that there is decided danger to our American form of government from a President and his bureaucratic autocrats who would centralize power in the Executive and regiment the Nation in planned economy. In his annual message to Congress in January 1936, Mr. Roosevelt said that in 34 months we have built up new instruments of public power which, in the hands of wrong people, would provide shackles for the liberties of the people.

There is a growing number of us who do feel it is not safe to leave such power in the hands of Mr. Roosevelt. His greed for power never ceases. He understands the power of billions at his disposal. Of all the emergency powers granted as long as 7 years ago not one has ever been surrendered by him. With this in view the passage of the Walter-Logan bill seems vitally important.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] that there is altogether too much back-seat driving, especially as to this bill. Everybody concedes that this is a bill drafted and advocated by the American Bar Association, and those representing the United States Chamber of Commerce and similar organizations, who are endeavoring to nullify all the laws that we have passed in the interest of labor.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Not now. I feel that any Member of the House who votes for this bill is voting to nullify the acts for which he has voted that are in the interest of labor in America. The other body was imposed upon, and they have rescinded their action in reporting the bill, and I hope that the House will not be imposed upon in voting for this legislation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] is fearful that we will establish additional courts in the District, but the bill provides for additional circuit courts in all the circuits in the United States.

This bill will cost the Government millions of dollars, because it will require from two to three hundred lawyers in addition to these additional courts. Why? Merely for the purpose of giving some gentlemen, who could not control some of the bureaus, the opportunity to go to their friends, the courts. I concede that we have wonderful, splendid honest judges in the United States, but we also have judges who are not so fair-minded when it comes to passing on legislation in which labor is interested.

The corporation lawyers who drafted this bill are closer to and they know the judges better than they know some of these gentlemen who have charge of the various bureaus or departments, and that is the reason they want to get the thing into the hands of the judges, to whom they can more easily appeal, and with whom they associate, and in whom they have great confidence that they will protect the rights of property in the United States. I think this is a most dangerous piece of legislation, and please do not be mistaken about it.

Mr. Chairman, the title of the bill states it provides for the more expeditious settlement of disputes. Anyone reading and understanding this bill must concede that it will definitely tend to delay and prolong settlements because it provides for the consideration and appeal of all kinds of violations. It gives not only the party in interest the right to appeal, but anyone who may be in any way interested. Section 5 (a) (2) provides that an appeal can be taken in the jurisdiction of such aggrieved party or where he maintains his principal place of business or in which the controversy arose. Under this provision any shareholder or bondholder in any part of the country would have the right to appeal.

Taking advantage of this provision the corporations would find stockholders in such sections of the country where the courts might be easier misled or influenced than in the jurisdiction where the principal place of business is situated. In fact, every provision in this bill tends to delay, prolong, and increase litigations so that willful violators and evaders of the law could indefinitely continue their operations.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], who advocates this legislation, appears to me to have failed to recognize the fact that we have three distinct branches of government—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. He fails to realize that this bill, if enacted, not only encroaches upon the legislative branch but also upon the executive branch.

This because it gives the existing circuit courts and those which can be created by the circuit courts themselves the right to nullify the acts of Congress and the rules and regulations promulgated by departments and agencies which are familiar with the needs and requirements of the enforcement of given laws.

Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that the aim of the proponents of this bill is to give the judicial branch of our Government powers never contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. For the reasons given I cannot and shall not vote for the bill. It deserves to be defeated, and those voting for it will not be able in the near future to say that they are the friends of labor or of the administration.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDICIAL REVIEW OF DECISIONS OR ORDERS OF ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES

SEC. 5. (a) Any party to a proceeding before any agency or independent agency as provided in section 4 of this act who may be aggrieved by the final decision or order of any agency, or independent agency, as the case may be, within 30 days after the date of receipt of a copy thereof, may at his election file a written petition (1) with the clerk of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; or (2) with the clerk of the circuit court of appeals within whose jurisdiction such aggrieved party resides or maintains his principal place of business or in which the controversy arose, for review of the decision. Before filing a petition such party may within 10 days make a motion to the agency or independent agency concerned for a rehearing, tendering a statement of any further showing to be made thereon which shall constitute a part of the record, and the time for appeal shall run from the order on such motion if denied or the order made on such rehearing if a rehearing shall be had. The petition shall state the alleged errors in the decision of the agency or independent agency concerned. The Attorney General of the United States and the agency or independent agency shall each be served with a copy of the petition and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to cause appearance to be entered on behalf of the United States within 30 days after the date of receipt by him of a copy of the petition and it shall be the duty of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be, within 30 days or such longer time as the court may by order direct, after receipt of a copy of the petition to cause to be prepared and filed with the clerk of such court the original or a full and accurate transcript of the entire record in such proceeding before such agency or independent agency. The court may affirm or set aside the decision or may direct the agency or independent agency concerned to modify its decision. Any case may be remanded for such further evidence as in the discretion of the court may be required but no objection not urged before the agency or independent agency, as the case may be, shall be considered by the court unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused by the court for good cause shown. To facilitate the hearing of such appeals and avoid delay in the hearing of other matters before the court, such court may constitute special sessions thereof to consist of any three judges competent in law to sit as judges of a circuit court of appeals, which special sessions may be held concurrently with the regular sessions of said court. Any decision of any agency or independent agency shall be set aside if it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court (1) that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous; or (2) that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence; or (3) that the decision is not supported by the findings of fact; or (4) that the decision was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded the aggrieved party for a full and fair hearing; or (5) that the decision is beyond the jurisdiction of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be; or (6) that the decision infringes the Constitution or statutes of the United States; or (7) that the decision is otherwise contrary to law.

(b) The judgments of the circuit courts of appeals shall be final, except that they shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

(c) Where the cause of action is otherwise within the jurisdiction of the United States Court of Claims as provided in sections 136 to 187, inclusive, of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 241 to 293, inclusive), the petition provided in this section may be to the said Court of Claims at the election of the aggrieved party.

(d) Where a circuit court of appeals or the Court of Claims finds itself in disagreement with a previously rendered decision of another court having jurisdiction under this section, it shall certify to the Supreme Court of the United States a distinct and definite statement of the question or proposition of law upon which such disagreement rests, with a statement of the nature of the cause and of the facts on which such question or proposition of law arises, together with a statement of the reasons in support of such disagreement. Such further proceedings shall be as provided in section 239 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 346).

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: Page 13, lines 3 and 4, strike out the word "substantial" and insert in lieu thereof "the preponderance of the."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just read would simply substitute for the word "substantial" the word "preponderance."

Substantial evidence is evidence which, if true, has probative force on the issues (Shaw v. Brinkhoff, Missouri Appeals, 119 Southwestern, 2d, 444–446).

More than a scintilla. It means such relevant evidence as a reasonable man might accept as adequate to support the conclusion (Consolidated Edison Co. of New York v. National Labor Relations Board, United States, New York, 59 Supreme Court, 206–216, 217).

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly, I should be happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi at any time.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman think this more important. Take line 2, providing that a court may set aside a ruling of one of these boards or bureaus if it finds or if it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous? Does not the gentleman think that it goes a great deal further than the provisions providing for substantial evidence in the next subdivision?

Mr. HOBBS. Of course I do, but these provisions are in the disjunctive; not in the conjunctive. Each of the grounds under consideration is separated from the next by the word "or."

So that for any of these reasons the court may set aside the decision of the board.

Now, I want to read definitions from the Supreme Court of "preponderance":

Preponderance of the evidence is such proof as satisfies the conscience and carries conviction to an intelligent mind (Cole v. Town of Miami, Ariz., 83 Pac. (2d) 997, 1001).

Preponderance means "greater weight" (Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Custin, Indiana, 13 N. E. (2d) 542, 545).

Greater weight of evidence and preponderance of evidence are synonymous (Cincinnati Butchers' Supply Co. v. Conoly 169 S. E. 415, 416).

The terms "preponderance of evidence" and "greater weight of evidence" do not mean the greater number of witnesses, but evidence entitled to greater weight in respect to credibility (Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. v. Hancock, 113 S. W. (2d) 489, 493).

I have given you these decisions of the Supreme Court with respect to the meaning of these two terms. When you say "substantial evidence," just as the Supreme Court said on the 9th day of this month in the Morgan case, you mean any evidence which is more than a scintilla, from which a reasonable mind might deduce a conclusion. That will not do. That is not the proper criterion. What we want is justice, what is right; not what a reasonable mind might decide but what a reasonable mind, weighing all the evidence, considering it all, would be driven to conclude. Justice demands adjudications based upon nothing less than the preponderance of the credible evidence.

Therefore, I beg you not to regard this amendment as trivial, because it would change only one word. This is right. We ought to require nothing less than that the decrees, decisions, and orders of any inferior body, whether board or court, should be supported by a preponderance of the evidence before a dollar should be taken out of the pocket of an American citizen or his right to liberty be taken. Ladies and gentlemen, as you love justice, I beg you to support this amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] would accomplish his purpose by changing the word from "substantial" to "preponderance." As I understand this bill, as it is written, if the court finds that an agency or an independent agency has based its conclusions upon any substantial evidence, they cannot disturb it. Now, is that not what you want? Is that not what the gentleman wants? He does not want to disturb these rulings of an agency or an independent agency. They would not be disturbed and could not be disturbed by a court on review if there was any substantial evidence upon which the agency or the independent agency based its findings.

That is the rule which prevails universally in the courts of last resort in appeals. If the supreme court of a State or the circuit courts of appeal of the United States, or the Supreme Court of the United States finds that a lower court has come to a decision on the facts, that decision being based upon any substantial evidence, it will not disturb it. So in this case if the court finds that there is any substantial evidence upon which the agency or independent agency based its finding, it cannot disturb it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, if you require preponderance of the evidence to substantiate a decision of the Board, you put the Board on trial. You are trying the Board and not the rulings of the Board?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is largely true, but it would change the issue entirely. The court would have to hold, if the language of the proposed amendment is adopted, that a ruling of the Board was based upon a preponderance of the evidence. The court would have to hold that there was a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the ruling, which I think negatives the purpose of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], because as the bill is now written, if the court holds that there is any evidence of a substantial nature, it cannot disturb the ruling.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE. Would not this amendment completely change the purpose of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. The appellate court in this instance, and for the first time perhaps in the annals of American jurisprudence, would sit as a jury, a trier of the facts instead of the law. The situation is clearly protected in other limitations contained in sections 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Does not the gentleman think it well to explain it this way: There is a distinction between a court of original jurisdiction and a court of appeal. In a court of original jurisdiction it is always wise to demand a preponderance of the evidence in order to give the person on trial a proper chance; but when it comes to a court of appeal, the court of original jurisdiction may have had the evidence evenly divided, yet he may have looked at the witnesses; he may have seen, for instance, that he was hesitant; that he looked guilty; that perhaps he even had prison pallor. Those things would not show in a record. So that in a court of appeal one does not demand a preponderance of the evidence, but asks that there be a substantial showing that the record is correct?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the lady is correct.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I think that is the universal theory.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Although I am very much in favor of this bill, I am more concerned about the preservation of these simple rules which have been in existence from time immemorial. Even though it might help the bill from my point of view, I would not want to see any material change made in the procedure concerning the findings of fact by courts of appeal.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. HOBBS. I wonder if the gentleman from Michigan and the distinguished gentlewoman from Illinois are not reciting the law as it relates to trials by jury rather than trials by courts or boards without the intervention of a jury?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is the point, if I may say so to the gentleman from Alabama; we do not want to put these courts of review in the same position as a jury is put in weighing evidence. The jury must usually find a preponderance of evidence in favor of their verdict. In this case we are protecting the courts, protecting the boards, protecting these agencies, by saying that the courts cannot disturb a ruling if there is any substantial evidence upon which they base their decision.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: On page 13, line 2, strike out all of line 2.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this is the provision that would authorize the court to set aside a ruling of one of these boards if the court determined that the findings of fact were clearly erroneous. In other words, you transfer the physical operations of one of these boards to the courts. That is one step further in court government than I believe you want to go.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. The committee will agree to the amendment. As a matter of fact, I have prepared a similar amendment myself, to strike out line 2 on page 13. Was that the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a short question.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman seems to be right successful. Will he look at 6 and 7 and tell me what they mean?

Mr. RANKIN. Let us dispose of this one first.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. The committee has agreed to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 62, noes 63.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. RANKIN and Mr. GWYNNE.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 70, noes 106.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and do so simply to ask a question of those in charge of the bill.

The language appearing at the bottom of page 12 and on page 13 deals with the power of the court to set aside any decision of any agency or any independent agency upon certain enumerated grounds. Among the enumerated grounds are these:

(6) That the decision infringes the Constitution or statutes of the United States; or (7) that the decision is otherwise contrary to law.

I have no amendment to offer, but, frankly, to me this is amazing legislative terminology, and I do not understand why the committee put it in or what it means. I might say further, Mr. Chairman, that there are other paragraphs and subparagraphs in this bill about which, had I the desire to take the time of the Committee, I could have asked similar questions. Will not the gentleman in charge of the bill explain the effect of these subparagraphs and what they mean? I am asking these questions not in a critical sense but in the interest of legislative integrity.

Mr. WALTER. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that the language appears to me and to all the members of the committee to be very plain. It merely provides that the Supreme Court of the United States as well as the circuit court of appeals can set aside the decision of an agency where the decision makes the statute unconstitutional. It is a well-known principle of interpretation, of course, that where a statute is capable of two interpretations, one making it constitutional and the other unconstitutional, that interpretation must be given it that will uphold its constitutionality. But the court in these cases may pass on the question of whether or not the interpretation placed upon the statute renders the statute unconstitutional and in this way it is entirely possible that a different interpretation could be given statutes so as to preserve the constitutionality of our actions.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE. Under subparagraph (6) a decision might be reversed if it infringes the Constitution or a statute of the United States, and under subparagraph (7) a decision may be set aside where the decision is otherwise contrary to law.

A decision might be contrary to law under some general principles of common law not embodied in the Constitution and not embodied in a statute.

Mr. RAYBURN. I feel, however, that the gentleman will search the statutes in vain to find language just exactly like that.

Mr. GWYNNE. Oh, no. On the contrary, this is taken from many statutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I thought all the lawyers of the House knew it was against the law for an agency of the Government to infringe the Constitution or violate the law. I am surprised the Committee on the Judiciary put that language in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

JURISDICTION OF COURTS TO IMPOSE DAMAGES WHERE APPEAL WAS FOR DELAY AND FOR COSTS

SEC. 6. The courts shall have jurisdiction and power to impose damages in any case where the decision of the agency or independent agency is affirmed and the court finds that there was no substantial basis for the petition for review. In all cases the costs on review shall be allowed the prevailing party after final judgment, to be collected according to law.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to comment on the so-called Jones case (Jones v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 298 U. S. 1).

Frequent reference has been made to the language of Mr. Justice Sutherland in the case of Jones against the Securities and Exchange Commission, accusing the Commission of "unreasonable and arbitrary" action.

A clear understanding of the narrow issue in the case is essential. Jones had filed with the Commission a registration statement covering securities which he proposed to offer to the public. The Commission instituted a proceeding to determine whether his registration statement was false or misleading. At the Commission's hearing Jones appeared by his counsel and tried to avoid the proceeding by withdrawing his registration statement. A rule of the Commission, with which Jones and his counsel were familiar, permitted withdrawal of registration statements only upon consent of the Commission, such consent to be given "with due regard to the public interest and the protection of investors." The Commission denied the consent required by its rule, and issued a subpena to Jones to give evidence in the proceeding. Jones refused to comply with the subpena, and, since the Commission's subpenas could be enforced only by the courts, the Commission applied to a Federal court for an order to compel Jones to comply with the subpena. This application presented for judicial consideration the question whether the Commission's rule prohibiting withdrawal of a registration statement was a valid rule, consistent with the statute and with the Constitution.

The Commission's rule, on judicial consideration, was held valid by Judge Patterson (now of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit). On appeal to the circuit court of appeals, the decision of Judge Patterson, and the action of the Commission, were upheld by a unanimous court.

The decision of the courts below was reversed by the Supreme Court in a 6-to-3 decision rendered by Mr. Justice Sutherland. The language quoted from Mr. Justice Sutherland's opinion, however, referred only to the Commission's action in asking the courts to enforce its subpena—that is, in seeking judicial approval of its interpretation of the law. Twisting the opinion of the Supreme Court into a criticism of the Commission's administrative procedure involves a plain distortion of the facts before the Supreme Court.

Mr. Justice Sutherland's opinion has been referred to as a unanimous decision of the Court. This statement is incorrect. A dissenting opinion from Justices Cardozo, Brandeis, and Stone upheld and praised the action of the Commission. More, this dissenting opinion represents as vigorous and devastating a criticism of the conservative majority of the Court as can be found in legal literature. If we are to hear the critical language of Mr. Justice Sutherland, we should also listen to the language of Mr. Justice Cardozo, talking in the same case of the Securities and Exchange Commission:

A commission which is without coercive powers, which cannot arrest or amerce or imprison though a crime has been uncovered, or even punish for contempt, but can only inquire and report, the propriety of every question in the course of its inquiry being subject to the supervision of the ordinary courts of justice, is likened with denunciatory fervor to the star chamber of the Stuarts. Historians may find hyperbole in the sanguinary simile.

The rule now assailed was wisely conceived and lawfully adopted to foil the plans of knaves intent upon obscuring or suppressing the knowledge of their knavery.

So, against the widely quoted language of Mr. Justice Sutherland, we have to set the fact that the Commission's action which Mr. Justice Sutherland criticized was no more than the action of asking judicial determination of the validity of its rule. That action, upheld and praised by Justices Cardozo, Brandeis, and Stone, had also been sustained by Judge Patterson of the southern district of New York, and by unanimous decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. And in a recent case involving the same rule the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, in a unanimous opinion, stated that if the question were before it as a matter of first instance it would find no difficulty in reaching a decision opposite to that of Mr. Justice Sutherland.

In its 6 years of existence the Commission has achieved a record of approval by the appellate courts which cannot be matched by any other agency of the Government. Decision has been given against the contentions of the Commission in the appellate courts only four times in those 6 years, and no quasi-judicial order of the Commission has even been upset on its merits by any court. [Applause.]

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, a few years ago a very brilliant and distinguished Member of this body, who will be remembered by many on this floor; a man who rose to the top in his profession; a man who became Solicitor General of the United States, wrote a book. The title of that book is "Our Wonderland of Bureaucracy." He might have entitled that book "Our Growing Bureaucracy."

The very thing that distinguished gentleman inveighed against in his book is the very thing that this bill aims to correct. He was the Honorable James M. Beck, of Pennsylvania.

The myriad rules, regulations, and orders promulgated by the various boards, bureaus, agencies, and commissions set up by Congress never see the inside of Congress. They become in effect and have the effect of law. Nobody knows what they are until they are in force. This bill at least requires notice to be given and publication thereof before they become valid and effective.

Mr. Chairman, the question that confronts us in reference to this bill is whether or not we have more confidence in the bureaus and commissions in the administration of the law entrusted to them than we have in the courts established under the judicial system of this Government.

This bill puts a bridle on the many agencies set up under acts of Congress. In too many cases boards, bureaus, and commissions have assumed more powers in the administration of the laws than the Congress has conferred upon them. There is no authority for any agency of the Government to arrogate to itself powers which Congress never conferred upon them. Too many of our citizens have found themselves in the toils of despotic rules never intended by the legislative department of the Government and from which they had no appeal.

This bill opens the doors of the courts of the land, which have heretofore been closed to them, in their effort to secure justice from the imposition of regulations issued by various agencies of the Government. Bureaucracy under our system of government has increased out of all proportion. It is becoming greater as a lawmaking institution than the Congress of the United States itself. This process, if continued, will have a tendency to undermine the fundamental principles of this Nation and destroy the confidence of the people in the three departments of our Government as provided in the Constitution of the United States.

This bill does not bestow any new rights on the people, but restores old rights which have been taken away, namely, the right of their day in court.

I have not lost faith or confidence in the judicial system of the United States. I am going to support the pending bill and hope it will pass the House. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in considering the bill now before the House, from my experience in dealing with the Government departments in the interests of the people whom I have the honor to represent and the irresponsible attitudes that exist in many of these departments where the interests of the common people are concerned, I most certainly welcome the opportunity to support practical legislation to curb the bureaucratic control of many of these governmental agencies and make them more responsible to the needs of the people and the public welfare.

But in studying the provisions of this bill, I am thoroughly convinced that its enactment would increase the difficulties of our Government in carrying out many of its undertakings in constructive programs for the advancement of our people. In the light of recent experience it is easily to be seen that the enactment of this bill will provide a means of obstructing and delaying the Federal Government in carrying out many of its constructive projects.

For this reason, I am unable to support this measure and shall vote against it. I might add that in my opinion it is only a question of time until some means will have to be devised by the Congress to enlarge its control over the policies of the Federal agencies and make them more responsive to the needs of the people they are created to serve. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. That is the duty of Congress.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the gentleman think the Congress is overlooking its duty in letting these governmental departments dictate most of the laws that we pass here? Most of them are drafted down in some Government department.

Mr. RANKIN. What the Congress is doing is "passing the buck" and transferring the government of our country over to the courts.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was drafted to meet a real need, and I believe the bill was brought in here to meet a real need, which is a uniform method of review so that we may be able to know what our rights are under the many statutes that have been passed and under the administrative agencies which have been set up. I wish I could support the bill in its present form, but when the committee voted down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, which, by the way, was agreed to by the chairman of the subcommittee, the author of the bill, which would have stricken from the bill line 2, page 13, it seems to me that we have completely changed the meaning of the bill from what most of us who want to support it desire to have in this legislation. When we left that language in the bill, we have made the courts the tryers of the facts. We eliminated some other wording with the purpose of making it plain that the courts were not to be the tryers of the facts but were to try the law on appeal. When we left in that language which is in line 2, "If it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous," it seems to me that we leave to the courts the question of trying the facts which, of course, we intended should be tried by the administrative agencies. If they have any function at all, they should try the facts, and unless they have violated the law or have acted without any support or substantial evidence, the facts should remain as found by the administrative agency.

We now have in the bill a provision which passes on to our appellate courts the trial of questions of fact along with the trial of questions of law, and I do not think most of us intended that. It should not be in the bill, and I believe it has changed the entire foundation of the legislation from what we started out with. For this reason, with that language in the bill I cannot support it.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot refrain from speaking a word in answer to the statement made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH]. It seems to me that any lawyer who sits in this House, whether he be a member of the American Bar Association or the Lawyers' Guild, must know it to be a fact that in the trial of cases before a court or before an administrative tribunal charged with the responsibility of ascertaining the facts, there are frequently tenders and offers of testimony that under the law the tryer of the fact, whether it be a court or an administrative tribunal, is precluded from receiving in evidence. I have in mind situations that have arisen whereby evidence that has been obtained illegally, in violation of the law, in violation of the law prohibiting wiretapping, and in violation of the Constitution, which prohibits unlawful searches and seizures, has been permitted to be introduced by administrative tribunals and courts, in violation of the Constitution and the law. Such testimony if received, over objection, would constitute substantial evidence. I have known cases that have been determined on evidence which was obtained in an illegal manner, but upon appeal the court has uniformly held in such cases that findings of fact based on that type of testimony would be clearly erroneous, even though if the testimony were received properly it would constitute substantial evidence.

Therefore, I feel that paragraph (1) should very definitely be in this bill as a protection to all parties, whether they be labor or capital or what not, so that they may be guarded against an erroneous finding of fact based on testimony that has been received erroneously.

I believe the second paragraph, which would give the court the right to challenge findings of fact not supported by substantial evidence, is not sufficient to protect us properly in the situation I have described. Testimony may be introduced in court that would fall in the description of substantial evidence, but every bit of the evidence may have been received by the tryer of the fact in violation of established rules of law or in violation of constitutional prohibitions.

I am unable to ascertain or understand how the gentleman from Connecticut can base his opposition to this bill on that mere statement of fact.

I also wish to call attention, while I have the floor, to the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, who based his contention in opposition to this bill on the fact, as he alleged, that we would have to create a lot of new courts. The gentleman referred to section 12 as a justification and authority for that statement. There is not a person in this House who can read the language on page 12 of this bill—

> To facilitate the hearing of such appeals and avoid delay in the hearing of other matters before the court, such court may constitute special sessions thereof to consist of any three judges competent in law to sit as judges of a circuit court of appeals.

And not realize that it does not mean the creation of new courts at all. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY].

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, I was quite interested in the statement of the gentleman from Connecticut and the answer thereto of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The gentleman from Wisconsin certainly got a different idea of what the gentleman from Connecticut said than did I or any of the Members who were sitting around me, when he enunciated from the floor what I believe every lawyer will agree is Hornbook law. If the trier of fact or the administrative agency admits testimony which is not competent as evidence, that certainly would be considered a question of law, and, on review, any court would take cognizance of it and reverse the decision on that ground. That is exactly what I understood the gentleman from Connecticut to say, and I wish to ask the gentleman from Connecticut now if I understood him correctly. The gentleman from Wisconsin, I believe, missed the point entirely.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The gentleman is correct. I believe we had no intention of setting up the appellate court as a trier of fact in this case. Of course, if any decision on rulings on evidence is contrary to law, it is covered in other sections besides the section to which I took exception, and, of course, there would be a ruling on law, and the appellate court would have the power to make the rulings on law.

Mr. McGRANERY. That was my understanding.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, in these days we are either liberals or conservatives, radicals or reactionaries. I like to think that I am a liberal. I believe the majority of the Democratic Party in this House prides itself on its liberalism. I am glad to see that this bill has come from the Democratic side of the House, as I should like to believe that the Democratic Party is the liberal party it claims to be. In that respect I can go along with it. However, I do not want a misunderstanding of my stand in respect to this bill.

No one who is a liberal can vote against this bill. Why? Because a liberal is one who favors greater freedom in political matters as distinguished from one who favors a monarchical or an aristocratic form of government, so a liberal form of government is one which protects the right of the people to rule themselves, as distinguished from a form of government which concentrates the power and the control over the people into the hands of a bureaucracy or a single individual.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I cannot yield at the present moment; I am sorry.

I am a liberal in that I would provide the machinery for the review of bureaucratic regulations. If you are liberal and want to return to the people of the United States the right to judicial review which is given them as an inherent right under the Constitution, you have to vote for this bill, because you cannot be a liberal and at the same time be an aristocrat. An aristocrat, you know, is one who is of the best, or thinks so, who sets himself apart from all the rest and considers himself ever so much better qualified to rule the people than the people themselves. I am not an aristocrat. I am a liberal, in that I believe the people should have the right to be heard in their courts.

Now, no one in the United States, no citizen, can get into the courts of the United States to test the constitutionality or the legality of an assumed or delegated power of the administrative branch of the Government unless he has an exclusive franchise to a particular activity in a particular community. This is in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court in one of the T. V. A. cases. Therefore, unless this bill is passed, the only institutions or persons who can get into the Federal courts to test the constitutionality of competitive enterprises set up by the administrative branch of the Government are those big utilities which are given exclusive franchises under the constitutions of States which authorize the giving of exclusive franchises; and you and I and 99.44 percent of the constituents whom you represent are denied by that decision from contesting the constitutionality or legality of acts setting up such competitive enterprises.

In other words, if a decision or a regulation in one of the departments sets up a furniture factory to compete with a furniture concern in Grand Rapids, Mich., that furniture concern in Grand Rapids cannot test the constitutionality of that regulation. Why? Because, they have not an exclusive franchise to that particular activity, the furniture business not being one of the classes of businesses in which a State can give an exclusive franchise. However, if you are a great big utility controlling power, controlling electric power [laughter], you can get into the Federal courts and we, as consumers of that power or as manufacturers of furniture or as manufacturers of anything else, cannot contest the constitutionality or legality of the administrative order or regulation by which the Government controlled and managed enterprise was set up.

Now, I want to vote for any bill which is going to remove this discrimination against our citizens which now favors the big utilities.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman understands, of course, that the Government's own utility, known as the T. V. A., has been exempted by both the States in which it operates from regulation by the State institutions and therefore it is not subject to State or Federal regulation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am pleased to have the gentleman make that contribution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXCEPTIONS AND RESERVATIONS

SEC. 7. Nothing contained in this act shall operate to modify or repeal any rights or procedure as now provided by law for any person to have his controversy with the United States heard and determined in any district court or circuit court of appeals of the United States.

(b) Nothing contained in this act shall apply to or affect any matter concerning or relating to the conduct of military or naval operations; the trial by courts martial of persons otherwise within the jurisdiction of such courts martial; the conduct of the Federal Reserve Board, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Interstate Commerce Commission; the conduct of the Department of State; the conduct of the Department of Justice and the offices of the United States attorneys, except as otherwise herein specifically provided; or any matter concerning or relating to the internal revenue, customs, patent, trade-mark, copyright, or longshoremen, and harbor workers' laws; or any case where the aggrieved party was denied a loan, or may be dissatisfied with a grading service in connection with the purchase or sale of agricultural products, or has failed to receive appointment or employment by any agency or independent agency. Sections 2 and 3 of this act shall not apply to the General Accounting Office.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 15, after line 9, insert "all Federal lending agencies, the Federal Trade Commission."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALTER to the committee amendment: On page 15, in line 10, strike out "all Federal lending agencies" and insert "the Federal Loan Agency and all agencies and independent agencies grouped thereunder, the National Mediation Board."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. What becomes of the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. COCHRAN. The Federal Trade Commission remains in, does it not?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the members of the committee are first of all entitled to a little explanation of this amendment, because as I conceive of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which is a lending agency doing business with 857,000 mortgagees in the country, I would like to know just what the import of this amendment will be so far as the rights of the mortgagees are concerned, and any orders relating thereto.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, it was the judgment of the committee that the courts ought not to pass on the refusal——

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, without having it taken out of the gentleman's time, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] may be again reported.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the Walter amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield? What is the Federal Loan Agency referred to?

Mr. WALTER. The Federal Loan Agency includes all the lending agencies grouped in the President's reorganization plan. It includes the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Home Loan Bank Board, the R. F. C., and all the agencies under the R. F. C.

Mr. MAY. And it does not go beyond the group that was placed there by the Executive order?

Mr. WALTER. That is right, and the reason this language was changed was because the reorganization order was issued after the bill was reported in its present form.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would it apply to the Farm Credit Administration?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; it would apply.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The Farm Credit Administration is not in a separate lending agency now, but is under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WALTER. I have a list of the agencies here.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think it would be included in the original committee amendment, but I do not think it would be comprehended in the terms of the gentleman's substitute amendment.

Mr. WALTER. It was intended to come within this amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Of course I just heard the amendment read from the desk.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. One of the purposes is, is it not, to make it impossible for one who makes application for the loan and is denied, to carry that matter to the courts?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; precisely.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am inclined to think that the term he has used would not include the land-bank system, the Production Credit Corporation, the cooperative banks, or any other lending agencies that have been transferred to one of the departments.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. WALTER. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this bill gives the individual the right to litigate with one of the lending agencies over the question of granting him a loan?

Mr. WALTER. Oh, no.

Mr. COX. If it is, then the bill is entirely too broad.

Mr. WALTER. Oh, no; the amendment is to correct that situation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Under the terms of the gentleman's amendment it would do just that.

Mr. WALTER. Oh, no.

It is the intention of the committee to exclude all Federal lending agencies.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman is striking out that provision. The whole Farm Credit Corporation has been transferred to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I want to know if it would be in order to move that the Committee rise in order that the Committee on the Judiciary may have time to study the bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise to submit a unanimous-consent request, and that is that in view of the serious questions which have very naturally arisen in the minds of gentlemen here—and we want to do the best we can about the bill with these amendments—that this particular amendment go over until the morning or to the heel of the bill. That is the thing that anybody with common sense would do in a situation such as we are in at the present time.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman not think it would be better to strike out the enacting clause?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Oh, no; we are really trying to perfect this bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I want to make a suggestion. Here it is now 5 o'clock. I have no desire to delay a vote upon this bill. A great many of us have said nothing about the bill at all up to now, but certainly will have something to say about section 7. The committee has several amendments of its own that must be discussed for some length, as we have found out from the questions of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the questions raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], and by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], and many others. If it is the intention to stay here and complete the bill today, then we will do so; but we will be here quite some time, because in all probability there will be two roll calls. I shall do what the Committee desires. If the Committee desires to stay here, it is all right with me; but I think it would be inconvenient for a great many Members of the House to stay here and try to complete the bill tonight. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], in charge of the bill, desires to move to rise, I will be glad to vote for such a motion.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. KERR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6324, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HON. HYDE SWEET, A MEMBER-ELECT

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

APRIL 17, 1940.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The certificate of election, in due form of law, of Hon. HYDE SWEET as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-sixth Congress from the First Congressional District of Nebraska, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. GEORGE H. HEINKE, is on file in this office.

Very truly yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives,
By H. NEWLIN MEGILL.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Hon. HYDE SWEET appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

COMMEMORATION OF AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. HOBBS, and Mr. GUYER of Kansas.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks made in Committee of the Whole today and include therein certain quotations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including an article by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson appearing in the Washington Daily News of April 12.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, after the regular business of the day has been disposed of on Tuesday next, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a radio speech by Colonel Knox.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to yield back the time granted to me this afternoon, and that I may have the same time on Friday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BURGIN (at the request of Mr. BULWINKLE), for 15 legislative days, on account of illness.

To Mr. FADDIS, for 1 week, on account of important business.

To Mr. DEMPSEY, for 3 days, on account of illness.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, there is lying on the desk of the Speaker at the present time discharge petition No. 29, filed a few days ago by the Honorable JOHN RANKIN, of Mississippi, chairman of the House Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

This discharge petition was filed for the purpose of discharging the House Committee on Rules as to House Resolution No. 444, to provide for immediate consideration of H. R.

9000, a bill to provide pensions to dependent widows and orphans and parents of certain World War veterans.

H. R. 9000 compels the Federal Government to assume the sole responsibility—where it properly belongs—of providing pensions for the dependent widows and orphans and parents of certain deceased World War veterans. It would transfer the tax burden of caring for them from the property-tax payers of your State to the income-tax payers of the Federal Government. The shifting of this burden from local communities and States to the Federal Government would enable each State to provide more adequately for its other needy aged, handicapped, and dependent citizens—by more generous old-age assistance, aid to the blind, and aid to dependent children benefits—thus entitling your State to more matching money from the Federal Social Security Board and again increasing the social-security benefits to such other destitute citizens.

Every local community, every State, and millions of their destitute citizens, in addition to the dependent widows and orphans and parents of deceased World War veterans, would directly and indirectly benefit by this legislation, and thus enhance security for America.

Up until this minute 176 Members of this House have signed this petition. Two hundred and eighteen names are required, and it is the hope of the American Legion, Disabled American Veterans, and Veterans of Foreign Wars, whose combined membership represents more than a million and a half veterans of the World War, that the required number of names may be secured, permitting consideration of H. R. 9000.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to use the time that I asked for today. The hour is late, and I am afraid the Members of the House are hardly in a frame of mind at this time to listen to the speech which I proposed to deliver. I wanted to discuss a number of matters connected with the whole broad question of the defense of liberty, the investigation of un-American activities, the importance of basic rights of the people, and other things in that connection. I would prefer to wait, Mr. Speaker, until another time to deliver this speech when the occasion seems more propitious than it does now.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHANLEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2993. An act to authorize an exchange of lands between the city of San Diego, Calif., and the United States, and acceptance by gift of certain lands from the city of San Diego, Calif.;

S. 3067. An act authorizing appropriations to be made for the disposition of the remains of personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps and certain civilian employees of the Navy, and for other purposes; and

S. 3440. An act to amend the Locomotive Inspection Act of February 17, 1911, as amended, so as to change the title of the chief inspector and assistant chief inspectors of locomotive boilers.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous order, adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, April 18, 1940, at 11 o'clock a. m.
